Storekeeper Vigen, of Chester, was an eye-witness to the accident but being some distance away was unable to notify Homme in time to avert the accident, and he was dead before he reached his side.

Deceased is a young man of about 30 years of age and a resident near Oklee, a station on the new Soo Line, a few miles south east of Plummer.

He has a brother residing near Erie.

Decided In Favor of Plaintiff.

In a civil action, Oscar Swenson vs. S. B. Swenson, tried before Judge Bishop of the Municipal court last Friday, decision was granted in favor of the plaintiff. Defendant was given judgment of $10 and costs of the case.

Nuptial.

Last Saturday occured the marriage of Olga Skaal to Louis Olson, both young residents of this county. The marriage ceremony was performed by Judge Bishop in the Municipal court.

Editorial Assn. Meets at Park Rapids.

The Northern Minnesota Editorial Association will meet at Staples on Friday, Jan. 6th. This association was organized by a company of newspaper men at Park Rapids a year ago, last summer. An excellent program has been arranged for the Staples meeting and now officers will be elected. The selection will also be made of a place for a summer outing for the association next summer.

Receives Large Gift

Joe Holmes, of this city, who some time ago was seriously injured by falling of a railroad engine on which he was the fireman, was, with his wife, given a a purse of some $153 as a Christmas gift by their many friends among the railroad men and others in this city. Mr. Holmes is at present confined to the Swedish Hospital in Minneapolis and altho his injuries are very severe his absolute recovery is looked for, but it may take a long time before he is physically in shape to again resume his work.

NEW PARTY, MAYBE

Witty Correspondent Predicts Formation of "Strict Constructionists" Party If Treaty Is Enforced.

Might Maintain Lobby to Tell the Legislature of Eastern Interferers What They Need.

Brainerd, Minn., Dec. 27—There is a growing feeling apparent in Brainerd Walker and Bemidji that if the treaty of 1855 is to be enforced it is about time to start a political party known as the "Strict Constructionists".

If the government decides to further enforce this treaty and the courts hold the treaty legal then the "Strict Constructionists" will get busy and dig up and revive every dead and down, down and out, Rip Van Winkle law on federal and state statute books. Walker has set the ball rolling by putting the ban on slot machines, games of chance, duck and turkey raffles, etc. This may easily be extended to include church raffles, bridge parties, church card parties, Sunday funerals, Sunday mail service, Sunday theatres, etc.

There is such a thing as a statute of limitations in the state of Minnesota, but a federal treaty, like Tennyson's brook, appears to run on forever no matter how much it may be damned. The principle of laches, or neglect to enforce ones rights, applies to states and individuals, but does not seem to effect our federal government, which lets the Indian treaty of 1855 slumber peacefully for 55 years and then revives it, when the very Indians and whites it sought to protect are dead and gone.

In the old days the cry was "forty-four or fight." The "Strict Constructionist" cry is "Give us '55 and we fight," that is, enforce the treaty of 1855 and we shall get busy. All sumptuary and blue laws, especially Sunday laws, will be dug up. A vote of thanks is to be given the Philadelphia lawyer of Arkansas who resurrected a law of the vintage of 1845, which states that the government postal department may handle express business and by so doing can reduce the annual postal deficit. Senator-elect C. D Johnson, of Brainerd, is to be instructed to dig up every old law he can find and attempt to inject new life into it.

Committees are to be appointed to see what New Hampshire and Georgia may lack in the way of law enforcement and remedial legislation. It is said the child labor laws of Georgia are not enforced and the "Strict Constructionists" will send telegrams to the president notifying him that Georgia needs fixing. In New Hampshire there are certainly things to be adjusted and in retaliation for the kind interest which New Hampshire people have taken in the 1855 Indian treaty territory of Minnesota, the "Strict Constructionists" propose to have a lobby in New Hampshire telling their legislature what to do. The more the plan is studied the greater and more boundless appear the possibilities and results.

It is further alleged that the treaty Peter Stuyvesant made with the Indians several centuries ago, when he purchased the ground on which New Amsterdam and later New York City stood, is to be unearthed and declared illegal because the consideration for the transfer of this valuable property was two barrels of rum. Re-opening this celebrated case and the casks will draw New York City into the maelstrom of the dry territory. Another treaty to be shovelled from its grave is the one William Penn made with the Indians. It is alleged that William was a politician and that he got the best of the Indians. The bust of Quay stands on some of the ground involved and it may be necessary to move the late gentleman. The expression, "Madder Than a Wet Indian," has been declared obsolete and should now read, "Madder Than a Dry White."

If the federal court at St. Paul decides on January 9th that the Indian treaty of 1855 is legal, then the "Strict Constructionists" party will issue its declaration of Independence and start such a cry of reform and strict observance of law, federal and state, ever issued now, before and hereafter as will attract the attention of every state in the union and every country in the world. Every editor in the dry strip will be enlisted in the cause. Al possible means will be used to make this dry strip so law-abiding, and the whole United States, too, for that matter, that it will be a question of positively painful surprise, constant irritation and deep disgust to all concerned.

Students of political matters assert that this "dry order" is aimed at the socialist party, which is growing rapidly and gaining strenuously in Brainerd and Bemidji. Bemidji furnished the socialist candidate for governor—of Minnesota, while Brainerd elected a socialist mayor and two aldermen. It is believed that this treaty may have been enforced to assist the prohibition party and thus furnish a new party to oppose the socialists. As it has been rumored that the treaty of 1861 may also be enforced, it follows, logically, that this may be done to take a slap at Minneapolis, which very nearly elected VanLear, socialist candidate for mayor

SUMMONED BY DEATH

Miss Mabel Jennetta Resan Succumbs to Typhoid Fever.

Mrs. Edward H. Patterson A Victim of Consumption.

Miss Mable Jennetta Resan died last Monday morning at the local hospital after a siege of typhoid fever.

Miss Reisan was up to the time of her illness employed at the hotel Evelyn and has many warm friends, who will be grieved to learn of her sudden and untimely demise.

Deceased was 20 years of age, and has a brother, Oliver Resan, residing in the western part of the city.

The funeral services will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Synod church and the remains laid to rest in Greenwood Cemetery.

Consumption Claims Another Victim.

At her home at 301 Markley Ave. S. occurred the death of Mrs. Edward H. Patterson last Saturday from tuberculosis.

Deceased was 24 years of age and a daughter of Chas. Schwartz of Excel. Besides her husband she leaves a three-year-old daughter to mourn her untimely loss.

The funeral services were held last Saturday and the remains laid to rest in Greenwood Cemetery.

The News joins in with their host of friends in extending to the bereaved family its heartfelt sympathy.

A Communication.

Editor, Thief River Falls News:-I wish to let your readers know that I fully agree with "P. O." writing in last issue of the Press regarding the districting of Pennington county into Commissioners' Districts.

If more than two of the districts come within a couple of miles of city limits, the farmers may as well stay at home on election hereafter whenever there is an issue between the city and the county. Under "P. O's" plan the farmers will absolutely control a majority of the county board, and under any other radically different plan the city will control. Some of these shrewd politicians in town, with their talk of "giving the farmers four" need not think they fool the majority of the farmers, and I do not think they can fool the present board either, but at any rate they don't fool me. What the farmers want is three districts that do not come near town, and the city can have the other two.

All the county division talk by Thief River Falls people before the election was that they would give the farmers control. Now, let them make good, or I'll bet the farmers will see through their "4 to 1" talk.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

Legislation to protect honest workmen from unscrupulous employment agencies is proposed by W. E. McEwen in his biennial report to the governor. At present, he says, a large number of people who are sent some distance by employment agencies find that the wages and conditions under which they must work are not as represented and their only redress lies in the slow and expensive process of a civil suit.

Joel G. Winkjer of Crookston has accepted the appointment from Governor Eberhart and will become state dairy and food commissioner when the term of Andrew French expires in January. Mr. Winkjer is now an inspector in the dairy division of the federal department of agriculture.

Anton Schaefer, state public examiner, has asked the attorney general for an opinion on the legality of the state fair board paying $2,500 toward the expenses of the conservation congress held in St. Paul.

Dr. C. W. Young and J. A. Vye of St. Paul have been adjudged not to be in contempt of court by the state supreme court for the strictures they passed on the actions of a recent grand jury in Ramsey county.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Two are dead and nine ill in Nordick township, Wilkin county, as a result of a typhoid fever epidemic caused by a polluted well. Not one of the two families of Otto and Charles Lohmann escaped the dread disease. Otto Lohmann and the four-year-old son of Charles Lohmann have died. Both families used the water from the well.

After one unsuccessful attempt upon her own life by shooting Mrs. Diedrich Hinnenkamp of Melrose, Stearns county, was found hanging to a rafter in a granary by her eleven-year-old son. Mrs. Hinnenkamp had been mentally deranged for some time, but was not considered dangerous by her family.

Fire at St. Paul destroyed the large three-story frame building occupied by the Hardwood Door company. The building and contents are accounted a total loss, estimated at $50,000 on the contents and $8,000 on the building. Four firemen and one policeman were injured, but none of them permanently.

After a fall of thirty-five feet from the top of a telegraph pole to the frozen ground Henry James, Jr., an electrician in the employ of the St. Paul Gas Light company, sat up, looked cynically at the lofty perch he had just vacated and then leisurely climbed the pole to finish his work.

The dwelling of Victor Laney, an employe of the Cloquet Lumber company residing near Elmer, fifty miles north of Duluth, was destroyed by fire and his seven-months-old son was cremated. Mr. Laney was absent at the time of the fire and Mrs. Laney was at the barn milking a cow.

Michael Hauck, a section hand employed by the Northern Pacific, was run over by a freight train in the yards at St. Cloud. Both legs and one arm were cut off and he died from his injuries two hours after at the hospital. Hauck was sixty years of age.

A three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wollmering of Vermillion, Dakota county, ran out of the house to be near his father, who was loading a wagon with manure, and was bunted by a young bull, causing death shortly afterward.

Clarence Hobaugh, aged fifty, and Henry Koehler, aged fifty-five, laborers, were run down by a Chicago Great Western freight train at St. Paul Park. Hobaugh is dead and Koehler is seriously injured, but will likely recover.

James Casey, thirty years old, a conductor on the Duluth, Rainy Lake and Winnipeg railway, was instantly killed in a rear end collision between two freight trains in a heavy fog in the yards at Virginia.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

Frank Ruley, aged forty-nine, was found dead at the home of Michael Flannery at Hastings, having evidently died from heart trouble while asleep. Ruley was a son of the late Captain Russ Ruley and had been employed upon raftboats between St. Paul, Stillwater and Dubuque for the last thirty years.

Victor Herbert Smalley, for many years a prominent newspaper man in St. Paul, died in Touro hospital in New Orleans after an illness of eight days. Mr. Smalley of late years has been engaged in theatrical business and up to his illness was press agent for the Orpheum theater in New Orleans.

John Gilman, sixty-seven years old, veteran of the Civil war, is dead at the Minnesota Soldiers' home. Mr. Gilman had been ill for a long time. In 1895 he was appointed a member of the board of trustees of the home and served in that capacity for six years.

James Garrison, an old settler of Stearns county, was struck by a train on the Soo road at South Haven and instantly killed.

Benjamin Franklin Granger, a pioneer contractor and builder of North Minneapolis, is dead, aged seventy-one.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

INDIAN TREATY NOT IN FORCE

Judge Amidon Holds Convention of 1851 Was Abrogated by Act of Congress in 1863.

Judge C. F. Amidon, in United States court at Fergus Falls, handed down a decision discharging P. J. Sullivan, the alleged Browns Valley blind pig proprietor, from custody and declaring the Indian treaty of 1851 abrogated and annulled.

Sullivan was charged with introducing 900 pints of liquor into Browns Valley contrary to the provisions of this treaty. He was sentenced to jail, but later discovered the act of congress passed in 1863 annulling the land rights and cutting off the annuities of the Sioux in retaliation for the massacre of 1862.

After an extended review of the case Judge Amidon sums up as follows: "In the present case it is conceded that the Indian reservation, which was intended to be protected by article 5 of the treaty, ceased to be an Indian reservation by the act of Feb. 16, 1863, and since that time none of the Indians have dwelt upon that reservation or claimed title thereto. The whole basis, therefore, of federal authority over commerce in intoxicating liquors in this territory is wanting. There are no Indians there with whom commerce can be carried on; therefore the national government has no power to regulate commerce in the territory covered by the treaty when congress annulled all rights of the Indians in these lands. It, by a necessary implication, abrogated section 5 of the treaty, whose only object was the protection of the Indians. Under this decision the federal officers have no further power to interfere with the liquor traffic in the wide extent of territory covered by the Sioux treaties."

The territory affected by the decision includes the city of Moorhead and almost the entire southern part of the state lying west of the Mississippi, including part of Minneapolis.

RAILROAD MEN ARE KILLED

Two Meet Death in Accidents at St. Paul.

Two fatal accidents occurred in railroad yards at St. Paul. The first became public shortly after the discovery of the body of S. H. Stroup, tower man at Oakland station, on the Burlington road, lying in a ditch about 300 feet west of the Pigs Eye bridge near the fish hatcheries. Stroup had been missing since Saturday night. His body, terribly mangled, was almost entirely covered with snow, explaining the vain search which was made for him by the police and railroad officials.

The second accident occurred at almost the same instant that the body of Stroup was found.

John Anderson, a section hand on the Omaha road, fell in front of a rapidly moving passenger train in the Hazel Park yards while trying to clean out the snow and ice from a switch. He saw the train coming, but stayed on the track too long, slipping on the ice as he started to leap from the track.

DENY SEEKING SENATORSHIP

Eberhart and Others Not After Clapp's Seat From Minnesota.

Governor Eberhart emphatically asserts that he is not a candidate for the United States senate to succeed Moses E. Clapp. He declares that under no circumstances will be be a candidate at this time. How the report originated he cannot say. It was never mentioned, he says, between him and any other man in Washington. He admits that senatorial ambitions for the future are in his mind, but at present being governor is enough.

Frederick C. Stevens says he is not and will never be a candidate for the United States senate. He does not think there is any excuse for an attack on Senator Clapp.

Thomas H. Shevlin of Minneapolis joins the "not a candidate" class by saying he will not run.

Frank B. Kellogg declines to say anything on the subject and James A. Tawney says the report is news to him.

CHIEF CORRISTON RESIGNS

Head of Minneapolis Police Department Is Out.

Frank T. Corriston, superintendent of the Minneapolis police department and colonel of the First regiment of the state militia, has resigned as head of the Minneapolis police. Captain Michael Mealey, a member of the force for over a quarter of a century, will succeed.

The resignation was not entirely unexpected. It was handed to Mayor James C. Haynes and immediately accepted to take effect Jan. 1. It is traced directly to the recent criticism heaped upon the department for its laxity and then for its action in going to the other extreme shutting up the city in such a manner as to injure business according to statements by retail dealers.

MONEY IN QUACK GRASS LANDS.

About the last section of the country which one would think might be boomed by the real estate agent would seem to be a locality in which quack grass had gained a foothold, and yet the experience of one Minnesota farmer, whose case was related to us directly the other day, would seem to indicate that here was an opening for some energetic as well as patriotic real estate agent. The man in question lives in the vicinity of New Richland, Minn., a section which has been afflicted with quack, more or less—quite likely more—severely for the past fifteen or eighteen years. He cleared one eighty of the pest several years ago, and by dint of much vigilance has succeeded in keeping it clean. A year ago last August he bought another eighty adjoining the home place, which had been given over to quack grass for the preceding ten years. He paid $2,060 for it, or $25.75 per acre. Although it was late in the season before he could get at it, he plowed forty acres of it early in October, raked it with a special quack rake and burned the roots. Next he went over the piece with a quack root digger, gathering and burning all the roots which it was possible to reach. The next spring he planted corn on about twelve acres, oats on a third and wheat on the remainder. This fall he husked 300 bushels of fine corn from this twelve acres, and we know he did because we got the figures straight and have a sample of the corn before us. It is better corn than that raised on land which has been free from quack for years. He will tackle the other forty acres infested with the grass next season, and he figures that when he has given it the same treatment as he has the first forty he will not care to sell the eighty for less than $5,000, and if it is free from the pest it ought to be worth this price. It goes without saying that a fellow with flabby muscles, short in red blood or laking in courage will hardly want to tackle the redemption of this quack grass land, yet we believe there is a first class opportunity for the fellow who is made of the right stuff to get a good farm land at a low price. If he redeemed the land he will not only have added to his bank account, but served his neighborhood and country in a praiseworthy way.

SHOULD NOT BE STAMPEDED.

Straightway following election the big packers have announced that there is going to be a gradual decline in live stock prices. Since the wish in this case is father to the suggestion, because it will enable them to buy heavily on a declining market and thus enlarge their profits—and they seem abundantly able to carry out their wishes—it is fair to assume that the decline in prices will follow. Yet the less the feeders of the country are stampeded by the announcement and the less they yield to a very natural impulse to rush their stuff to a demoralized market the more money they will save in the end and the less will the packers profit by the coup which they have sprung. There can be a decline of $1.50 per hundredweight from present prices ($6 to $7) and yet be left a very satisfactory profit in feeding corn worth 35 to 40 cents per bushel. The man who is so fixed that he can do so would far better hold his hogs and steers, especially if they are unfinished, and sell them a few weeks later, when there is reason to believe that the market will have steadied from the present flurry. There are just as many hungry mouths to feed now as before election, and there is every reason to believe that the legitimate demands for meat products will be just as strong as they have been during the past two years.

THE VALUE OF OILMEAL.

While it is high priced as compared with other cereal feeds, oilmeal is the most valuable of the whole list as a means of furnishing stock with protein in condensed form. The best grades contain 30 per cent or slightly better of digestible protein, and it is because of this fact that it is worth the high price asked for it. Of the two brands of kinds of meal—old and new process—the former is cheaper at the same price because 94 per cent of the protein content is digestible, while in new process meal but 84 per cent is digestible. Mature fattening cattle may be given from two to two and a half pounds per day, while with growing young stock and pigs it may constitute one-tenth by weight of the grain ration. Dairy cows will handle from one to two pounds daily, depending upon their milk flow. It is the opinion of animal husbandry experts that there is no other feed which has so beneficial an effect on the animals eating it as does oilmeal. Fed in proper balance with other grains, it is the most economical ration which can be fed.

Many a habitually muddy road running east and west can be helped a lot if the trees to the south shading it are removed entirely or thinned enough so that the sunshine can get a chance at the highway. It is not quite so bad on north and south roads, but bad enough so that the majority of the trees might well be removed.

Following a summer and fall which have been unprecedentedly dry the present winter season offers a serious problem for the man who has considerable stock on his hands and whose water supply is none too abundant. Many a well will have to be drilled deeper and a rigid economy in the use of water for the stock be put into practice.

Timothy or other hay at from $10 to $18 per ton makes pretty high priced bedding for live stock. Better bed with straw and reduce the ration of hay, so that what is put before them will be eaten up clean. If the roughage fed consists of hay and straw, half and half, there will be no hay wasted, while there will be enough straw left in the mangers to bed with.

The average lively boy has all the native impulse and outward incentive that he needs along the line of sowing wild oats without being sort o' encouraged or at best excused by an indulgent but shortsighted parent. This wild oats business is one unique line of cereal production where the crop is always sixtyfold, lessened neither by drought, frosty nights nor hail at harvest time. The thoughtful parents will do the most in their power to reduce the sowing to the minimum.

If you are fitting a bunch of shotes for market and have never tried anything else with the corn ration add to this ration, which is too wide—does not have enough protein in proportion to the fat forming elements—some tankage or oilmeal at the rate of one part to nine or ten of corn and see the pigs jump. While both of these protein feeds come rather high, the feeding of them in the proportion mentioned will make a far more economical ration than corn alone because of the rapid gains which will be made.

Being the product of root rather than the fruit of the stem, it follows that potatoes will not mix through planting different varieties in the same hill, as one might think, without looking beneath the surface. The only way in which potato varieties may be crossed lies in fertilizing the blossom of one variety with pollen from a different variety and the next season planting the seed therefrom borne in the tomato-like pod developing from the blossom. It is in this way only that new varieties are developed. Such simple experimenting is within the reach of any gardener who is careful and will take the trouble to work it out.

While some utterances of the packers may have to be taken with a grain of allowance, there is no getting round the force and sanity of a declaration made by one of them the other day to the effect that feeders of cattle, sheep and hogs lose hundreds of thousands of dollars annually because they do not take more pains to secure good feeding animals and send them to market in prime instead of poor and ragged condition. The force of this statement ought to be as plain as the nose on a fellow's face, and yet any big stock market in the country most any day shows a variation of from $2 to $3 per hundredweight on stuff where the difference in price is due to quality and finish alone and not to class or kind.

Notwithstanding the fact that it is entirely feasible, we nevertheless have neither seen nor heard of any serious effort being made to utilize the grass and weeds that annually go to waste on tens of thousands of acres of country highways by herding over them neighborhood flocks of sheep, which could be looked after by some of the grandfathers of the community whose days of active farm work are past. Not only would the grazing of the highways in the manner suggested turn into dollars a lot of roughage that annually goes to waste, but it would greatly improve the appearance of the highways and prevent their being weed seed manufactories for the fouling of the adjoining fields. Of course the carrying of such a co-operative plan into effect presupposes that the folks in the community are on good terms, which is one of the essentials of good farming.

Quite a good deal has been appearing of late in the culinary columns of the daily papers about churnless butter. As near as we can make it out, the cream is put in a brown calico (English for cotton and maybe white would do just as well as brown) bag and put in a hole in the ground for about twenty-four hours, at the end of which time it will or ought to be converted to butter. The philosophy of the business seems to lie in the buttermilk seeping out of the sack, while it is said that contact with the earth "brings" the butter and adds a delicious flavor. It is maybe a confession of ignorance, but we would think that when the good housewife had dug the hole in the ground and filled it up and washed that cotton bag she would have expended about as much energy as in putting the cream in a basin or crock and giving it a few stirs with a spoon.

AMBASSADORS.

They Enjoy Some Curious Privileges at European Courts.

In the popular mind—the American mind at least—there is very little difference between an ambassador and a minister, but the former is entitled to very many privileges abroad that are denied to a mere envoy.

For instance, one curious privilege of an ambassador is that he, and he alone, when dismissed, may turn his back to the sovereign to whose court he is accredited. The mode of procedure, generally speaking, is as follows:

When the audience is at an end the ambassador waits to be dismissed by the sovereign. When dismissed the ambassador bows, retires three paces, bows again, retires three paces, bows a third time, turns on his heels and walks to the folding doors. But when the reigning sovereign is a woman, still politer methods obtain. To turn his back would be discourteous; to walk backward would be to resign a privilege; therefore the ambassador retires sideways like a crab. He keeps one eye on the sovereign and with the other he endeavors to find the door. By this unique means he contrives to evince all politeness to the sovereign and at the same time retain one of his privileges.

Another privilege of ambassadors is the right of being ushered into the royal presence through folding doors, both of which must be flung wide for him. No one save an ambassador can claim this privilege, the most any non-ambassadorial individual can expect is that one of the doors shall be opened to him.

One privilege appertaining to the ambassador, one capable of causing great inconvenience to the ruler, is the right of demanding admission to the sovereign at any hour of day or night. This was one of the reasons why Abdul Hamid, when sultan of Turkey, opposed the raising of our mission at Constantinople to an embassy. It was decidedly inconvenient at times to see the American representative at all.

To the European the most important feature of the ambassador's makeup is his sword. There the blade of the sword is a rapier blade with the point blunted. It has been facetiously observed abroad that the use the sword is put to in addition to its trick of tripping up its wearer is usually the harmless one of poking fires. One diplomatist was said to file his bills on his sword when it was not otherwise engaged, and for a long while it was a standing witticism of the corps diplomatique in Europe that the Russian ambassadors used their swords to file broken treaties, a circumstance that was held to account for the inordinate length of their weapons.—Harper's Weekly.

Emmet's Presence of Mind.

A story is told of Robert Emmet which proves his secretive power and resolution. He was fond of studying chemistry, and one night late, after the family had gone to bed, he swallowed a large quantity of corrosive sublimate in mistake for some acid cooling powder. He immediately discovered his mistake and knew that death must shortly ensue unless he instantly swallowed the only antidote, chalk. Timid men would have torn at the bell, roused all the family and sent for a stomach pump. Emmet called no one, made no noise, but, stealing down stairs and unlocking the front door, went into the stable, scraped some chalk which he knew to be there and took sufficient doses of it to neutralize the poison.

The secret of winter eggs lies not in newfangled recipe or nostrum, to trap nests or swinging roosts, but to two very practical considerations—making the hens scratch for what they get and in feeding them such rations as will most readily supply the ingredients contained in the eggs which they are expected to lay—namely, bran, oats, a little oilmeal, tankage, clover and alfalfa, with grit for grinding, lime for eggshells and enough corn to provide the yolks. For the service which she is expected to perform the hen needs a balanced ration, as does the dairy cow, and neither should be expected to do much on a ration fit for the steer in the feeding lot.

The day is not here yet, but it will be ere long, when the only accepted method of handling the farm manures will be storing them carefully under a covered shed with a concave cement floor, which will not only prevent their leaching in the rain, but will catch and hold all the liquid ingredients. With fresh manure worth by actual crop growing test $2.25 per ton and with more than half this value lost under the prevalent method of handling, a saner method for conserving this important by product of the farm would seem to be demanded.

Along with the very commendable policy of storing the barn full of fodder for the stock and the cellar full of fruit and vegetables for physical cheer during the long winter months, it is a very excellent idea to provide a goodly supply of mental provender for the [illegible] the shape of [illegible] periodicals and several wholesome books suited to their respective tastes and ages. There should be found in these a [illegible] for the boys and girls, for the [illegible] parent and for grandpa and grandma, if the home is still graced with their presence. It will cost a few dollars thus fully to provide for the mental needs, but no money [illegible] the place in the way of [illegible] will have a more wholesome effect or be more enjoyed.

Jenny Lind and the Trill.

Jenny Lind after years of steady practice believed that the much coveted trill was for her an impossibility. She practiced hours a day, but was unable to accomplish the feat. One day, thoroughly discouraged, she was sitting in her garden when all at once she looked up into a tree. Above her a bird was trilling. She at once went to her piano and through some magic or power of imitation began the trill and from that day never had any further difficulty.

Losing His Senses.

A mischievous boy, having got possession of his grandfather's spectacles, privately took out the glasses. When the old gentleman put them on, finding he could not see, he exclaimed: "Mercy on me! I've lost my sight!" But, thinking the impediment to vision might be the dirtiness of the glasses, he took them off to wipe them, when, not feeling them, he, still more frightened, cried out: "Why, what's come now? I've lost my feeling too!"—London Ideas.

The Short Step Between.

"I was on an ocean liner when she ran on the rocks off the English coast some years ago," said a traveling man, "and in the panic that ensued there is one incident that stands out in my memory, illustrating the slender thread between the tragic and the ridiculous. We had a fellow on board who had managed to keep pretty well loaded all the way across, and when we struck the rocks he was in his usual condition. When everybody thought for sure we were going to the bottom he sat down at the piano in the saloon, and what do you suppose he began playing? 'Home, Sweet Home.' Somebody went to him and begged him to stop. Immediately he switched off from the doleful strains of the old song to the rollicking melody of 'Down Went McGinty.' The absurdity of the thing seemed to strike everybody at once, and a general laugh followed The tension was relieved, and there was good order after that."

The Restaurant Piccolo.

Writing from Dresden, an American says: "There is at least one thing in a German restaurant for which one would look in vain in our country. That is the piccolo. You may think that I mean a musical instrument and that any orchestra in any country might have one of these, but you are wrong. My piccolo, the one at the restaurant, is a human being. He is a boy twelve to fifteen years old, who assists the regular waiters. He wears the regulation waiter's costume and looks funny in his spiketail coat. He is as solemn as a funeral, knows how to extract a tip and for the high privilege of retaining his place and taking his first degree as a waiter must endure much abuse at the hands of the head waiter and his underlings. He is a funny little fellow, this piccolo, who because of his appearance could never prosper in our country."—New York Tribune.

Created a New Word.

It was the third Earl Spencer who added a word to the language in consequence of a wager. The bet was that by cutting off the tail part of his overcoat he could bring into fashion overcoats so short that the skirts of the undercoat would show beneath. He won his wager, and "spencer" became the name both of that garment and of the feminine one afterward constructed in its likeness. The peerage has added more than one name to the terminology of costume. Everybody knows "Wellingtons," and the billycock hat is said by some to be really "Billy Coke," from Coke of Norfolk, earl of Leicester. But none of these examples in the sphere of clothes rivals what the Earl of Sandwich did when he contrived the slice of meat between bread as a device to enable him to go on gambling without leaving off for a meal.—London Chronicle.

Getting Acquainted.

"We hesitated about renting this place," said the woman who had just moved in, "until we learned that the families on both sides of us owned their houses. It is so unpleasant to live where the people next door are always changing and you never know what kind of neighbors you are going to have."

"Yes," responded the woman on the other side of the fence. "That's one reason why we're trying to sell our house."—Chicago Tribune.

A Bright Student.

During a recent examination in the theology of the Old Testament the following question was asked a young clergyman: "What language did Balaam's ass speak?" After a moment of thought a smile flashed across his face, and he wrote his answer. I looked at the paper. He had written, "Assyrian."—Lippincott's.

Things He Sees.

"He's a terrible drunkard, isn't he?"

"Yes, but he's a good citizen."

"How can that be?"

"Every time he has jimjams he goes to the courthouse and pays taxes on a pack of pink and blue dogs."—Cleveland Leader.

Anticipated.

Margaret—Did you tell the girls at the tea that secret I confided to you and Josephine? Katharine—No, truly I didn't. Josephine got there first.—Harper's Bazar.

Knew Better.

"They say Brown 's ten years ahead of his time."

"Well, it's not true. He's six months behind. I'm his landlord and know."

Christmas has come and gone. This year owing to the prosperity that is felt in this city and surrounding country the observance of the day was more general and more elaborate than ever. This the oldest of the days we celebrate always brings good cheer and good fellowship with it and apart from its religious observance tends to make us all better.

Red Lake Falls and Red Lake County with its fancy and expensive court house is admittedly in pretty bad shape and it will take the strictest economy to make the burden of taxation bearable. For this condition they have no one but themselves to blame. Year after year they refused to submit the matter in dispute to the people for their verdict. The people resented this and have left them in their present deplorable state. There is no redress for them. The action begun to dissolve Pennington county, if we may dignify it, calling it an action is only for the purpose of easing their feelings and will not amount to anything. No one knows this better than the ones who have instituted this thing they call a contest.

In four daily papers of last Wednesday, there appeared a communication from Red Lake Falls, stating that a contest of Pennington county had been started, and giving particulars, not failing to mention the fifty-six counts & c.

The concluding paragraph stated that those filing the contest admitted that they did not expect to win; that the contest was begun to make a convenient delay; that would enable Red Lake County to collect the 1910 taxes & c.

As the article was the same in all of the papers, there can be no question but it was sent out from Red Lake Falls, and was the honest opinion of the writer, and convinces us that there is, or was one honest man in that community.

Since the publication of the article all Red Lake Falls has been busy repudiating the article or rather the concluding paragraph.

We are surprised at this even one honest man in county seat matters might be the lump that would leaven the whole, for the public has for some time been of the opinion that a second Diogenes even with an improved lantern would have made a fruitless search. Without question the article was theirs and the public is surprised that they would attempt to repudiate it. On the contrary they should extol the author of the article, place him on a pedestal so as to be able to prove to the world that all is not "rotten in Denmark"

With this issue the NEWS enters upon the twenty-eighth year of its existance. Twenty-seven long and eventful years have passed since the publication of its first issue, and the changes wrought in the trend of time are innumerable.

From a hamlet with merely a handful of inhabitants twenty-seven years ago this city today takes its place among the larger cities of the Northwest, and is destined to become the metropolis of Northern Minnesota.

During these years the NEWS has kept pace with the times and has made such changes and additions from time to time that the increasing business would merit and demand of it. It has always, we think, been willing to raise its voice to anything that would stand for the best interests and welfare of the city and community. It has, in turn, been accorded a liberal patronage and has enjoyed its share of prosperity. We choose this, the anniversary, as a fitting moment to extend thanks for the patronage that has been accorded the management of the NEWS in the past, and we hope and believe that the same liberal patronage will be extended to us in the future.

Loggers Welcome Snow.

The snowfall is pleasing to Minnesota loggers, for swamps have frozen over and the fall of snow can be utilized to make roads essential to hauling the logs to landings. Crews have been actively cutting timber for a month. Roadmaking can be started and the season's output of logs should be large. Early thaws last spring left many logs in the woods, and the low stage of water for the summer made driving a slow process. The result was that sawmills were short of logs, although the supplies in the small streams, together with a big cut in the woods this winter, will keep local mills operating at high speed this coming summer.

Marshall County Has Water Famine.

From Marshall county comes the report that Farmers are getting alarmed over the dry conditions. The finding of enough water to supply the household and the stock is getting difficult, as wells are giving out, and have given out entirely in many places, the farmers having to take their cattle and horses long distances each day to water. Last spring and summer as well as fall were dry, and while the snowfall in this locality promises to be good, the ground is in such a parched condition that it will take lots of moisture to get it in good shape for next year.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

Thirteen persons, two of them women, were killed and fifty were injured in a double explosion of gas and dynamite in the new electric powerhouse of the New York Central railroad at New York city. The force of the explosion shattered hundreds of windows in the big hotels and apartment houses in the neighborhood of the big railroad terminal, causing alarm among the guests. The dynamite blast picked up a northbound trolley car, lifted it in the air and sent it crashing down upon an automobile which was passing along the other side of the street. Four of the passengers were killed and every one in the car was injured.

Twenty-four men, including Fire Marshal James Horan, lost their lives at the Chicago stock yards, crushed beneath a brick wall that fell while fire was destroying the meat storage house of Morris & Co. Twenty of those killed were firemen, Chief Horan losing his life five minutes after reaching the scene. Three of the known dead were stock yard employes. A dozen persons were injured.

Fourteen dead, twelve firemen and two policemen, and more than fifty injured, of whom twenty-five were taken to hospitals, is the record of a fire at the leather factory of Daniel Friedlander at Philadelphia. Of the injured several are in a critical condition and may die. The disaster was caused by falling walls.

Six persons, two women and four men, were found dead in two rooms in a building at the rear of the opera house at Kenton, O. A fire had been burning in a gas stove which had no pipe and it is supposed that the fumes from this stove killed the six people.

In a head on collision at Nevada, O., between westbound passenger train No. 15 and eastbound express train No. 4 on the Pennsylvania road six persons were killed and half a dozen others were injured, none, it is believed, fatally.

Fire in the factory district at Cincinnati resulted in the death of two persons, the injuring of several firemen and property loss estimated at $2,000,000. Buildings comprising an entire block were consumed.

While Mrs. Somboy of Dover, N. J., was shopping for Christmas two of her children, aged two and six years, whom she had locked in a room on the lower floor, were burned to death.

Fire which started in the general store of J. J. Brown at Madison Lake, Minn., caused a loss estimated at $100,000 and wiped out practically all of the business district of the town.

Fire destroyed the whole business portion of Bradwardine, Man., causing a loss of $150,000.

CRIMINAL NEWS.

Theodore Ostrowski, former treasurer of the Polish Roman Catholic union, has been arrested at Chicago on the charge of embezzlement of the society's funds. The warrant charges the embezzlement of $92,000 and was sworn to by Stanley Adamkiowicz, president of the society.

Three charred bodies found in the ruins of the burned home of J. L. Sanders near Hester, N. C., and strands of a girl's hair discovered in a pool of blood in the yard led to the arrest of Nathan Montague, a negro, on charges of criminal assault, murder and arson.

With a total of 633 indictments and 114 pleas of guilty to charges of vote selling during the recent election Adams county, O., presents a condition unique in political history. Nearly 10 per cent of the voting strength of the county is under indictment.

A lone bandit celebrated Christmas by going through Missouri Pacific train No. 112 and holding up more than 100 passengers from whom he took their watches and money.

Thomas Moran, the section foreman of the Great Northern at this point, left Saturday for Minneapolis where he is spending the holidays with his aged mother. It is some fourteen years since Mr. Moran had last seen his mother and his homecoming will indeed be a Merry Xmas in the Moran household.

Axel Rod, of Beaudette, who has been seriously ill with typhoid fever, returned to this city last week. Mr. Rod was taken sick just about the time of the fire that swept that region this fall and was at the height of his fever, when he was removed from the hospital, where he was a patient, on account of the threatening flames, and taken to a box car for safety over night.

Tony Schusser, at one time a member of the Press force, in this city was a guest at the P. Roark home a couple of days this week. Fortune has bestowed a liberal share of its smiles on Tony since his debut in the newspaper field, of which he justly deserves. Besides being owner of the Kellihor Journal he is in charge of the mechanical department of the Bemidji Pioneer. Tony has many warm friends in this city who were glad to see him again.

A new bank has been organized at Oklee, on the Soo, in Red Lake county in which local men are interested. The incorporators are T. Anderson, Milan; W. B. and T. A. Torgerson, Greenbush; Walther Anderson, K. T. Wang and T. P. Anderson, Badger. The officers are T. Anderson, president, Walther Anderson, vice president; W. B. Torgerson, cashier; T. P. Anderson, assistant cashier. Messrs. Walther and T. P. Anderson will go down Monday to open the bank for business. The bank will be left in charge of the latter until Dr. Torgerson can arrange his business so that he too can devote his time to the bank.—Badger Herald.

Beloved farmers, Agrikultur iz the mother ov farm produce; she iz also the stepmother ov garden sass. Rise at haff past 2 o'clock in the morning, build up a big fire in the kitchen, burn out two pounds ov kandels, and grease yure boots. Wait pashuntly for day brake. When day duz brake, then commence tew stir the geese and worry the hogs. What iz a lawyer?—what iz a merchant? what iz a dokter? what iz a minister? I answer, nothing. A farmer iz the nobless work ov God; he rizes at 2 o'clock in the morning, and burns out a haff a pound ov wood and two kords ov kandels, and then goes out tew woory the geese and stir up the hogs.—Josh Billings.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Lawrence and daughters, Lucile and Mildred of Fergus Falls, arrived in the city Saturday and are spending the week at the C. A. Robbecke home.

The Telephone Question Again in Court.

Last Friday the Tri-State Telephone and Telegraph Co. caused an order to show cause to be served upon the City Officials, why the City should not be enjoined from interfering with this company in extending its lines in the City of Thief River Falls and this order will necessarily raise the question as to the validity of the franchise under which the telephone company is operating.

The City officials through City Attorney Halvorson will appear in compliance with this order before Judge Charles A. Willard United Circuit Court Judge in Minneapolis on December 30th.

The City officials claim that the same objections can be raised against the Tri-State that were successfully contended for in the contest with the Northwestern Telephone Co. and the question as to what rights the Tri State Company has in the City will be determined in the Courts so that it is highly improper to enter into any newspaper controversy over the telephone situation.

Much can evidently be said upon the telephone question, but so long as matters are in Court for determination it seems that the position of the City officials, in refraining from entering into a newspaper fight is proper.

Notice to Water & Light Consumers.

We are herewith publishing Ordinance relating to payment of water & light accounts.

Ordinance No. 67.

Sec. 5. All accounts for electric light or power shall become due on the first day of each month and shall be payable at the office of the City Clerk or at such other place as may be appointed by the City Council, from the first to the tenth day, inclusive, of each month. If not paid on or before the tenth day of each month, a penalty of ten per cent shall be added. And in all cases where such account shall be paid on or before the tenth day of each month, a discount of ten per cent shall be allowed and deducted from the same.

In all cases where dues are not paid on or before the fifteenth day of each month, the electric current shall be cut off, and in such case a penalty of two dollars shall be added, to reimburse the city for the expense incurred in cutting and reconnecting the wires; and in no case shall the electric current be restored until such dues together with any penalty shall have been fully paid.

These rules will be strictly enforced.

Appointed Dairy & Food Commissioner.

Joel G. Winjer, of Crookston has accepted the appointment from Gov. A. O. Eberhart and will become state dairy and food commissioner when the term of Andrew French expires in January. Mr. Winjer is now an inspector in the dairy division of the federal department of agriculture. While on his recent visit to Washington the governor secured Mr. Winjers release, and announced his appointment on his return to the capitol.

Mr. Winjer will not sever his connection with the department of agriculture entirely, but will remain on the classified civil service list and can be returned to the government service any time.

URGES SWEEPING CHANGES

Minnesota Superintendent of Banks Files His Report.

J. B. Galernault, state superintendent of banks, has filed his annual report with Governor Eberhart. The report covers a great variety of subjects and makes many recommendations of sweeping changes in the laws.

The superintendent of banks, he believes, should be given discretion by law to grant or refuse applications for charters for state banks. There is a craze for the establishment of such banks, he says, often where there is no demand for them. He thinks the department should have authority to investigate local conditions and act accordingly, the same as the federal controller of the currency enjoys, and thus prevent the establishment of too many banks.

RULING OF SUPREME COURT

City of Mankato Must Defend Impure Water Suits.

The city of Mankato cannot avoid prosecution for personal damages brought by administrators of estates of persons alleged to have died of typhoid fever brought on by drinking the contaminated water supplied by that city.

The state supreme court reverses the lower court in sustaining demurrers to the complaints of Delia Keever and Kate Flanagan, administratrixes.

The supreme court holds that the municipality can be held accountable for negligence in permitting its water supply to become contaminated sufficiently to cause sickness and death. Both cases go back for trial in the district court.

BUSINESS SECTION BURNED

Fire at Madison Lake, Minn., Causes Loss of $100,000.

Fire which started in the general store of J. J. Brown at Madison Lake caused a loss estimated at $100,000 and wiped out practically all of the business district of the town.

A hand pump operated by a volunteer fire department was the only local means of fighting the fire and though valiant work was done a high wind drove the flames onward and the reservoirs went dry. Help was asked of Mankato and help was sent by that city. However, an engine which Elysian agreed to send did not arrive until the fire had swept both sides of the main business street.

LAWLESSNESS IS RAMPANT

Minneapolis Grand Jury Condemns Existing Conditions.

The Hennepin county grand jury, unable to obtain proof of police graft in the city of Minneapolis, but convinced that police protection has been given resort proprietors and blind piggers, adjourned after making one of the most sweeping reports on municipal conditions ever filed by the grand jury in the county. Reporting "deplorable conditions of lawlessness and vice" the grand jury charges perjury before it and makes several drastic recommendations for remedying municipal conditions. The discharge of several police officials is one of the recommendations made.

SHERK SETTLES PROMISE SUIT

Miss Coughlin's Action Dropped Before Jury Is Empaneled.

A big package of letters, photographs and gifts exchanged hands in district court at Mankato when the $50,000 suit of Miss Agnes Coughlin of Minneapolis against Thomas A. Sherk, a wealthy retired Mankato grocer, for alleged breach of promise to marry, was settled just before the empaneling of a jury was to begin. Miss Coughlin was on hand with her witnesses and attorneys and a large crowd had assembled to hear the testimony.

FATAL END TO A FIST FIGHT

One Dead and One Injured in Brawl in Duluth Hotel.

One man is dead and another may die as the result of a fist fight on the "Bowery" at Duluth.

Jorgen Hendrickson of Christiania, Norway, is the dead man. The name of the other victim is unknown. As he delivered the fatal blow he reeled from a stroke of Hendrickson's fist and fell down a stairway, receiving injuries about the head from which he is unconscious.

Nothing was known by other persons in the hotel of the cause of the fight.

MONEY IN QUACK GRASS LANDS.

About the last section of the country which one would think might be boomed by the real estate agent would seem to be a locality in which quack grass had gained a foothold, and yet the experience of one Minnesota farmer, whose case was related to us directly the other day, would seem to indicate that here was an opening for some energetic as well as patriotic real estate agent. The man in question lives in the vicinity of New Richland, Minn., a section which has been afflicted with quack, more or less—quite likely more—severely for the past fifteen or eighteen years. He cleared one eighty of the pest several years ago, and by dint of much vigilance has succeeded in keeping it clean. A year ago last August he bought another eighty adjoining the home place, which had been given over to quack grass for the preceding ten years. He paid $2,060 for it, or $25.75 per acre. Although it was late in the season before he could get at it, he plowed forty acres of it early in October, raked it with a special quack rake and burned the roots. Next he went over the piece with a quack root digger, gathering and burning all the roots which it was possible to reach. The next spring he planted corn on about twelve acres, oats on a third and wheat on the remainder. This fall he husked 300 bushels of fine corn from this twelve acres, and we know he did because we got the figures straight and have a sample of the corn before us. It is better corn than that raised on land which has been free from quack for years. He will tackle the other forty acres infested with the grass next season, and he figures that when he has given it the same treatment as he has the first forty he will not care to sell the eighty for less than $5,000, and if it is free from the pest it ought to be worth this price. It goes without saying that a fellow with flabby muscles, short in red blood or lacking in courage will hardly want to tackle the redemption of this quack grass land, yet we believe there is a first class opportunity for the fellow who is made of the right stuff to get a good farm land at a low price. If he redeemed the land he will not only have added to his bank account, but served his neighborhood and country in a praiseworthy way.

SHOULD NOT BE STAMPEDED.

Straightway following election the big packers have announced that there is going to be a gradual decline in live stock prices. Since the wish in this case is father to the suggestion, because it will enable them to buy heavily on a declining market and thus enlarge their profits—and they seem abundantly able to carry out their wishes—it is fair to assume that the decline in prices will follow. Yet the less the feeders of the country are stampeded by the announcement and the less they yield to a very natural impulse to rush their stuff to a demoralized market the more money they will save in the end and the less will the packers profit by the coup which they have sprung. There can be a decline of $1.50 per hundredweight from present prices ($6 to $7) and yet be left a very satisfactory profit in feeding corn worth 35 to 40 cents per bushel. The man who is so fixed that he can do so would far better hold his hogs and steers, especially if they are unfinished, and sell them a few weeks later, when there is reason to believe that the market will have steadied from the present flurry. There are just as many hungry mouths to feed now as before election, and there is every reason to believe that the legitimate demands for meat products will be just as strong as they have been during the past two years.

THE VALUE OF OILMEAL.

While it is high priced as compared with other cereal feeds, oilmeal is the most valuable of the whole list as a means of furnishing stock with protein in condensed form. The best grades contain 30 per cent or slightly better of digestible protein, and it is because of this fact that it is worth the high price asked for it. Of the two brands of kinds of meal—old and new process—the former is cheaper at the same price because 94 per cent of the protein content is digestible, while in new process meal but 84 per cent is digestible. Mature fattening cattle may be given from two to two and a half pounds per day, while with growing young stock and pigs it may constitute one-tenth by weight of the grain ration. Dairy cows will handle from one to two pounds daily, depending upon their milk flow. It is the opinion of animal husbandry experts that there is no other feed which has so beneficial an effect on the animals eating it as does oilmeal. Fed in proper balance with other grains, it is the most economical ration which can be fed.

One of the best propositions we noticed listed for sale in a recent auction was a flock of forty pure bred Shropshires. We say best because there was nothing else on the list which put to its best possible use would do so much good to the man who bought it as these sheep. Rightly handled they will give an easier return than any other resource on the farm. For at least seven months in the year they will get their living from the weeds on the farm, which are worse than useless; will convert this into fertilizer, which every farm needs, in much larger quantities than it gets, while the lambs can be finished for market in a comparatively short time. The wool [illegible] a high price and will add a snug sum to the bank account. It is better to start with twenty sheep than sixty and get experience as one goes along, which if unfavorable doesn't come in so big chunks.

Tuberculosis is often induced by damp and filthy surroundings and badly ventilated sleeping quarters; hence the removal of these causes, if they exist, will contribute to the health of the herd.

A poser for those fond of making fine ethical distinctions: Does the egg laid by your neighbor's hen in your barn or woodshed rightfully belong to him or yourself, provided your garden and back yard furnish her food and your flower beds a dusting place?

Nine times out of ten it does not pay to monkey with really sick poultry. It is better to knock them on the head with a broomstick than to allow them to run indiscriminately with and infect the rest of the flock. Should the sick fowls recover they seldom pay their keep for months.

We went by a home the other night where the windows were all down tight—no provision made for a breath of fresh air—and where, to cap the climax, a kerosene lamp turned low was doing much to befoul what little air the house contained. Fresh air is a good deal cheaper than dirt, more health promoting than pills and tonic, and yet some folks are as afraid of it as death and a good deal more so than taxes.

There is no place where religion—that of deeds as well as words—needs putting into practice more than in the home. It should not only mean being kind and cheerful, keeping socks mended and buttons on the men's shirts, but having a supply of dry wood as near the kitchen stove as possible, kindling closer than the corncrib, a handy supply of water and easy means of disposing of the waste water. Any man who pretends to be a good man about the house, let alone being religious, is worse than—well, he's a pretty poor stick if he doesn't provide for these things.

While a complete outfit for determining the amount of butter fat in milk by the Babcock test will not cost over three or four dollars, a very fair idea can be got of what the individuals in the dairy herd are doing by sending average samples of milk from the several cows to the local creamery and having them tested there, a lift most any manager or buttermaker would be glad to give a patron. His test, whether showing a percentage of fat of 25 or 5 per cent, coupled with the amount of milk which each cow averages per day during her milking period, will be sufficient data from which to determine which the loafers are. The sooner this test is made the more money there will be in the bank, while a lot of profitless drudge work will be done away.

There's many a man in the north part of the corn belt who has a kindly feeling toward the variety of corn known as Bloody Butcher, which was used considerably in some sections for replanting fields where the larger variety of corn planted at the usual time did not germinate. In one instance which came to our notice some seed of this variety was planted on June 9 and in just sixty-eight days samples of firm dented corn were picked from the field. While we would not urge the planting of it in latitudes where a larger and more productive variety would mature well between spring and fall frosts, yet it answers a good purpose as an emergency variety where one needs corn for feeding purposes and does not want to lose the use of the land.

The wisdom and urgent need of testing animals which are to be used for breeding purposes were effectively shown in the case of the owner of a fine herd of Holstein cows of which we read the other day. One cow in the herd which he prized highly had not responded as she should from the tuberculin test applied at intervals of several months before, and to be fully satisfied in regard to the matter he had the cow slaughtered by an assistant of the state veterinarian's office. A postmortem examination showed that the cow was so far gone with tuberculosis that there were tubercular lesions all through her vital organs and muscular tissues and that no portion of her carcass was fit for food. It was an emphatic demonstration, convincing not only the owner, but many neighbors and visitors who were present. Next time he will act sooner than he did in this case and thus prevent a diseased animal from infecting other members of the herd.

There is no line along which the animal husbandman makes more serious mistakes than in his unwillingness to pay a good round price for the sires needed, and, while this holds of sheep and hogs, it applies with particular force to dairy and beef cattle. The old maxim "The sire is half the herd" is nowadays considered an under rather than an over statement of the facts in the case, and, considering this and the bearing it will have on the herd, it is sheerest folly and desperately poor management to put up with anything that walks on four legs just because such a sire can be bought for a song. A sire of the dairy breeds that comes of a family whose females have large milk and butter capacity or one of any leading beef breeds that has the desired build, vigor and conformation to accepted types is cheap at most any figure, while one that hasn't breeding back of him and is in reality a scrub would be an expensive proposition if he could be got for little or nothing. This is a case of mistaken economy that may save a few dollars at the start, but may easily mean the loss of hundreds of dollars in the course of a few years.

There are mighty few dogs that are so handsome that the owner is willing to have one of them around his back door and pay from $3 to $5 for the privilege. A number of towns we know have about extinguished the canine tribe by assessing just such a fine. It's a whole lot better than anonymous poison and works automatically.

Where it is possible to do so it is a good idea to place the semi-tropical plants such as the palm, sword fern, sprengeri and cactus as high on the plant stand as possible, this because of the fact that there is a difference of several degrees in a stove heated room between the air three feet and seven feet from the floor. One of the most beautiful and long fronded sword ferns we ever saw was given a high niche, and we do not doubt that the warmer upper air had something to do with its thriftiness.

A postmaster general—if we remember correctly it was John Wanamaker—said that the four chief reasons why a parcels post had not been adopted in this country were the American, Wells Fargo, Adams and United States Express companies, and these same reasons still persist and keep the people of the United States from having a decent parcels service when every other civilized country has the system in successful operation, and some of them more than a century. When the farmers of the country wake up and make a roar they will get what they want, but not before.

Among other means which may be employed to protect the trunks of young fruit trees from the attacks of mice and rabbits whitewash gives excellent results. A recipe for making it recommended by the Ohio experiment station is as follows: Slack one peck of fresh lime with old soapsuds, thin to the consistency of whitewash and stir in one gallon of crude carbolic acid, four pounds of sulphur and one gallon of soft soap. This wash should be applied with a brush and will not only prevent rodents from gnawing the trees, but will kill insects and promote the health of the bark.

Owing to the scarcity of hay very generally through the north central states many a townsman who in years past has fed timothy, clover or alfalfa will have to feed instead shredded corn fodder, which has been put up in extra good condition this season. For the family cow this may be nicely balanced as a milk giving ration by feeding a quart of cornmeal, two quarts of bran and a double handful of oilmeal twice a day. This is sufficient for a cow giving from twelve to fifteen quarts of milk per day. If she is giving less than this the ration should be reduced proportionately. If ensilage is available and the ear corn was not removed when it was put up the same ration will suffice, leaving out the cornmeal.

There are now and then occasions when the circumstances seem to justify one in going to law, but they are few and far between. Especially is this true in equity cases, where property or money is involved and where a settlement could by all odds be best effected by arbitration and compromise. The folly of "lawing" it out willy nilly lies in the fact that before a settlement is effected in the court the chances are that the lawyers will have the bulk of the money or proprty that the litigants are scrapping over. Folks who persist in "lawing" in this way are easy "pickin's" for the legal fraternity and those who contribute most largely toward buying their flour and bacon and footing their coal and electric light bills.

Some experiments which have been conducted the past four years by the Ohio Agriculture college to determine what sized and shaped ears will on the average produce the most corn per acre, while not entirely conclusive, present some interesting facts. First it was found that long ears produced 2.97 bushels per acre more than shorter and deeper kerneled ears; that seed from ears with bare tips produced more corn per acre the first year than from ears that were well filled, but that in succeeding years the seed from well filled ears yielded from 1.5 to 2 bushels per acre more. It was also found during a period of five years that crease dented corn produced 2.84 bushels more per acre than rough dented seed and that seed from a well manured plot produced 2.4 bushels less per acre than seed from an adjoining plot that was not manured at all.

Queen Elizabeth's Amulet.

Queen Elizabeth during her last illness wore around her neck a charm made of gold which had been bequeathed to her by an old woman in Wales, who declared that so long as the queen wore it she would never be ill. The amulet, as was generally the case, proved of no avail, and Elizabeth, notwithstanding her faith in the charm, not only sickened, but died. During the plague in London people wore amulets to keep off the dread destroyer. Amulets of arsenic were worn near the heart. Quills of quicksilver were hung around the neck and also the powder of toads.

No Swelling at All.

"I see not one ripple on the water. All is calmness," said the little German lady, looking out dreamily over the quiet sea. "I haf crossed the ocean when it was calm like this all the way over."

"Do you mean that there was no swell even in midocean?" asked her companion, who had never crossed at all.

"No, no swelling at all," was the reply.—New York Press.

THIEF RIVER FALLS

New York and the Surf.

Few New Yorkers ever stop to think that one of that city's chief attractions is the surf. Philadelphians must go fifty-six miles to the ocean. Though the folk of Baltimore and Washington live on tidewater, they must travel for surf bathing to the capes. Boston is the only other large town on the Atlantic seaboard besides New York that has the ocean at its back door. San Francisco and Los Angeles are the only Pacific coast cities within trolley ride of ocean beach. None of the Mexican gulf cities can be compared to New York as a seaside resort, and as to New Orleans, another Mecca of the pleasure seekers, that lies more than 100 miles above the mouth of the Mississippi. [illegible] and Rockaway, a good many miles of Greater New York are bounded by the ocean. This fact, just to consider the money making side of it, means an enormous revenue to the metropolis from the inland parts of the country. It is an advantage other great world centers, such as London, Paris and Berlin, do not enjoy.—Argonaut.

CHRISTMAS CHEER IS GENERAL

Everywhere in Sweden the Holiday Spirit Predominates—Hundreds of Norwegian-Americans Return for Brief Visit to the Fatherland—Residents of Danish West Indies Anxious for Annexation to United States.

SWEDEN.

Perhaps no city in the world takes on such a decided holiday spirit and appearance as Stockholm. The stores are profusely decorated and so are the streets and statues. In the restaurants and cafes there is special music and in every nook and corner there is evidence that Christmas is nigh. In cottage and palace "jul" is celebrated like no other holiday throughout the entire year. The heart and purse strings are let loose and everybody believes in having a good time. In the country districts there is perhaps greater preparations than anywhere else for the great holiday. There it is the custom that the whole farm place must be cleaned up for the great holiday. Even the cattle, the pigs and the chickens are provided with extra bedding and the birds of the open air are fed with sheaves of wheat, which are raised on a long rail outside of the kitchen door. In the household there presents itself the busiest kind of a time before Christmas eve. The mother of the household is leading it all and her preparations during the preholidays encompass such a variety in the way of pastries and delicious victuals that it would be a fruitless job to attempt to describe it here. The Scandinavians celebrate Christmas eve above all. Christmas in Sweden is a thorough going affair. It lasts for at least twenty days and there is one party after another. Friends and relatives come together, enjoying the national songs and folk dances. There are special services in all the churches and from palace to cottage there is a scene of holiday activity that places the foreigner, who is fortunate enough to visit Sweden at this time of the year, in a perfect trance. Old stories and sayings come into play as never before and all these old customs are so rigidly observed that it would be impossible to dislodge them were a hundred years to pass again. Amidst it all reigns the good old Christmas cheer and the one who is not happy in Sweden during "yuletide" is missing his purpose as a human being.

Inasmuch as there has recently been great speculation as to the real condition of King Gustaf's health the Aftonbladet (Stockholm) has published a long report regarding the exact condition of his majesty's health. There is little doubt, too, that the king wanted to have all rumors pro and con regarding his health set at rest and so made a statement to the aforementioned paper direct. The truth of the matter is that the king during the past few months has been gaining steadily in strength and has even been able to take long tramps in the woods and enjoyed hunting small game exceedingly much. "His health now," says the Aftonbladet, "judging from what his closest physicians have told us, is the very best and he has not been as strong as he is now for years."

A lady who desires to remain unidentified has donated the sum of 500 crowns to the National Anti-Tuberculosis society. She is a Stockholm lady and states in her letter to the board of directors of the society that she hopes to give the same amount annually, as long as she lives. Sweden is certainly setting an example in the work that is being done to check the ravages of consumption and to build up her sanitariums. Almost every day there is some money coming in, either in large or small amounts, and the sale of holiday stamps by the Anti-Tuberculosis society last year amounted to over 150,000 crowns. These are splendid results indeed for a small country like Sweden and other countries would do well to follow suit.

At the recent state church convention in Stockholm the well known Dr. Waldenstrom moved that state authorities take the necessary steps to prevent Mormon missionaries, who are not citizens of Sweden, from carrying on their propaganda in that country. It is needless to say that the motion met with general approval and was unanimously supported and adopted.

There are plenty of horses in the Swedish capital in spite of the fact that automobiles have been increasing in number at a rapid rate. There are in all 5,595 horses, military and police department horses excluded.

The [illegible]men's Christian Temperance Union celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary in Stockholm Nov. 30. There were present on this occasion over 500 prominent women from different parts of the country.

The "holy week" set aside by the Salvation Army for the purpose of soliciting funds for the poor of Stockholm for the holidays netted the neat sum of 115,000 crowns.

NORWAY.

Hundreds of Norwegian-Americans have arrived to celebrate the holidays with the good folks at home. Many of the home returning visitors are coming for the first time since they left for America and one might imagine how many happy family reunions there will be all over the country. Some of the sons and daughters who left for the land in the Far West many years ago will, however, find upon their return that many of their friends and relatives are dead, and many is the son and daughter who will arrive just in time to see a dying mother or father. These annual Christmas visits on the part of Norwegian-Americans have their joyful sides as well as their sad ones. The Norwegian-American is a more welcome guest at home than he was a number of years ago, for the popular mind in Norway is not so prejudiced against him as it was.

The Norwegian traffic director has returned from England, where he attended a conference in London between representatives of the English telegraph companies and the representatives of the Northern Telegraph company. As a result of this conference Norway and England will have full and independent control of the cable between Egersund and Peterhead. Through this arrangement Norway will have her own direct cable communication with England. The tax per word from Jan. 1 will be 11 ore.

Severe snow storms and cold weather have caused a great deal of delay to all railway traffic along the Bergen and Trondhjem railways and several of the through trains were stuck in the snow and were completely at the mercy of the storm for a couple of days. A large number of coast steamers have been unable to reach harbor and it is feared that many lives may have been lost. Telegraph and telephone wires are down and all communications were completely crippled for several days.

The Eids Forest association has purchased the large forests which have for the past few years been in the possession of the Swedish Jossefors and Charlottenberg Lumber companies. The price paid was 1,500,000 crowns. The same association has also purchased the Koppom paper mill's holdings for 151,000 crowns. The acquired forest tract is regarded as exceptionally valuable and undoubtedly millions of crowns will be realized from it by the association.

Nearly all the hunting expeditions which started out for Spitzbergen early last fall have returned. The expeditions have been very successful and the total value of their trophies will amount to at least 500,000 crowns. The expeditions have brought back to Tromsoe, from whence they started, 46,800 sealskins, 320 bears, of which twenty-one are alive, 230 foxes and 248 reindeer.

Valstad, the well known artist, has blossomed out as an author, having recently published a very richly illustrated children's holiday story, which critics pronounce to be splendid. The book has proven exceedingly popular and thousands of copies have been disposed of at popular prices.

The Christiania Students' Male chorus, which visited America in 1905, is planning to celebrate its sixty-fifth anniversary some time during the holidays. They will give a grand concert, which will be attended by the elite of Christiania society and the king and queen.

The National Anti-Tuberculosis society has received a donation of 27,000 crowns from Hans Mustad and wife of Christiania. The society has received over 100,000 crowns in donations during the past year.

A new banking institution has been established at Egersund, which will be known as "Egersund and Dalenes Privatbank." It starts out with a capital of 150,000 crowns.

There are in all 1,800 architects and civil engineers in Norway at present. Nearly every one of these has completed their education abroad.

DENMARK.

The residents of the Danish West Indies have presented a petition to the Danish cabinet at Copenhagen asking that negotiations be opened for the sale of the islands to the United States. It is reported from the Danish capital that the governmental ministers are not disposed to be hostile to the suggestion, but it is not expected that they will take the initiative, as they would be almost certain to meet strong opposition in the riksdag. A similar proposition was brought up six years ago and was killed in the riksdag.

Whether or not the islands would be of much value to the United States it is quite apparent that the United States would be of more value to the islanders than would any other nation. There are three of them, St. Thomas, St. Croix and St. John, and they are about forty miles east of Porto Rico. They have an area of 138 square miles and a population of a little more than 30,000.

The islands are not prospering as the natives think they should. They are a long way from anywhere, excepting Porto Rico, and are too small to expect much attention from distant commercial centers. The natives, seeing the wonderful change that has taken place in Porto Rico under American rule, wish to share in the prosperity of their next door neighbors, hence the petition that the islands be sold to the United States.

The Chinese or golden pheasant has proved an exception to the general rule that imported game birds have not thriven under conditions which prevail in the United States. In the instance mentioned, however, the mild climate prevailing on the Pacific slope has furnished a very congenial home for the oriental bird, and it is increasing in numbers rapidly under the laws which have been passed for its protection.

It is estimated that floods and freshets in the United States do damage totaling fully $100,000,000 annually. Doubtless a part of this loss is unavoidable. All too great a part, however, is traceable to the wanton stripping and denuding of vast forest areas on creek and river watersheds. Unfortunately the cure—reforestation—can only be effected by a slow and tedious process which will call for much faith and painstaking labor.

With one pound of corn worth four pounds of potatoes in point of feeding value, a bushel of potatoes would be worth as feed just one-fourth of the price of a bushel of corn. Were this 60 cents the tubers would be worth for feeding purposes 15 cents. Potatoes make an excellent ration for hogs and when fed should be given in a ration of about twenty pounds of potatoes to ten of corn, with a pound of tankage to furnish the needed protein. If the corn is fed ground the tankage should be mixed with it and the potatoes fed raw, or all may be cooked and mixed if one is fixed for it.

In the enthusiasm of the very wholesome and commendable "back to the land" movement which is just now receiving a good deal of attention it may be in point to suggest that a large measure of success will hardly be achieved in a tillage of the soil or in horticultural lines by those who through lack of brains, initiative or energy have made a dismal failure of every other business enterprise in which they have embarked. The returns from agricultural and allied pursuits are generous, but only in proportion to intelligent, persistent and well directed effort. The realm of agriculture is no place for weaklings or incompetents.

On Nov. 30 there will be thrown open for entry in Alabama a considerable portion of land which was withdrawn in the year 1908 in the creation of the Alabama national forest. A portion of the total area has been appropriated under existing land laws, while other portions of considerable extent will be withheld from entry because supposed to be underlaid with valuable mineral deposits.

That the tendency of corn to sucker is due more to inherited tendency than to character of soil was nicely shown this season in the case of two varieties of corn which were planted side by side on the same soil and at the same time on the writer's ranch. One variety which was home grown was almost entirely free from the sucker forming tendency, while the other, an imported pedigreed seed, produced from two to four suckers for each stalk.

Eddystone Island.

The smallest inhabited island in the world is that on which the Eddystone lighthouse stands. At low water it is thirty feet in diameter. At high water the lighthouse, whose diameter at the base is eight and three-fourths feet, completely covers it. It is inhabited by three persons. It lies nine miles off the Cornish cost and fourteen miles southeast of Plymouth breakwater. Flatholme, an island in the British channel, is only a mile and a half in circumference, but, consisting mostly of rich pasture lands, supports a farmhouse besides the lighthouse, with a revolving light [illegible] feet above the sea. There are about 100,000 islands, large and small, scattered over the oceans. America alone has 5,500 around its coasts. There are [illegible] in the bay of Rio Janeiro, 16,000 between Madagascar and India and some 1,200 off the eastern coast of Australia between its mainland and New Guinea.

FUN THAT FAILED.

Mark Twain's Burlesque of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes.

IT SHOCKED THE IMMORTALS.

W. D. Howells' Description of the Dismal Effect of the Humorist's Attempt to Make Game of the Dignified Literary Trio at the Boston Dinner.

In his memories of Mark Twain in Harper's W. D. Howells tells of the dinner in Boston when Mark Twain, with fatal effect, made game of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes:

"He believed he had been particularly fortunate in his notion for the speech of that evening, and he had worked it out in joyous self reliance. It was the notion of three tramps, three deadbeats, visiting a California mining camp and imposing themselves upon the innocent miners as respectively Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Oliver Wendell Holmes. The humor of the conception must prosper or must fail according to the mood of the hearer, but Clemens felt sure of compelling this to sympathy, and he looked forward to an unparalleled triumph.

"But there were two things that he had not taken into account. One was the species of religious veneration in which these men were held by those nearest them. They were men of extraordinary dignity, of the thing called presence for want of some clearer word, so that no one could well approach them in a personally light or trifling spirit. I do not suppose that anybody more truly valued them or more piously loved them than Clemens himself, but the intoxication of his fancy carried him beyond the bounds of that regard and emboldened him to the other thing which he had not taken into account—namely, the immense hazard of working his fancy out before their faces and expecting them to enter into the delight of it. If neither Emerson nor Longfellow nor Holmes had been there the scheme might possibly have carried, but even this is doubtful.

"I was the hapless president, fulfilling the abhorred function of calling people to their feet and making them speak. When I came to Clemens I introduced him with the cordial admiration I had for him as one of my greatest contributors and dearest friends. Here, I said, in sum, was a humorist who never left you hanging your head for having enjoyed his joke, and then the amazing mistake, the bewildering blunder, the cruel catastrophe was upon us. I believe that after the scope of the burlesque made itself clear there was no one there, including the burlesquer himself, who was not smitten with a desolating dismay. There fell a silence, weighing many tons to the square inch, which deepened from moment to moment and was broken only by the hysterical and blood curdling laughter of a single guest, whose name shall not be handed down to infamy. Nobody knew whether to look at the speaker or down at his plate. I chose my plate as the least affliction, and so I do not know how Clemens looked, except when I stole a glance at him and saw him standing solitary amid his appalled and appalling listeners, with his joke dead on his hands. From a first glance at the great three whom his jest had made its theme, I was aware of Longfellow sitting upright and regarding the humorist with an air of pensive puzzle, of Holmes busily writing on his menu with a well feigned effect of preoccupation, and of Emerson holding his elbows and listening with a sort of Jovian oblivion of this nether world in that lapse of memory, which saved him in those later years from so much bother. Clemens must have dragged his joke to the climax and left it there, but I cannot say this from any sense of the fact. Of what happened afterward at the table where the immense, the wholly innocent, the truly unimagined affront was offered, I have no longer the least remembrance. I next remember being in a room of the hotel where Clemens was not to sleep, but to toss in despair and Charles Dudley Warner's saying in the gloom, 'Well, Mark! You're a funny fellow.' It was as well as anything he could have said, but Clemens seemed unable to accept the tribute.

"I stayed the night with him, and the next morning after a haggard breakfast we drove about, and he made some purchases of bric-a-brac for his house in Hartford, with a soul as far away from bric-a-brac as ever the soul of man was. He went home by an early train, and he lost no time in writing back to the three divine personalities which he had so involuntarily seemed to flout. They all wrote back to him, making it as light for him as they could. I have heard that Emerson was a good deal mystified and in his sublime forgetfulness asked, 'Who was this gentleman who appeared to think he had offered him some sort of annoyance?' But I am not sure that this is accurate. What I am sure of is that Longfellow a few days after in my study stopped before a photograph of Clemens and said, 'Ah, he is a wag!' and nothing more. Holmes told me, with deep emotion, such as a brother humorist might well feel, that he had not lost an instant in replying to Clemens' letter and assuring him that there had not been the least offense and entreating him never to think of the matter again. 'He said that he was a fool, but he was God's fool,' Holmes quoted from the letter with a true sense of the pathos and humor of the self abasement."

KILLING OCCURS AT DANCE

Young St. Cloud Man Shoots Barber After Quarrel.

As the result of a quarrel which started at a dance at St. Cloud Jack O'Brien, aged thirty, a journeyman barber, is dead and Harry Albrecht, aged twenty, son of well known St. Cloud people and proprietor of a restaurant in that city, is held in jail charged with the crime.

The men had quarreled early in the evening at the dance and later on, after apparently becoming pacified, Albrecht went downstairs to his place of business, where he secured an automatic 32-caliber revolver. On his return to the hall he met O'Brien on the stairs. It is said that O'Brien lunged for him when he saw him flourish the gun, but that Albrecht was too quick for him and shot him through the heart, later discharging another bullet into the prostrate man's body. O'Brien died almost instantly.

Considering the disastrous experience which a number of western fruit growers have had the past season through use of a lime-sulphur summer spray, it is safe they will give the subject some study this winter before applying the spray.

In the main, to be worth the price asked for it, land should yield net an annual crop return which will represent a fair interest return on investment price. If it does not do this it is on a speculative basis, which may or may not be well grounded.

A reader of an eastern agricultural paper recommends sprigs of arbor vitae, or white cedar, as an effective means of ridding the henhouse and nest boxes of lice. This may be the case, but the cautious poultryman will still keep his kerosene can and sack of sulphur handy.

A lot of farmers have considerable grief on their hands this fall in the shape of fields infested with noxious weeds of one kind or another through penny wise economy in the purchase of their grass seeds last spring. It seems to be a hard lesson to learn that there is nothing gained in the end by scrimping on the price of grass seeds, and the only way some fellows seem to be able to get the idea into their noddle is to have a dose of grief of the kind above referred to. Experience of this character is a mighty dear school, but there is a class of men who will learn in no other. The philosopher who originated the "experience is a dear school" epigram called them "fools."

In making plans for the new kitchen addition it is well to remember that it is just as easy to make the mistake of getting it too large as too small. Whatever else it is, it should be convenient, with as little space as possible just to chase around on and to keep mopped and swept. Of the improvements in the kitchen which have in view saving labor the most valuable will be an abundant water supply and drainage facilities from the sink which will do away with the necessity of emptying pails. If it is near the good wife's birthday she would appreciate no practical present more than a kitchen cabinet, which she will use every day in the year and which will save much time and many steps. There are other conveniences which may be included in the kitchen economy, but the three named will go a long way toward simplifying the work.

Warmth Not Wanted.

"This would be a pleasanter world if people put more warmth—genuine warmth—in their letters," said the man of sentiment.

"I don't agree with you," replied his worried friend, "there was a warmth about some of the business letters I got this morning that I didn't at all like."

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

Kenneth Clark, state treasurer of the National Red Cross society, reports that contributions now totaling $88,054 had been raised for the relief of the forest fire sufferers in Northern Minnesota. Of this amount about $25,000 has been expended. Mr. Clark said there was little hope of getting any more subscriptions and that if the money raised was not sufficient the legislature would be asked to make an appropriation.

Minnesota corporations paid into the United States treasury in the fiscal year 1910, ended June 30, the sum of $1,140,339.90, according to figures from the annual report of the commissioner of internal revenue. This money was turned over to the government under the terms of the new corporation tax law. Corporations in Minnesota to the number of 6,559 were made subject to taxation.

Minnesota again carried off highest honors at the International Live Stock show at Chicago. Ringmaster, the two-year-old bull raised by Smith and White of St. Cloud, won the grand championship. The same bull won the grand championship at the Minnesota state fair, at the North Dakota state fair and at the Winnipeg fair last summer.

Mrs. Perry Starkweather, assistant state commissioner of labor, will have a bill introduced into the next legislature providing for the appointment of women police officers to patrol the depots of the big cities, watch for homeless and friendless girls and see that they are guided to paths of safety.

John Zignego of Minneapolis, organ grinder, who died Nov. 19, left an estate of $30,000, accumulated touring the continent with a monkey and organ. Zignego left a portion of his fortune to charity and divided the balance among relatives.

During the December term of the Ramsey county district court a total of eighty-eight divorce cases are set for trial, which is seventeen more than were to be tried during the November term.

That 116 St. Paul children under the age of two years died last fall as a result of diseases attributed to the use of impure milk is the assertion of Dr. J. H. Armstrong, assistant commissioner of health.

The appointment of Andrew Fritz of St. Cloud as public examiner, when the term of Anton Schaefer expires early next year, has been officially announced by Governor Eberhart.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

John C. Welch was taken into custody at Stillwater on a bench warrant issued by the district court, in pursuance of an indictment alleging that as one of the judges of an election district of the Second ward at Stillwater at the primary election he wrongfully announced to the clerks of election a canvass of votes for county attorney, county superintendent of schools and city treasurer.

While three sons of August Spitzack, living northwest of Faribault, were playing with a loaded gun it was accidentally discharged, the load taking effect in an arm of their three-year-old sister. It was necessary to amputate the arm.

Mike Vovich, a miner employed at the Buffalo-Susquehanna mine at Hibbing, had his eyes so badly injured by a blast that he will never have the use of them again. The man's right arm was also fractured by the force of the explosion.

Mrs. W. L. Rittenour, wife of a farmer residing near Wheaton, was drowned in Mustinka river. A small hole had been cut in the ice where the stock was watered and either Mrs. Rittenour fell in or willfully committed suicide.

Inviting her five-year-old son to go with her, Mrs. G. Halverson of Granite Falls, who was released from the insane asylum at St. Peter recently, grabbed the child and pounded his head on a rock until she had fractured his skull.

Leland Whiting, twelve-year-old son of Charles Whiting of Clitherall, Otter Tail county, was drowned while skating across Lake Clitherall on his way home from school. He went into an air hole, drowning in fifteen feet of water.

Ben Ferman, who, it is alleged, shot and killed Mrs. Mina Altschuler in a room at the Willard hotel at St. Paul Nov. 22, has been indicted by the grand jury on a charge of murder in the first degree.

William Brannon, a farmer fifty-one years old, was run down by a Milwaukee freight train near Lamoille and killed.

MONEY IN QUACK GRASS LANDS.

About the last section of the country which one would think might be boomed by the real estate agent would seem to be a locality in which quack grass had gained a foothold, and yet the experience of one Minnesota farmer, whose case was related to us directly the other day, would seem to indicate that here was an opening for some energetic as well as patriotic real estate agent. The man in question lives in the vicinity of New Richland, Minn., a section which has been afflicted with quack, more or less—quite likely more—severely for the past fifteen or eighteen years. He cleared one eighty of the pest several years ago, and by dint of much vigilance has succeeded in keeping it clean. A year ago last August he bought another eighty adjoining the home place, which had been given over to quack grass for the preceding ten years. He paid $2,060 for it, or $25.75 per acre. Although it was late in the season before he could get at it, he plowed forty acres of it early in October, raked it with a special quack rake and burned the roots. Next he went over the piece with a quack root digger, gathering and burning all the roots which it was possible to reach. The next spring he planted corn on about twelve acres, oats on a third and wheat on the remainder. This fall he husked 800 bushels of fine corn from this twelve acres, and we know he did because we got the figures straight and have a sample of the corn before us. It is better corn than that raised on land which has been free from quack for years. He will tackle the other forty acres infested with the grass next season, and he figures that when he has given it the same treatment as he has the first forty he will not care to sell the eighty for less than $5,000, and if it is free from the pest it ought to be worth this price. It goes without saying that a fellow with flabby muscles, short in red blood or laking in courage will hardly want to tackle the redemption of this quack grass land, yet we believe there is a first class opportunity for the fellow who is made of the right stuff to get a good farm land at a low price. If he redeemed the land he will not only have added to his bank account, but served his neighborhood and country in a praiseworthy way.

SHOULD NOT BE STAMPEDED.

Straightway following election the big packers have announced that there is going to be a gradual decline in live stock prices. Since the wish in this case is father to the suggestion, because it will enable them to buy heavily on a declining market and thus enlarge their profits—and they seem abundantly able to carry out their wishes—it is fair to assume that the decline in prices will follow. Yet the less the feeders of the country are stampeded by the announcement and the less they yield to a very natural impulse to rush their stuff to a demoralized market the more money they will save in the end and the less will the packers profit by the coup which they have sprung. There can be a decline of $1.50 per hundredweight from present prices ($6 to $7) and yet be left a very satisfactory profit in feeding corn worth 35 to 40 cents per bushel. The man who is so fixed that he can do so would far better hold his hogs and steers, especially if they are unfinished, and sell them a few weeks later, when there is reason to believe that the market will have steadied from the present flurry. There are just as many hungry mouths to feed now as before election, and there is every reason to believe that the legitimate demands for meat product be just as strong as they

Tuberculosis is often induced by damp and filthy surroundings and badly ventilated sleeping quarters; hence the removal of these causes, if they exist, will contribute to the health of the herd.

A poser for those fond of making fine ethical distinctions: Does the egg laid by your neighbor's hen in your barn or woodshed rightfully belong to him or yourself, provided your garden and back yard furnish her food and your flower beds a dusting place?

Nine times out of ten it does not pay to monkey with really sick poultry. It is better to knock them on the head with a broomstick than to allow them to run indiscriminately with and infect the rest of the flock. Should the sick fowls recover they seldom pay their keep for months.

We went by a home the other night where the windows were all down tight—no provision made for a breath of fresh air—and where, to cap the climax, a kerosene lamp turned low was doing much to befoul what little air the house contained. Fresh air is a good deal cheaper than dirt, more health promoting than pills and tonic, and yet some folks are as afraid of it as death and a good deal more so than taxes.

There is no place where religion—that of deeds as well as words—needs putting into practice more than in the home. It should not only mean being kind and cheerful, keeping socks mended and buttons on the men's shirts, but having a supply of dry wood as near the kitchen stove as possible, kindling closer than the corncrib, a handy supply of water and easy means of disposing of the waste water. Any man who pretends to be a good man about the house, let alone being religious, is worse than—well, he's a pretty poor stick if he doesn't provide for these things.

While a complete outfit for determining the amount of butter fat in milk by the Babcock test will not cost over three or four dollars, a very fair idea can be got of what the individuals in the dairy herd are doing by sending average samples of milk from the several cows to the local creamery and having them tested there, a lift most any manager or buttermaker would be glad to give a patron. His test, whether showing a percentage of fat of 25 or 5 per cent, coupled with the amount of milk which each cow averages per day during her milking period, will be sufficient data from which to determine which the loafers are. The sooner this test is made the more money there will be in the bank, while a lot of profitless drudge work will be done away.

There's many a man in the north part of the corn belt who has a kindly feeling toward the variety of corn known as Bloody Butcher, which was used considerably in some sections for replanting fields where the larger variety of corn planted at the usual time did not germinate. In one instance which came to our notice some seed of this variety was planted on June 9 and in just sixty-eight days samples of firm dented corn were picked from the field. While we would not urge the planting of it in latitudes where a larger and more productive variety would mature well between spring and fall frosts, yet it answers a good purpose as an emergency variety where one needs corn for feeding purposes and does not want to

There are mighty few dogs that are so handsome that the owner is willing to have one of them around his back door and pay from $3 to $5 for the privilege. A number of towns we know have about extinguished the canine tribe by assessing just such a fine. It's a whole lot better than anonymous poison and works automatically.

Where it is possible to do so it is a good idea to place the semi-tropical plants such as the palm, sword fern, sprengeri and cactus as high on the plant stand as possible, this because of the fact that there is a difference of several degrees in a stove heated room between the air three feet and seven feet from the floor. One of the most beautiful and long fronded sword ferns we ever saw was given a high niche, and we do not doubt that the warmer upper air had something to do with its thriftiness.

A postmaster general—if we remember correctly it was John Wanamaker—said that the four chief reasons why a parcels post had not been adopted in this country were the American, Wells Fargo, Adams and United States Express companies, and these same reasons still persist and keep the people of the United States from having a decent parcels service when every other civilized country has the system in successful operation, and some of them more than a century. When the farmers of the country wake up and make a roar they will get what they want, but not before.

Among other means which may be employed to protect the trunks of young fruit trees from the attacks of mice and rabbits whitewash gives excellent results. A recipe for making it recommended by the Ohio experiment station is as follows: Slack one peck of fresh lime with old soapsuds, thin to the consistency of whitewash and stir in one gallon of crude carbolic acid, four pounds of sulphur and one gallon of soft soap. This wash should be applied with a brush and will not only prevent rodents from gnawing the trees, but will kill insects and promote the health of the bark.

—Owing to the scarcity of hay very generally through the north central states many a townsman who in years past has fed timothy, clover or alfalfa will have to feed instead shredded corn fodder, which has been put up in extra good condition this season. For the family cow this may be nicely balanced as a milk giving ration by feeding a quart of cornmeal, two quarts of bran and a double handful of oilmeal twice a day. This is sufficient for a cow giving from twelve to fifteen quarts of milk per day. If she is giving less than this the ration should be reduced proportionately. If ensilage is available and the ear corn was not removed when it was put up the same ration will suffice, leaving out the cornmeal.

There are now and then occasions when the circumstances seem to justify one in going to law, but they are few and far between. Especially is this true in equity cases, where property or money is involved and where a settlement could by all odds be best effected by arbitration and compromise. The folly of "lawing" it out willy nilly lies in the fact that before a settlement is effected in the court the chances are that the lawyers will have the bulk of the money or property that the litigrants are scrapping over. Folks who persist in "lawing" in this way are easy "pickin's" for the legal fraternity and those who contribute

Everywhere in Sweden the Holiday Spirit Predominates—Hundreds of Norwegian-Americans Return for Brief Visit to the Fatherland—Residents of Danish West Indies Anxious for Annexation to United States.

SWEDEN.

Perhaps no city in the world takes on such a decided holiday spirit and appearance as Stockholm. The stores are profusely decorated and so are the streets and statues. In the restaurants and cafes there is special music and in every nook and corner there is evidence that Christmas is nigh. In cottage and palace "jul" is celebrated like no other holiday throughout the entire year. The heart and purse strings are let loose and everybody believes in having a good time. In the country districts there is perhaps greater preparations than anywhere else for the great holiday. There it is the custom that the whole farm place must be cleaned up for the great holiday. Even the cattle, the pigs and the chickens are provided with extra bedding and the birds of the open air are fed with sheaves of wheat, which are raised on a long rail outside of the kitchen door. In the household there presents itself the busiest kind of a time before Christmas eve. The mother of the household is leading it all and her preparations during the preholidays encompass such a variety in the way of pastries and delicious victuals that it would be a fruitless job to attempt to describe it here. The Scandinavians celebrate Christmas eve above all. Christmas in Sweden is a thorough going affair. It lasts for at least twenty days and there is one party after another. Friends and relatives come together, enjoying the national songs and folk dances. There are special services in all the churches and from palace to cottage there is a scene of holiday activity that places the foreigner, who is fortunate enough to visit Sweden at this time of the year, in a perfect trance. Old stories and sayings come into play as never before and all these old customs are so rigidly observed that it would be impossible to dislodge them were a hundred years to pass again. Amidst it all reigns the good old Christmas cheer and the one who is not happy in Sweden during "yuletide" is missing his purpose as a human being.

Inasmuch as there has recently been great speculation as to the real condition of King Gustaf's health the Aftonbladet (Stockholm) has published a long report regarding the exact condition of his majesty's health. There is little doubt, too, that the king wanted to have all rumors pro and con regarding his health set at rest and so made a statement to the aforementioned paper direct. The truth of the matter is that the king during the past few months has been gaining steadily in strength and has even been able to take long tramps in the woods and enjoyed hunting small game exceedingly much. "His health now," says the Aftonbladet, "judging from what his closest physicians have told us, is the very best and he has not been as strong as he is now for years."

A lady who desires to remain unidentified has donated the sum of 500 crowns to the National Anti-Tuberculosis society. She is a Stockholm lady and states in her letter to the board of directors of the society that she hopes to give the same amount annually, as long as she lives. Sweden is certainly setting an example in the work that is being done to check the ravages of consumption and to build up her sanitariums. Almost every day there is some money coming in, either in large or small amounts, and the sale of holiday stamps by the Anti-Tuberculosis society last year amounted to over 150,000 crowns. These are splendid results indeed for a small country like Sweden and other countries would do well to follow suit.

At the recent state church convention in Stockholm the well known Dr. Waldenstrom moved that state authorities take the necessary steps to prevent Mormon missionaries, who are not citizens of Sweden, from carrying on their propaganda in that country. It is needless to say that the motion met with general approval and was unanimously supported and adopted.

There are plenty of horses in the Swedish capital in spite of the fact that automobiles have been increasing in number at a rapid rate. There are in all 5,595 horses, military and police department horses excluded.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary in Stockholm Nov. 30. There were present on this occasion over 500 prominent women from different parts of the country.

The "holy week" set aside by the Salvation Army for the purpose of soliciting funds for the poor of Stockholm for the holidays netted the neat sum of 115,000 crowns.

NORWAY.

Hundreds of Norwegian-Americans have arrived to celebrate the holidays with the good folks at home. Many of the home returning visitors are coming for the first time since they left for America and one might imagine how many happy family reunions there will be all over the country. Some of the sons and daughters who left for the land in the Far West many years ago will, however, find upon their return that many of their friends and relatives are dead and many is the son and daughter who will arrive just in time to see a dying mother or father. These annual Christmas visits on the part of Norwegian-Americans have their joyful sides as well as their sad ones. The Norwegian-American is a more welcome guest at home than he was a number of years ago, for the popular mind in Norway is not so prejudiced against him as it was.

The Norwegian traffic director has returned from England, where he attended a conference in London between representatives of the English telegraph companies and the representatives of the Northern Telegraph company. As a result of this conference Norway and England will have full and independent control of the cable between Egersund and Peterhead. Through this arrangement Norway will have her own direct cable communication with England. The tax per word from Jan. 1 will be 11 ore.

Severe snow storms and cold weather have caused a great deal of delay to all railway traffic along the Bergen and Trondhjem railways and several of the through trains were stuck in the snow and were completely at the mercy of the storm for a couple of days. A large number of coast steamers have been unable to reach harbor and it is feared that many lives may have been lost. Telegraph and telephone wires are down and all communications were completely crippled for several days.

The Eids Forest association has purchased the large forests which have for the past few years been in the possession of the Swedish Jossefors and Charlottenberg Lumber companies. The price paid was 1,500,000 crowns. The same association has also purchased the Koppom paper mill's holdings for 151,000 crowns. The acquired forest tract is regarded as exceptionally valuable and undoubtedly millions of crowns will be realized from it by the association.

Nearly all the hunting expeditions which started out for Spitzbergen early last fall have returned. The expeditions have been very successful and the total value of their trophies will amount to at least 500,000 crowns. The expeditions have brought back to Tromsoe, from whence they started, 46,800 sealskins, 320 bears, of which twenty-one are alive, 230 foxes and 248 reindeer.

Valstad, the well known artist, has blossomed out as an author, having recently published a very richly illustrated children's holiday story, which critics pronounce to be splendid. The book has proven exceedingly popular and thousands of copies have been disposed of at popular prices.

The Christiania Students' Male chorus, which visited America in 1905, is planning to celebrate its sixty-fifth anniversary some time during the holidays. They will give a grand concert, which will be attended by the elite of Christiania society and the king and queen.

The National Anti-Tuberculosis society has received a donation of 27,000 crowns from Hans Mustad and wife of Christiania. The society has received over 100,000 crowns in donations during the past year.

A new banking institution has been established at Egersund, which will be known as "Egersund and Dalenes Privatbank." It starts out with a capital of 150,000 crowns.

There are in all 1,800 architects and civil engineers in Norway at present. Nearly every one of these has completed their education abroad.

DENMARK.

The residents of the Danish West Indies have presented a petition to the Danish cabinet at Copenhagen asking that negotiations be opened for the sale of the islands to the United States. It is reported from the Danish capital that the governmental ministers are not disposed to be hostile to the suggestion, but it is not expected that they will take the initiative as they would be almost certain to meet strong opposition in the riksdag. A similar proposition was brought up six years ago and was killed in the riksdag.

Whether or not the islands would be of much value to the United States it is quite apparent that the United States would be of more value to the islanders than would any other nation. There are three of them, St. Thomas, St. Croix and St. John, and they are about forty miles east of Porto Rico. They have an area of 138 square miles and a population of a little more than 30,000.

The islands are not prospering as the natives think they should. They are a long way from anywhere, excepting Porto Rico, and are too small to expect much attention from distant commercial centers. The natives seeing the wonderful change that has taken place in Porto Rico under American rule, wish to share in the prosperity of their next door neighbor, hence the petition that the islands be sold to the United States.

The Chinese or golden pheasant has proved an exception to the general rule that imported game birds have not thriven under conditions which prevail in the United States. In the instance mentioned, however, the mild climate prevailing on the Pacific slope has furnished a very congenial home for the oriental bird, and it is increasing in numbers rapidly under the laws which have been passed for its protection.

It is estimated that floods and freshets in the United States do damage totaling fully $100,000,000 annually. Doubtless a part of this loss is unavoidable. All too great a part, however, is traceable to the wanton stripping and denuding of vast forest areas on creek and river watersheds. Unfortunately the cure—reforestation—can only be effected by a slow and tedious process which will call for much faith and painstaking labor.

With one pound of corn worth four pounds of potatoes in point of feeding value, a bushel of potatoes would be worth as feed just one-fourth of the price of a bushel of corn. Were this 60 cents the tubers would be worth for feeding purposes 15 cents. Potatoes make an excellent ration for hogs and when fed should be given in a ration of about twenty pounds of potatoes to ten of corn, with a pound of tankage to furnish the needed protein. If the corn is fed ground the tankage should be mixed with it and the potatoes fed raw, or all may be cooked and mixed if one is fixed for it.

In the enthusiasm of the very wholesome and commendable "back to the land" movement which is just now receiving a good deal of attention it may be in point to suggest that a large measure of success will hardly be achieved in a tillage of the soil or in horticultural lines by those who through lack of brains, initiative or energy have made a dismal failure of every other business enterprise in which they have embarked. The returns from agricultural and allied pursuits are generous, but only in proportion to intelligent, persistent and well directed effort. The realm of agriculture is no place for weaklings or incompetents.

On Nov. 30 there will be thrown open for entry in Alabama a considerable portion of land which was withdrawn in the year 1908 in the creation of the Alabama national forest. A portion of the total area has been appropriated under existing land laws, while other portions of considerable extent will be withheld from entry because supposed to be underlaid with valuable mineral deposits.

That the tendency of corn to sucker is due more to inherited tendency than to character of soil was nicely shown this season in the case of two varieties of corn which were planted side by side on the same soil and at the same time on the writer's ranch. One variety which was home grown was almost entirely free from the sucker forming tendency, while the other, an imported pedigreed seed, produced from two to four suckers for each stalk.

A Possible Remedy.

"The ocean doesn't seem to agree with you," consoled the ship's doctor, who had prescribed everything conceivable.

Eddystone Island.

The smallest inhabited island in the world is that on which the Eddystone lighthouse stands. At low water it is thirty feet in diameter. At high water the lighthouse, whose diameter at the base is eight and three-fourths feet, completely covers it. It is inhabited by three persons. It lies nine miles off the Cornish cost and fourteen miles southeast of Plymouth breakwater. Flatholme, an island in the British channel, is only a mile and a half in circumference, but, consisting mostly of rich pasture lands, supports a farmhouse besides the lighthouse, with a revolving light 156 feet above the sea. There are about 100,000 islands, large and small, scattered over the oceans. America alone has 5,500 around its coasts. There are 365 in the bay of Rio Janeiro, 16,000 between Madagascar and India and some 1,207 off the eastern coast of Australia between its mainland and New Guinea.

FUN THAT FAILED.

Mark Twain's Burlesque of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes.

IT SHOCKED THE IMMORTALS.

W. D. Howells' Description of the Dismal Effect of the Humorist's Attempt to Make Game of the Dignified Literary Trio at the Boston Dinner.

In his memories of Mark Twain in Harper's W. D. Howells tells of the dinner in Boston when Mark Twain, with fatal effect, made game of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes:

"He believed he had been particularly fortunate in his notion for the speech of that evening, and he had worked it out in joyous self reliance. It was the notion of three tramps, three deadbeats, visiting a California mining camp and imposing themselves upon the innocent miners as respectively Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Oliver Wendell Holmes. The humor of the conception must prosper or must fail according to the mood of the hearer, but Clemens felt sure of compelling this to sympathy, and he looked forward to an unparalleled triumph.

"But there were two things that he had not taken into account. One was the species of religious veneration in which these men were held by those nearest them. They were men of extraordinary dignity, of the thing called presence for want of some clearer word, so that no one could well approach them in a personally light or trifling spirit. I do not suppose that anybody more truly valued them or more piously loved them than Clemens himself, but the intoxication of his fancy carried him beyond the bounds of that regard and emboldened him to the other thing which he had not taken into account—namely, the immense hazard of working his fancy out before their faces and expecting them to enter into the delight of it. If neither Emerson nor Longfellow nor Holmes had been there the scheme might possibly have carried, but even this is doubtful.

"I was the hapless president, fulfilling the abhorred function of calling people to their feet and making them speak. When I came to Clemens I introduced him with the cordial admiration I had for him as one of my greatest contributors and dearest friends. Here, I said, in sum, was a humorist who never left you hanging your head for having enjoyed his joke, and then the amazing mistake, the bewildering blunder, the cruel catastrophe was upon us. I believe that after the scope of the burlesque made itself clear there was no one there, including the burlesquer himself, who was not smitten with a desolating dismay. There fell a silence, weighing many tons to the square inch, which deepened from moment to moment and was broken only by the hysterical and blood curdling laughter of a single guest, whose name shall not be handed down to infamy. Nobody knew whether to look at the speaker or down at his plate. I chose my plate as the least affliction, and so I do not know how Clemens looked, except when I stole a glance at him and saw him standing solitary amid his appalled and appalling listeners, with his joke dead on his hands. From a first glance at the great three whom his jest had made its theme, I was aware of Longfellow sitting upright and regarding the humorist with an air of pensive puzzle, of Holmes busily writing on his menu with a well feigned effect of preoccupation, and of Emerson holding his elbows and listening with a sort of Jovian oblivion of this nether world in that lapse of memory which saved him in those later years from so much bother. Clemens must have dragged his joke to the climax and left it there, but I cannot say this from any sense of the fact. Of what happened afterward at the table where the immense, the wholly innocent, the truly unimagined affront was offered, I have no longer the least remembrance. I next remember being in a room of the hotel where Clemens was not to sleep, but to toss in despair and Charles Dudley Warner's saying in the gloom, 'Well, Mark! You're a funny fellow.' It was as well as anything he could have said, but Clemens seemed unable to accept the tribute.

"I stayed the night with him, and the next morning after a haggard breakfast we drove about, and he made some purchases of bric-a-brac for his house in Hartford, with a soul as far away from bric-a-brac as ever the soul of man was. He went home by an early train, and he lost no time in writing back to the three divine personalities which he had so involuntarily seemed to flout. They all wrote back to him, making it as light for him as they could. I have heard that Emerson was a good deal mystified and in his sublime forgetfulness asked, 'Who was this gentleman who appeared to think he had offered him some sort of annoyance?' But I am not sure that this is accurate. What I am sure of is that Longfellow a few days after in my study stopped before a photograph of Clemens and said, 'Ah, he is a wag!' and nothing more. Holmes told me, with deep emotion, such as a brother humorist might well feel, that he had not lost an instant in replying to Clemens' letter and assuring him that there had not been the least offense and entreating him never to think of the matter again. 'He said that he was a fool, but he was God's fool.' Holmes quoted from the letter with a true sense of the pathos and humor of the self abasement."

KILLING OCCURS AT DANCE

Young St. Cloud Man Shoots Barber After Quarrel.

As the result of a quarrel which started at a dance at St. Cloud Jack O'Brien, aged thirty, a journeyman barber, is dead and Harry Albrecht, aged twenty, son of well known St. Cloud people and proprietor of a restaurant in that city, is held in jail charged with the crime.

The men had quarreled early in the evening at the dance and later on, after apparently becoming pacified, Albrecht went downstairs to his place of business, where he secured an automatic 32-caliber revolver. On his return to the hall he met O'Brien on the stairs. It is said that O'Brien lunged for him when he saw him flourish the gun, but that Albrecht was too quick for him and shot him through the heart, later discharging another bullet into the prostrate man's body. O'Brien died almost instantly.

Considering the disastrous experience which a number of western fruit growers have had the past season through use of a lime-sulphur summer spray, it is safe they will give the subject some study this winter before applying the spray.

In the main, to be worth the price asked for it, land should yield net an annual crop return which will represent a fair interest return on investment price. If it does not do this it is on a speculative basis, which may or may not be well grounded.

A reader of an eastern agricultural paper recommends sprigs of arbor vitae, or white cedar, as an effective means of ridding the henhouse and nest boxes of lice. This may be the case, but the cautious poultryman will still keep his kerosene can and sack of sulphur handy.

A lot of farmers have considerable grief on their hands this fall in the shape of fields infested with noxious weeds of one kind or another through penny wise economy in the purchase of their grass seeds last spring. It seems to be a hard lesson to learn that there is nothing gained in the end by scrimping on the price of grass seeds, and the only way some fellows seem to be able to get the idea into their noddle is to have a dose of grief of the kind above referred to. Experience of this character is a mighty dear school, but there is a class of men who will learn in no other. The philosopher who originated the "experience is a dear school" epigram called them "fools."

In making plans for the new kitchen addition it is well to remember that it is just as easy to make the mistake of getting it too large as too small. Whatever else it is, it should be convenient, with as little space as possible just to chase around on and to keep mopped and swept. Of the improvements in the kitchen which have in view saving labor the most valuable will be an abundant water supply and drainage facilities from the sink which will do away with the necessity of emptying pails. If it is near the good wife's birthday she would appreciate no practical present more than a kitchen cabinet, which she will use every day in the year and which will save much time and many steps. There are other conveniences which may be included in the kitchen economy, but the three named will go a long way toward simplifying the work.

Warmth Not Wanted.

"This would be a pleasanter world if people put more warmth—genuine warmth—in their letters," said the man of sentiment.

"I don't agree with you," replied his worried friend, "there was a warmth about some of the business letters I got this morning that I didn't at all like."

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota

Kenneth Clark, state treasurer of the National Red Cross society, reports that contributions now totaling $88,054 had been raised for the relief of the forest fire sufferers in Northern Minnesota. Of this amount about $25,000 has been expended. Mr. Clark said there was little hope of getting any more subscriptions and that if the money raised was not sufficient the legislature would be asked to make an appropriation.

Minnesota corporations paid into the United States treasury in the fiscal year 1910, ended June 30, the sum of $1,140,339.90, according to figures from the annual report of the commissioner of internal revenue. This money was turned over to the government under the terms of the new corporation tax law. Corporations in Minnesota to the number of 6,559 were made subject to taxation.

Minnesota again carried off highest honors at the International Live Stock show at Chicago. Ringmaster, the two-year-old bull raised by Smith and White of St. Cloud, won the grand championship. The same bull won the grand championship at the Minnesota state fair, at the North Dakota state fair and at the Winnipeg fair last summer.

Mrs. Perry Starkweather, assistant state commissioner of labor, will have a bill introduced into the next legislature providing for the appointment of women police officers to patrol the depots of the big cities, watch for homeless and friendless girls and see that they are guided to paths of safety.

John Zignego of Minneapolis, organ grinder, who died Nov. 19, left an estate of $30,000, accumulated touring the continent with a monkey and organ. Zignego left a portion of his fortune to charity and divided the balance among relatives.

During the December term of the Ramsey county district court a total of eighty-eight divorce cases are set for trial, which is seventeen more than were to be tried during the November term.

That 116 St. Paul children under the age of two years died last fall as a result of diseases attributed to the use of impure milk is the assertion of Dr. J. H. Armstrong, assistant commissioner of health.

The appointment of Andrew Fritz of St. Cloud as public examiner, when the term of Anton Schaefer expires early next year, has been officially announced by Governor Eberhart.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

John C. Welch was taken into custody at Stillwater on a bench warrant issued by the district court, in pursuance of an indictment alleging that as one of the judges of an election district of the Second ward at Stillwater at the primary election he wrongfully announced to the clerks of election a canvass of votes for county attorney, county superintendent of schools and city treasurer.

While three sons of August Spitzack, living northwest of Faribault, were playing with a loaded gun it was accidentally discharged, the load taking effect in an arm of their three-year-old sister. It was necessary to amputate the arm.

Mike Vovich, a miner employed at the Buffalo-Susquehanna mine at Hibbing, had his eyes so badly injured by a blast that he will never have the use of them again. The man's right arm was also fractured by the force of the explosion.

Mrs. W. L. Rittenour, wife of a farmer residing near Wheaton, was drowned in Mustinka river. A small hole had been cut in the ice where the stock was watered and either Mrs. Rittenour fell in or willfully committed suicide.

Inviting her five-year-old son to go with her, Mrs. G. Halverson of Granite Falls, who was released from the insane asylum at St. Peter recently, grabbed the child and pounded his head on a rock until she had fractured his skull.

Leland Whiting, twelve-year-old son of Charles Whiting of Clitherall, Otter Tail county, was drowned while skating across Lake Clitherall on his way home from school. He went into an air hole, drowning in fifteen feet of water.

Ben Forman, who, it is alleged, shot and killed Mrs. Mina Altschuler in a room at the Willard hotel at St. Paul Nov. 22, has been indicted by the grand jury on a charge of murder in the first degree.

William Brannon, a farmer fifty-one years old, was run down by a Milwaukee freight train near Lamoille and killed.

WHAT TWO STUDENTS DID.

As showing that the instruction that is given at the agricultural colleges is of a practical and valuable kind may be cited the case of two Minnesota young men. One after finishing his course at the state school took up the raising of potatoes on a scientific scale. On 200 acres, which was a virgin prairie a half dozen years ago, he raised last season (1909) an average of 187 bushels to the acre, from which he realized net $10,000. This year he expected to increase his yield to 200 bushels and to get just as large a net revenue. To do what this young fellow did took brains and hustle. The other graduate of the same institution started five years ago with $500. He went into debt $11,500 for a 240 acre farm. He also had hustle and brains. Now he has property valued at $12,500. In the interval mentioned he has paid $1,000 a year in interest, spent $1,000 on buildings, has pure bred horses, cattle and swine worth $5,000, and he holds that his farm has increased $10 an acre in value, which it must be admitted is a conservative estimate. The book farming he learned at the agricultural college he put to good account, his wheat averaging ten bushels more per acre than his neighbor's, whose soil was just as good. These instances may be termed by some exceptional, yet they show nicely what a fellow can do if he is equipped for his work and takes hold of it with determination.

ONE CAUSE OF HIGH PRICED MEATS.

While the prevailing high prices for all commodities have doubtless been in a large measure due to a price inflation which has been worldwide, there is little question that a very important factor in causing high prices of meats has been due to the rapid cutting up of considerable range areas of the western plain and mountain sites through settlement by homesteaders. This settlement, which is going on more rapidly today than ever, means that the day of the vigorous range sheep and cattle, which were eagerly bought and shipped to points farther east for feeding, is fast passing and that ere long the territory which heretofore has been raising the feed with which to fatten these cattle will also have to breed and rear its own fattening animals. Taking into account that this will have to be done on high priced land, it means that higher prices are bound to prevail for cattle and sheep, whatever fluctuations from month to month may be, due to stockyard receipts. Corn belt should keep this situation in mind and be ready for it.

DO MOLES EAT GRAIN?

There has been considerable discussion over the question whether the mole is entirely an insectivorous animal or whether its bill of fare includes besides insects some grain. To settle this question one of the instructors in the Michigan agricultural college put a mole in a box of fresh earth in which some twenty kernels of corn were placed in four or five places. At the end of thirty-six hours it was found that all of the corn had been searched out and devoured, and there was no getting around the fact that the mole was responsible. This experiment tends to prove the claim of some that when a mole follows a row of corn he is not only after insects which may have been attracted by the presence of the seed, but the seed itself. It is a matter of common observation that when the mole can get all the big, white, juicy grubs he wants he does not seem to care for or molest anything else, but it is more than likely when these are not to be had he goes after other insects and grain if he can locate it.

WATER IN THE HOUSE.

In response to 600 queries sent out by the country life commission a couple of years ago, asking what one thing would be of most interest to farm life from the standpoint of the housewife, some 350 replies mentioned first "water in the house." Considering the distance some farm women have to go for water and the amount of it they have to carry in twenty-four hours, we guess these good housewives hit the nail on the head. The lack is one that ought to be remedied by digging a well nearer the house or moving the house nearer the well. Better than either of these is the installation of a tank and pipe system which will make it possible to have water on tap in the kitchen all the time, while the installation of a galvanized tank connected with a water front in the kitchen stove will mean that hot water will be under faucet all the time, thus doing away with much of the teakettle nuisance. Properly arranged, the same system may be used to furnish water for the stock in the barn.

In the purchase of cows for the dairy herd the cow is of vastly more importance than the price paid for her. To many men a cow is a cow and one worth no more than another. Yet when you get down to hardpan one cow for dairy purposes may be worth four or five times as much on a cash revenue basis as another that outwardly seems to be as good looking and be cheap at $80 or even $100, where the other wouldn't be worth a cent more than she would fetch as butcher's stock.

The fellow who goes with hair and beard untrimmed, dirt on his neck and in his ears, belongs exactly to the same class as the woman who goes about the house in a dirty, slovenly old wrapper when one neat and clean would not cost a cent more. Both are sinners and should repent—should clean up and try to make themselves as winsome and attractive as possible. A little gumption and the same amount of soap won't remove freckles, cure a hair lip or make over ugly features, but they will go a long way toward making a pretty unlovely individual look clean and presentable.

More boys go to the bad every year because they are not made to feel that they amount to something than from any other cause. The ball is started to rolling when they are little fellows and treated as if they were all round nuisances, and it's kept up until the job is finished. Those who have a hand in this process of degeneration apparently forget that the boys (and girls) are the best asset the country has, not excepting all the blue ribbon winners at the big stock shows. Give the boys something to do and try to cultivate in them a feeling that they amount to something in the busy workaday life and many of them will be saved from failure and utter misery

Kids that are allowed the run of all outdoors will get their hands and faces dirty, but for their own sakes and the reputation of the place they call home they ought to be cleaned up at least once a day and be given an all over warm water bath once or twice a week—twice won't hurt 'em any. We saw some forlorn little heathen the other day that but for the fact that they stood on their hind legs might have been little pigs right out of the pen or kittens from an ash barrel. When the good Lord ordained lye and grease he made soap possible and probably intended when six or eight bars can be had for a quarter that parents should use enough of it to keep their kiddies clean.

There's many a man engaged in tilling the soil who is wont to poke fun at the agricultural college professors and lead pencil farming in general, has got up at 4 a. m. to do chores and has wound up with them at bedtime and has literally grown gray headed at the farming business, who has not up to the present time learned the simplest and most important truth in agriculture—that a fellow can't keep skinning his land year after year in the raising and selling of raw grain products and not have his good acres become destitute and impoverished any more than he can lift himself by pulling on his boot straps or make water run uphill. The fact is if the lead pencil were used by more farmers in simple processes of addition and subtraction in the several lines of farm work there would be more profits on paper and in the bank at the end of the year.

The state of Wisconsin has a law which went into effect Dec. 1 of the present year which makes it unlawful to sell or otherwise transfer any bull, sow or heifer over six months old for other than breeding purposes or to export from the state or slaughter any animals unless the same shall have within a period of two years prior to such sale been tuberculin tested by some competent person approved by the state sanitary live stock board and been found free from tuberculosis. This law, which should be used as a pattern in other states, is supplemented by a state dairy law which makes unlawful the sale of milk and cream from diseased animals. In case the test applied shows animals are affected with tuberculosis the owner on their being slaughtered receives three-fourths of the appraised value, which in no case shall exceed $55, while if no lesions of tuberculosis are found on slaughtering the full appraised value of the carcass is received.

If the average country plunger on the board of trade—more exactly, the fellow who sends his money to city commission men for investment in wheat or corn or pork or what not—could see the degree of affluence in which these fellows live, who neither toil nor spin, he would be a whole lot slower than he usually is in playing a game in which he usually gets plucked before he gets through. It's a bit slower and laborious making coin by swilling pigs and milking cows, but lots safer and surer in the long run.

Many a farmer planning to embark in the dairy business asks himself the question, "What is the best breed for me to keep?" If he has no special individual preference it will probably be best for him to select a breed of which there are the most representatives in his locality. Splendid results have been had with all of the leading dairy breeds, which in the last analysis means that success in dairying depends considerably more upon the man and the care he gives his cows than upon the breed chosen.

There's many a housewife who covers a cycle of twenty-four hours in the making of a batch of bread and who is never sure when she starts it what kind of a loaf she is going to take out of the oven. In many cases failure is due to the method, sometimes the flour and doubtless more often to poor yeast, from which it is as difficult to make good bread as a whistle out of a pig's tail. Bread made from live potato yeast, started with a fresh yeast cake or compressed yeast, can be made at 7 a. m. and baked with the dinner fire, and, more than this, if simple directions are followed the baked loaf will be uniformly sweet and light.

The slender wheat grass found in a number of the mountain states is a cousin of the quack grass. The seed heads closely resemble those of the quack grass, but are borne on longer stalks. The plant is a perennial—lives from year to year by means of its root system, but does not have running root stalks, which make quack grass such a persistent pest. The wheat grass starts early in the spring, producing a good growth of fine, tender leaves, which are greatly relished. As hay it is said to be equal to timothy. As pasture and hay grass it would seem to possess qualities which ought to commend it, especially where the rainfall is short.

The terrapin scale, closely allied in both appearance and habit and the injury which inflicts to the San Jose or Chinese scale, is quite generally distributed over the east half of the United States. Like the latter, it is imported, coming from Europe, its original home, on nursery stock. The most valuable parasitic aid in keeping the pest in check is a small four winged fly. Somewhat strangely, the lime-sulphur wash, so effective in keeping the San Jose scale in check is worthless when used for the terrapin scale. Experiments which have been made show that the only effective spray is the kerosene emulsion made after the usual formula and applied under good pressure as a fine spray.

One of the few orchardists in the upper Mississippi-Missouri valley region who will this year market a crop of apples is C. E. Miner, in Fremont, the southwest county of Iowa. The value of the crop, which has been gathered within the past few days, is placed at close to $10,000. He has this yield not by chance, but because he adopted western methods of orchard care and precaution and last spring smudged his orchard with crude petroleum in fire pots designed for the purpose. Last April during the memorable freeze a thousand oil pots were kept blazing in this orchard, and things were adrip in the orchard while the thermometer registered as low as 22 degrees Fahrenheit outside. This cost a nice sum of money, but it was worth the petroleum, the returns in apple sales compensating for the outlay many times over. This man's success in the instance cited is just another example of what can be accomplished where determination and intelligence are combined to effect the accomplishment of a given object.

Remarkable Violin Test.

An ingenious test of old and new violins, in which an instrument of modern make was voted the finest, has been made in Paris. During the performance both critics and performers were in complete darkness, so that it was impossible to see which one of the seven violins selected for the test was being played. Then immediately after being used the instrument was placed under a cloth, and the lights were turned on for a few moments to enable the critics to write down the votes. All the violins were played by two musicians of high standing, and the compositions were written especially for the test. The two violinists tried to bring out the best in each violin, and the result, decided by the votes, was interesting. The modern make of violin led the list with 102 votes, and its nearest rival for favor was a Stradivarius with 96 votes. Other old and famous makes of violins received 82, 85, 83, 82 and 80.—London Telegraph.

Tender Hearted Maid.

Once upon a time there lived a child of gentle mien and manners mild; she was so tender and so kind she wept to see window blind. She feared it might give the window pain to leave it standing in the rain. Her maiden aunty she would beg not to stone raisins, beat an egg, or from potatoes take the eyes. Oh, how this maid did agonize! And when she saw her whipping cream with horor she would sob and scream. The very thought of killing time appeared to her a dreadful crime, and, though to music she inclined, to beat a measure seemed unkind. To see the cowslip by the river with apprehension made her shiver; to cut a page or turn it down would cause a deprecating frown. And when she saw them shivering in the chill autumn air she knitted stockings for the trees because their limbs were bare. Her heart so oft with anguish wrung caused this poor maid to die quite young.—Widow.

Cliff of Natural Glass.

A cliff of natural glass can be seen in Yellowstone park. It is half a mile long and from 150 to 200 feet high, the material of which it consists being as good glass as that artificially manufactured. The dense glass which forms the base is from seventy-five to a hundred feet thick, while the upper portion, having suffered and survived many ages of wind and rain, has naturally worn much thinner. Of course the color of the cliff is not that of natural glass—transparent and white—but is mostly black and in some places mottled and streaked with brownish red and shades of olive green and brown.

POLICE OF GERMANY.

Privacy of the Home No Bar to Their Farreaching Authority.

To a foreigner no feature of German life is more striking than the prominence and almost unlimited authority of the police. Many of its functions are such as in the United States would be intrusted only to a court of law. What seems almost equally strange, the greater part of these functions are exercised quite independently of the local government.

The minuteness and thoroughness of the work of the German police are a constant surprise to the foreigner. The policeman not only preserves order in the streets, but exercises a farreaching authority in private houses. For instance, he undertakes the nightly locking of one's street door at a sufficiently early hour. He sees that one has his chimney regularly cleaned. He inspects at stated times one's stoves and heating apparatus, and while he is about it he will look into a few other matters of domestic economy.

One feature of his activity strikes a good many American visitors with favor. In some places singing and piano playing with open windows are forbidden, and it is a common house regulation in large towns that no pianos may be played after 10 o'clock in the evening. The German policeman is also something of a food inspector in his way, and he keeps a sharp eye on venders of food and of medicines. It is not an uncommon sight to see a German policeman halt a milkman's wagon and on the spot make an inspection of his wares. Should there prove to be anything wrong with them they are promptly seized and destroyed and the matter is immediately taken in hand by the higher authorities.—New York Press.

A BATHLESS AGE.

For a Thousand Years the People of Europe Went Unwashed.

When Egypt, Greece and Rome were at the height of their ancient power their citizens made bathing a social function, a municipal duty and a religious observance. The public baths of these nations were magnificent architecturally and important as centers of hygienic and municipal sentiment.

With the decadence of these countries the world seems to have reverted to a period of mental sloth and physical uncleanliness. As an authority on the matter puts it:

"For 1,000 years there was not a man or woman in Europe that ever took a bath, if the historian of these times, Michelet, is to be believed. The ancient love of the bath seemed to have disappeared from off the land.

"There was no Greece or Rome to hold up the ensign of cleanliness to the nations of Europe. Small wonder that the people of the continent became physical decadents, as indeed they were in spite of tradition to the contrary.

"It is not strange that there came the awful epidemics that cut off one-fourth of the population of Europe—the spotted plague, the black death, the sweating sickness and the terrible mental epidemics that followed in their train—the dancing mania, the mewing mania and the biting mania.

"The bath was banished and filth was almost deified. Indeed, it was then thought that the sanctification of the body was only accomplished when that body was indescribably dirty."—Physical Culture.

Exclusive.

At an evangelistic service at Glasgow the preacher at the end of his address cried, "Now, all you good people who mean to go to heaven with me, stand up!" With a surge of enthusiasm the audience sprang to its feet, all but an old Scotchman in the front row, who sat still. The horrified evangelist wrung his hands and, addressing him, said, "My good man, my good man, don't you want to go to heaven?"

Clear and deliberate came the answer, "Aye, Awm gangin, but no wi' a pairsonally conducted pairty!"—St. James Gazette.

Kindly Fruits.

The expression in the prayer book "Kindly fruits of the earth" has for most persons no definite meaning on account of the difference in significance now attached to the word kindly from that used when the expression was first written. The word kindly in that connection meant as nearly as possible "of its kind," and the expression "kindly fruits of the earth" meant "the fruits of the earth each after its kind."

Why Waste His Breath?

Teacher—Now, Tommy, suppose you had two apples and you gave another boy his choice of them. You would tell him to take the bigger one, wouldn't you? Tommy—No, mum. Teacher—Why? Tommy—'Cos 'twouldn't be necessary.—Suburban Life.

Fairly Warned.

He—My dear, I can't afford to buy you that hat. She—Still, you'd save money if you did. He—How so? She—Because I'll just be ill if I don't have it, and you know what doctors' bills are.

Hit Both Ways.

"It ain't no fun bein' a kid," observed a boy bitterly. "You always hafter go to bed when you ain't sleepy an' git up when you are."—Toledo Blade.

FAVORS EARLY CLOSING PLAN

Many Stores In This City Sign Petition for Early Closing Hours.

The Stores Will Henceforth Be Closed at 6:30 P. M.

Commencing last Monday night the local stores are closed at 6:30 p. m. instead of 9 o'clock as has been customary for some time past. A petition was circulated last week among the leading merchants in this city in support of the early closing plan and was favored by all with possibly one or two exception.

The object of this plan is to give the employes shorter working hours and that they may be permitted to set apart their evenings for a well deserved rest.

The following is the petition and by whom it was signed:

We, the undersigned merchants of Thief River Falls, hereby agree to close our respective places of business every evening at 6:30 p. m., except Saturdays and pay days of the Soo R. R. and saw-mill; said closing to take effect Jan. 1st, 1911 and continuing until Oct. 1st, 1911.

GETS LARGE CONTRACT

Northern Culvert Co. of this City, Secures Big Order For Culverts.

Will Furnish Cass Co., N. D., With Many Culverts This Month

Manager Stowell, of the Northern Culvert company, of this city, was last week awarded an exceptionally large contract to furnish culverts that will be used throut Cass county, N. D. As these culverts will have to be manufactured during the present month the facto y is the scene of unusual activity.

Cass county, of which Fargo is the county seat, has two well established culvert factories and the fact that Mr. Stowell was successful in securing such a large order for that place, alone is evidence as to the quality of culverts that is put on the market by the local factory.

It Makes Him Smile.

It makes the Indian smile to see the way the Whites are being denied their booze in this territory; it makes him grin to see the white man put on the same footing with himself; and it causes him to chuckle to hear his white brother damn the treaty. He laughs when the white man tries the bar room door and finds it locked; he roars when he hears them talking about "discrimination" and he howls when he sees a real mad white man cursing the government for trying to make an Indian out of him. Although they didn't know it at the time, the Indian nevertheless put one over on the Caucasin when he signed the treaty of 1855.—Walker Pilot.

FAREWELL BANQUET

Dr. Bockman Was Host at Grand Banquet Given at Hotel Evelyn

Some Twenty-Five Leading Business Men Participate In Swell Affair

Dr. M. Bockman, who has been a prominent physician in this city for several years past departed the latter part of last week for Minneapolis, where he was recently appointed health inspector of the public schools and where he will engage in the practice of his profession in the future.

Mr. Bockman was host at a farewell banquet given by some of the leading citizens of this city in his honor last Thursday evening at the Evelyn Hotel.

Covers were laid for twenty-five guests and a most elaborate menu was prepared and served which reflects credit upon the management of this prominent hostilery.

Those who participated in the banquet were the following: J. P. Curtis, Dr. Helber, C. L. Hanson, John Morgan, O. L. Melgaard, B. Dan Bjorkman, W. B. Fuller, T. P. Hamre, M. V. Evenson, K. D. Carson, Roy Lambert, H. P. Riggs, Olof Ramstad, J. A. Swore, G. W. Booren, F. H. Herrick, O. Torrison, A. W. Swedenburg, C. R. Crandall, F. E. Wieland, W. Smith, D. P. O'Neil, A. H. Fasel, F. J. Stebbins, J. McKinney. Mayor Hamre acted as toast master.

Dr. and Mrs. Bockman have, during their residence in this city, been active members of the business and social whirl and have made numberless friends who will regret their departure from our midst, and who will wish them success in their new field.

Grand Forks City of 12,478.

The government census man wished Grand Forks a belated Merry Christmas yesterday, and the happiest New Year in a decade, when the news was flashed over the wire from Washington that the count showed Grand Forks with a population of 12,478. This is a gain in population of 4,826 in the past ten years, or a gain of 63 1 per cent, which establishes beyond peradventure of a doubt the fact that Grand Forks is growing faster than any other North Dakota city of considerable size. It seems that the claim made by many that Grand Forks is the greatest home city in North Dakota rests on the solid foundation of fact and that calamity howlers who have been declaring that the count would not show a substantial gain, were again badly mistaken.

A comparison of the census figures of Grand Forks and Fargo, both of which were made public yesterday, establishes the truth of the above statement that Grand Forks is and has been growing faster proportionately than the sister city. The government statistics show Fargo with a population of 14,331 as against a population ten years ago of 9,589, or a gain of 49.4 per cent.

Dredge No. 19 Did Good Work.

Dredge No. 19 kept at work until Wednesday of last week, when it closed down on account of a breakdown. This dredge has done great business. It dug two laterals on this side of the river completed two on the other side and got within 1800 feet of the end of the third one. Its work has completely drained out the Olson lakes east of Thief River, which will result in the making of a lot of productive land, where formerly water stood all the year round. With the opening of spring, both it and the big dredge, No. 16, will get busy and before fall all the laterals will be completed and the river straightened and deepened, which will certainly work a great transformation in all the big section of country covered by the system. Not only will the water be carried off, thus making good hay and farm land of thousands of acres that have heretofore been entirely nonproductive, but the vexing question of roads to and from Middle River will be solved.—Middle River Pioneer.

CO-OPERATIVE ELEVATOR.

Organized By Farmers at Their Meeting In This City Last Week.

Some Eighty-Five Shares Were Immediately Subscribed for the Concern.

Pursuant to a call issued in the local papers a large number of farmers from the territory surrounding this city held a meeting here Monday of last week for the purpose of organizing a co-operative elevator company. The meeting was called to order by Charles Evenson and H. L. Oftness was chosen secretary. Articles of incorporation were drawn and accepted and the following farmers were elected as directors: Halvor Fodstad, Charles Evenson, P. O. Sorton, Jorgen Adesro, John Ristad, Payl Dahl and Thor. Tunnestad. A committee on subscription on stock was chosen by Rasmus Oen. The stock will consist of shares of the amount of $25. Some eighty-five "shares" were immediately subscribed for and the new concern was launched at once. This section of country probably is more developed with reference to the co operative system than any other in the northern part of the state. Co-operative stores are common and all the creameries are run on the same plan and the farmers' clubs are organizing associations for the the purchase of pure bred animals of all kinds. That farmers can transact business quickly and decisively was well proven at this meeting of those farmers interested in the ownership and control of at least one elevater by the farmers.

Minnesota Wheat Leads all States

Minnesota again takes rank by a big lead as the greatest wheat producing state of the country, and by a statistical coincidence, the most remarkable that the department of agriculture, whose annual statistical report is now out, has ever found, is shown to have raised this year 94,080,000 bushels exacty the number given by the estimate of the department for 1909.

It is between the prominence of Minnesota and Kansas as wheat producers and the great rivalry of the two states that the principal interest lies. Kansas, which is one of the greatest of grain producing states, whose wheat fields extend every year over an area of between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 acres, and whose product is winter wheat, which, ordinarily, averages somewhat higher in yield per acre, passed Minnesota in 1908 by 10,000,000 bushels, the totals for the two states in that season being 68,577,000 bushels for Minnesota and 78,182,000 bushels for Kansas. At that time the winning of first place from Minnesota by the southwestern state was commented upon all over the United States and was the cause of much speculative figuring what the comparative prominence of the northwest and southwest in wheat production would be a few years later, this against the contention of northwestern authorities that temporary conditions of one season caused the change.

Last year Minnesota, with a production of 94,080,000 bushels, was 9,000,000 bushels ahead of Kansas, which raised 85,478,000 bushels. This year, with 94,080,000 bushels for Minnesota, Kansas shows up 61,070,000 bushel; Minnesota thus running ahead by 30,000,000 bushels.

KILLED NEAR BEAUDETTE

David LaCoe, of this City, Meets Death in Northern Woods

The Remains Were Brought Down Last Saturday For Burial

David LaCoe, of this city, was killed last Friday while employed in the woods near Beaudette by a falling tree.

While two of the woodsmen were felling a tree, Mr. LaCoe was adjusting a chain to his sleigh and apparently did not notice the direction of the falling tree, and was struck on the head by the falling timber receiving a badly fractured skull and injuries about the body. Death was almost instantaneous.

Deceased had been employed as teamster in a logging camp near Beaudette since this fall, and prior to this time has been employed by the local lumber company.

The remains were brought to this city for burial last Saturday and was accompanied by Geo. DeLaurie, of this city, who was also employed in the same camp.

Deceased leave a wife, and daughter, Rose, to mourn his loss.

Notice to Water & Light Consumers

We are herewith publishing Ordinance relating to payment of water & light accounts.

Ordinance No. 67.

Sec. 5. All accounts for electric light or power shall become due on the first day of each month and shall be payable at the office of the City Clerk or at such other place as may be appointed by the City Council, from the first to the tenth day, inclusive, of each month. If not paid on or before the tenth day of each month, a penalty of ten per cent shall be added. And in all cases where such account shall be paid on or before the tenth day of each month, a discount of ten per cent shall be allowed and deducted from the same.

In all cases where dues are not paid on or before the fifteenth day of each month, the electric current shall be cut off, and in such case a penalty of two dollars shall be added, to reinburse the city for the expense incurred in cutting and reconnecting the wires; and in no case shall the electric current be restored until such dues together with any penalty shall have been fully paid.

Certain Individual Traveling Under Name of Capt. E. T. Geittman, a Fraud.

Was Last Heard of As Operating In the Vicinity of Watab, Minn.

According to the notice sent out from the head recruiting station of the U. S. Marine Corps, at St. Paul, it appears that a certain individual traveling under the title of Capt. E. T. Geittman, who has been last heard from in the vicinity of Watab, Minn., is an imposter and the records show that no such person is in the service of the Marine Corps.

A communication sent out from the Headquarters, Recruiting, Dist. of Minnesota, U. S. Marine Corps dated Dec. 29, to the newspapers of the state follows:

Dear Sirs:—

For the protection of the public and in the interest of the United States Marine Corps, I request that you publish this communicaton. I have been informed by Mr. S. M. Orton of Watab, Minnesota, that a certain individual is traveling in Watab, Minnesota, and vicinity under the title Captain E. T. Geittman, U. S. Marine Corps, in Charge of United States Marine Corps Recruiting Station, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Concerning this, I desire to inform the public that this man is an imposter and fraudulently using the above title. Beside the undersigned there is no Marine Corps Officer on Recruiting Service or any other duty in Minnesota, the Dakotas and Northern Wisconsin. There is no officer named "Geittman" in the United States Marine Corps or United States Navy.

In view of the fact that the above mentioned impersonator is a fraud, I desire to caution the public not to extend any credit to or enter into any contract with this person, as such action would inevitably result in loss to the victim.

All newspapers and periodicals of the Middle-West and North-West are requested to publish this statement conspicuously. Very Respectfully.

RUSSELL H. DAVIS,
First Lieutenant, U. S. Marine Corps.
In Charge of Recruiting, District of Minnesota.

These rules will be strictly enforced.

Loren O. Davis, of Minneapolis, is a guest at the Sallow home, he being a cousin of Misses Bessie and Florence.

Miss Ruth Godward, who had been visiting at her home in Elbow Lake, this state, for some time, returned to this city the first of the week.

For reasons unknown we did not receive our telegraphic news this week, hence we are minus the Tidings From Scandinavia, State News and Markets.

Miss Anna Anderson, the genial sales lady in the Co-operative store, left yesterday afternoon for the home of her parents in Fergus Falls, where she will visit for an indefinite length of time.

Miss Nora Anderson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. N. Anderson left yesterday afternoon for Thief River Falls, where she will make an extended visit at the home of her grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Wiste.—Bemidji Pioneer.

Miss Florence Sallow entertained at her home Thursday evening, Dec. 29th, a number of her young friends in honor of her 20th birthday. The rooms were beautifully decorated in red and green, making it very attractive for the assembled guests. The evening was passed in playing games until ten o'clock, when dainty refreshments were served, after which the guests were entertained with music and songs, in which all took part, the Misses Myrtle Rayson and Bessie M. Sallow rendering the various selections on the piano The guests departed at midnight, wishing Miss Florence many happy birthdays. Miss Florence received a number of beautiful gifts from her many friends.

The Presbyterian Society will meet at the home of Mrs. Hugh Jones on Friday afternoon, Jan. 13 at 3 o clock and will be entertained by Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Booren. New officers for the coming year are to be elected so every member is urged to be present as well as their friends. Lunch will be served to all who come.

Services at the Presbyterian church Sunday, January 8th at the usual hours. D. K. Laurie, Pastor.

Music Hath Charms, Etc.

The Thief River Concert Band will render its next indoor concert about the 20th of this month in the Auditorium. As usual, Prof. Houle has selected an exceptionally fine program to be rendered that evening. It will be remembered that the last concert did not receive the patronage that it should have had and all good citizens should bear the day and date of the coming concert in mind and give it a liberal attendance. It is safe to state that each and everyone will be amply rewarded for their coming by the treat that will be in store for them.

An Elaborate Production

Twelfth Night, to be presented at the Auditorium, in Five acts and Sixteen Scenes. When William Yule, Violet Eddy, and their supporting company of Shakesperian Players appear January 23rd in the ideal comedy (Twelfth Night) theatre-goers will see probably, the most elaborate and complete scenic production ever handled on the local stage. Manager C. P. Walker has furnished with a lavish hand an equipment sufficient to supply five acts, divided into sixteen scenes. Every inch of scenery, every piece of furniture, every platform and stage brace is carried by the company, together with special lighting effects. The scenery has been built especially for this territory, and can be readily adjusted to any stage. Manager Walker is particular in his instructions to his stage carpenters, and insists that the scenery be used in each and every town.

The City Wins

The case of the Tri State Telephone Co. vs. the City of Thief River Falls, was taken up last Friday before Judge Willard of the United States Circuit Court, in Minneapolis, upon an order to show cause why a temporary injunction should be issued restraining the city from interfering with the plaintiff company in extending its lines in the city.

The city was represented by City Attorney Halvorson and former attorney General Young while the plaintiff was represented by their Attorney H. P. Roberts and incidentally assisted by the attorneys for the Northwestern Telephone Co.

The case was argued very fully by both parties and at the conclusion of the Court held that the plaintiff company had no rights in or upon the streets and alleys in the City, hence declined to grant the temporary injunction.

The court held that the rights of the company was wholly based upon the rights acquired under what is known as the Fant telephone ordinance and this ordinance was held to be invalid upon the ground that the Council who granted or passed the ordinance did not have authority to do so without advertising for bids and selling the same to the most favorable bidder.

The case will come up for regular trial at Fergus Falls on February 6th., but in view of the recent decision there is no probability that the result will be reversed.

This will probably become a leading case on the subject litigated and of great importance to both the public and the telephone companies for it is understood that a great many of the telephone franchises throughout the state are subject to the same objections and this accounts for the co-operation of the two companies against the City.

"Twelfth Night" Coming.

To be presented here on January 23rd.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the lovers of the best in dramatic literature is that of the engagement of the superior company of players headed by William Yule and Violet Eddy, in "Twelfth Night".

Shakespeare was manifestly in a holiday mood, when he penned this delightfully irresponsible comedy of improbalities. No great problem clogged the flow of his fancy—no call to right the wrongs of humanity choked the serene utterance of his joyous muse. Even Viola is less strenuous than most of our poet's heroines, and throws herself with a gay spirit into the masquerading adventures through which she passes to comedy's inevitable goal—the hymeneal altar. No less an authority than Mr. Halliwell Phillips describes "Twelfth Night" as the perfection of English comedy and the most fascinating drama in the language.

Made Good Showing

In the report of Chief Lang of the department of police, to the city council the first of the week, a splendid showing is made by that department for the past year.

The past twelve months fail to reveal a single case of burglary in this city; theft has been greatly eliminated and shows a marked decrease, and taking everything as a whole, there have been less criminal cases the last twelve months than in years.

The department of police can justly be credited in a measure for these changes, and could hardly be improved upon when it comes to enforcing law and keeping order.

Rev. Huus Pases Away

The many friends in this city of Rev. A. L. Huus will be pained to hear of his death which occurred at Northwood, Iowa, Dec. 28th.

Rev. Huus was formerly pastor of the United Luthern church in this city.

He leaves a wife and a large number of children to mourn the loss of a kind father and loving husband.

Zion Church.

Services will be held in the Zion church next Sunday evening at 7:45. There will be no Sunday school next Sunday. The Ladies Aid society of the Zion church will meet at the home of Mrs. E. O. Erickson next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. All invited. A. L. Larson, pastor.

Married Monday Evening.

Last Monday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Robbecke in this city occurred the marriage of their daughter, Miss Estelle Maria to Mr. Hugo E. Anderson, the marriage ceremony being performed by Rev. Seltz, in the presence of relatives of the contracting parties.

Mr. Otto Anderson, of Lake City, a brother of the bride-groom, acted as best man, and Miss Elsie Robbecke was bridesmaid. The bride was dressed in white and carried white roses.

The happy couple left that same evening on the Soo flyer for Lake City, where they will remain until about the 1st. of May, when they will return to this city and go to housekeeping on the east side.

The News joins in with their host of friends in extending congratulations.

Contract Is Let

The board of county commissioners of Pennington county met last Tuesday afternoon and among other matters transacted at the meeting was the allowance of the bid for county printing.

The bid of H. E. Ives, clerk of court of Pennington county and Ex-Treasurer of Red Lake county, was allowed at the rate of 12½ cents per folio for the first insertion and 6 cents for subsequent insertions.

At this rate it is safe to surmise that Bro. Ives couldn't even build air castles on the proceeds of the county printing for the coming year.

Norwegian Synod.

Services next Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m., and 7:45 p. m.

The Ladies Aid holds its annual meeting this afternoon at 2:30 with Mrs. Theo. Lonson.

Annual meeting of our congregation next Monday, the 9th of Jan., at 10 o'clock a. m. Very important business will come before the meeting. All members are expected to be present I. T. Aastad.

Shakespeare's Ideal Comedy.

"Twelfth Night" To Be Given By Strong Company.

Seats will soon be on sale for the engagement of "Twelfth Night" the best picturesque and delightful of all the Shakespearian comedies, which appears here one night, January 23rd, under the direction of C. P. Walker. Presented by a company of experienced Shakespearian actors, with a most elaborate costume and scenic equipment, (Twelfth Night) is ideal entertainment. The company are the famous English Players with Wm. Yule, the popular Canadian comedian, and Violet Eddy, a winsome young actress, especially engaged for the roles of Sir Toby Belch and Viola.

The Filial Chinaman.

Many examples of Chinese filial piety strike the occidental reader as ridiculous. There is the famous story of Lao Laitsu, which Mr. R. F. Johnston repeats in his "Lion and Dragon in Northern China." Lao's parents lived to such extreme old age that he was himself a toothless old man while they were both still alive. "Conceiving it his duty to divert their attention from their weight of years and approaching end, he dressed himself up in the clothes of a child and played about in his parents' presence with the object of making them think they were still a young married couple contemplating the innocent gambols of their infant son."

A similar case is that of Wang Pou, whose mother had an unconquerable dread of thunder and lightning. When she died she was buried in a mountain forest, and thereafter, when a violent thunderstorm occurred, Wang Pou, heedless of the wind and rain, would hurry to her grave and throw himself to his knees. "I am here to protect you, dear mother," he would say. "Do not be afraid."

Making a Gunstock.

A party of men were out hunting, and an old woodsman who was with them broke his gunstock in some way or other. It was just about nightfall when the accident occurred, and inasmuch as he was very anxious to do some shooting early the next morning he decided to fix up his shooting iron. Finding a walnut fence rail, he set to work. His only tools were an ax and a big pocket knife. All night long he labored vigorously at his task, and by morning the gunstock was finished and back in place and worked like a charm.

"How did you do it?" asked one of the number, greatly surprised.

"Very easy," was this old hunter's reply. "No trouble at all. Just get a piece of wood about the size and kind that you want and then whittle away all that you want whittled away. When you have all the wood cut off that you don't want you have a gunstock."—Kansas City Journal.

Tuberculosis is often induced by damp and filthy surroundings and badly ventilated sleeping quarters; hence the removal of these causes, if they exist, will contribute to the health of the herd.

A poser for those fond of making fine ethical distinctions: Does the egg laid by your neighbor's hen in your barn or woodshed rightfully belong to him or yourself, provided your garden and back yard furnish her food and your flower beds a dusting place?

Nine times out of ten it does not pay to monkey with really sick poultry. It is better to knock them on the head with a broomstick than to allow them to run indiscriminately with and infect the rest of the flock. Should the sick fowls recover they seldom pay their keep for months.

We went by a home the other night where the windows were all down tight—no provision made for a breath of fresh air—and where, to cap the climax, a kerosene lamp turned low was doing much to befoul what little air the house contained. Fresh air is a good deal cheaper than dirt, more health promoting than pills and tonic, and yet some folks are as afraid of it as death and a good deal more so than taxes.

There is no place where religion—that of deeds as well as words—needs putting into practice more than in the home. It should not only mean being kind and cheerful, keeping socks mended and buttons on the men's shirts, but having a supply of dry wood as near the kitchen stove as possible, kindling closer than the corncrib, a handy supply of water and easy means of disposing of the waste water. Any man who pretends to be a good man about the house, let alone being religious, is worse than—well, he's a pretty poor stick if he doesn't provide for these things.

While a complete outfit for determining the amount of butter fat in milk by the Babcock test will not cost over three or four dollars, a very fair idea can be got of what the individuals in the dairy herd are doing by sending average samples of milk from the several cows to the local creamery and having them tested there, a lift most any manager or buttermaker would be glad to give a patron. His test, whether showing a percentage of fat of 2½ or 5 per cent, coupled with the amount of milk which each cow averages per day during her milking period, will be sufficient data from which to determine which the loafers are. The sooner this test is made the more money there will be in the bank, while a lot of profitless drudge work will be done away.

There's many a man in the north part of the corn belt who has a kindly feeling toward the variety of corn known as Bloody Butcher, which was used considerably in some sections for replanting fields where the larger variety of corn planted at the usual time did not germinate. In one instance which came to our notice some seed of this variety was planted on June 9 and in just sixty-eight days samples of firm dented corn were picked from the field. While we would not urge the planting of it in latitudes where a larger and more productive variety would mature well between spring and fall frosts, yet it answers a good purpose as an emergency variety where one needs corn for feeding purposes and does not want to lose the use of the land.

The wisdom and urgent need of testing animals which are to be used for breeding purposes were effectively shown in the case of the owner of a fine herd of Holstein cows of which we read the other day. One cow in the herd which he prized highly had not responded as she should from the tuberculin test applied at intervals of several months before, and to be fully satisfied in regard to the matter he had the cow slaughtered by an assistant of the state veterinarian's office. A postmortem examination showed that the cow was so far gone with tuberculosis that there were tubercular lesions all through her vital organs and muscular tissues and that no portion of her carcass was fit for food. It was an emphatic demonstration, convincing not only the owner, but many neighbors and visitors who were present. Next time he will act sooner than he did in this case and thus prevent a diseased animal from infecting other members of the herd.

Fairly Warned.

He—My dear, I can't afford to buy you that hat. She—Still, you'd save money if you did. He—How so? She—Because I'll just be ill if I don't have it, and you know what doctors' bills are.

Notice to Water & Light Consumers.

We are herewith publishing Ordinance relating to payment of water & light accounts.

Ordinance No. 67.

Sec. 5. All accounts for electric light or power shall become due on the first day of each month and shall be payable at the office of the City Clerk or at such other place as may be appointed by the City Council, from the first to the tenth day, inclusive, of each month. If not paid on or before the tenth day of each month, a penalty of ten per cent shall be added. And in all cases where such account shall be paid on or before the tenth day of each month, a discount of ten per cent shall be allowed and deducted from the same.

In all cases where dues are not paid on or before the fifteenth day of each month, the electric current shall be cut off, and in such case a penalty of two dollars shall be added, to reimburse the city for the expense incurred in cutting and reconnecting the wires; and in no case shall the electric current be restored until such dues together with any penalty shall have been fully paid.

These rules will be strictly enforced.

CHARLES H. ELLIOTT DEAD

Prominent Resident of Rochester, Minn., Passes Away.

Charles H. Elliott of Rochester, one of the founders of the Olmsted County Democrat and also the Rochester Bulletin, the first daily paper to be published in that city, passed away very suddenly at his home there, angina pectoris being the cause.

Nine weeks ago to the day C. Elliott, the father of the deceased, died in the same manner very suddenly at the Vendome hotel, Minneapolis.

Last July Adin Elliott, a son of C. Elliott and brother of Charles E. Elliott, also died suddenly in Milwaukee, afflicted with the same malady.

Child Killed by Brother.

The two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Eldred, living eighteen miles from Akeley, in Cass county, was accidentally shot by his elder brother and died of the wound. The ten-year-old boy was playing with a rifle, which was discharged, and the bullet entered the head of the baby.

Finds Wife Dead in Home.

After breaking into his home at St. Paul E. Otis Morehead found his wife, aged nineteen, dead on the floor of her bedroom. Deputy Coroner Charles Clark pronounced death due to cardiac trouble and said that Mrs. Morehead had been dead several hours.

Woman's Wound Is Fatal.

Mrs. Mina Altschuler, who was shot while in a room with Ben Forman at the Willard hotel at St. Paul, is dead at the city hospital. The charge of "assault with a dangerous weapon" against Forman will be changed to one of murder.

POLICE OF GERMANY.

Privacy of the Home No Bar to Their Farreaching Authority.

To a foreigner no feature of German life is more striking than the prominence and almost unlimited authority of the police. Many of its functions are such as in the United States would be intrusted only to a court of law. What seems almost equally strange the greater part of these functions are exercised quite independently of the local government.

The minuteness and thoroughness of the work of the German police are a constant surprise to the foreigner. The policeman not only preserves order in the streets, but exercises a farreaching authority in private houses. For instance, he undertakes the nightly locking of one's street door at a sufficiently early hour. He sees that one has his chimney regularly cleaned. He inspects at stated times one's stove and heating apparatus, and while he is about it he will look into a few other matters of domestic economy.

One feature of his activity strikes a good many American visitors with favor. In some places singing and piano playing with open windows are forbidden, and it is a common house regulation in large towns that no pianos may be played after 10 o'clock in the evening. The German policeman is also something of a food inspector in his way, and he keeps a sharp eye on venders of food and of medicines. It is not an uncommon sight to see a German policeman halt a milkman's wagon and on the spot make an inspection of his wares. Should there prove to be anything wrong with them they are promptly seized and destroyed and the matter is immediately taken in hand by the higher authorities.—New York Press.

Tamed Him.

"Slip me a brace of cackles," ordered the chesty looking young man with a bored air as he perched on the first stool in the lunch room.

"A what?" asked the waitress as she placed a glass of water before him.

"Adam and Eve flat on their backs! A pair of sunny siders!" said the young man in an exasperated tone.

"You got me, kid," returned the waitress. "Watcha want?"

"Eggs up," said the young man. "E-g-g-s, the kind that come before the hen or after, I never knew which."

"Why didn't you say so in the first place?" asked the waitress. "You'd 'a' had 'em by this time."

"Well, of all things!" said the young man.

"I knew what he was drivin' at all the time," began the waitress as the young man departed. "But he's one of them fellers that thinks they can get by with anything. He don't know that they're using plain English now in restaurants."—Kansas City Times.

Knew Just How.

Many years ago in Paris at the first presentation of a tragedy that had for its closing scene the murder of a Swedish king which had taken place nearly half a century earlier all went well till the murder scene came on, when a very dignified old gentleman in the stage box showed signs of strong dissatisfaction and at length called out angrily:

"Absurd! They've got it all wrong!"

The manager himself heard this plain spoken comment, and, being naturally disturbed by so sweeping a condemnation, he sought out the critic and politely begged to know what fault he had to find with it.

"Why, my good sir," cried the old man, with an air of authority, "the whole grouping of the scene is incorrect! You have made them kill the king to the right of the door, whereas we murdered him on the left!"

The Tea Chewers.

"Chewing tea comes from Siam," said a traveler. "They call it mieng. It is in a plug, like chewing tobacco, and it has a villainous smell. This smell is due to the fermentation it has undergone. The tea that the Siamese employ for chewing purposes is a very coarse, rank plant. It is gathered like ordinary tea, but the leaves after being compressed into plugs are buried for fifteen days. They ferment during burial. On their resurrection they are very, very fragrant indeed. The Siamese boatmen chew tea. The rickshaw men chew it. The litterateurs chew it. They say it makes them work better. This is probably the truth, for I chewed a plug myself in Anam, and it exhilarated me strangely. But the aftermath was bad—a headache, smarting eyes and nervous depression."—Washington Post.

When Tolstoy Tried to Fly.

From earliest childhood Tolstoy was remarkably observant of the things that were going on in the world around him. Thus, while still in his teens, we find him taking an interest in the art of flying that was too practical to suit his devoted mother. With characteristic thoroughness he invented a design of his own and with equally characteristic courage proceeded to put it to an immediate test from a second story window. But the boy, who was afterward to find food for thought for the whole civilized world, was not destined to make his mark as an infant aeroplanist. He fell instantly to the ground, and, though by great good fortune no bones were actually broken, the concussion was so great that young Tolstoy afterward slept for sixteen hours on end.

Joy For Johnny.

Johnny's mother was telling Johnny stories from Bible history. And Johnny for a long time was very silent. At last he sighed and looked up questioningly into his mother's face.

"When I get to heaven shall I know every one?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," answered his mother.

"Napoleon, and Samuel, and George Washington, and Solomon, and—and David?" persisted Johnny.

"Certainly, dear!"

"Well, then, mother, if I'm very good—if I'm ever so good and ask him ever so nicely, do you think that David will let me touch his slingshot—just touch it—once?"—Philadelphia Times.

Death.

Death, the dry pedant, spares neither the rose nor the thistle, nor does he forget the solitary blade of grass in the distant waste. He destroys thoroughly and unceasingly. Everywhere we may see how he crushes to dust plants and beasts, men and their works. Even the Egyptian pyramids, that would seem to defy him, are trophies of his power, monuments of decay, graves of primeval kings.—Heinrich Heine.

A Famous Parlor Maid.

Sydney Smith, the famous author and wit, in describing his early married life in a Yorkshire parsonage told how he made a butler out of a village girl:

"A manservant was too expensive, so I caught up a little garden girl made like a milestone, christened her Bunch, put a napkin in her hand and made her my butler. The girls taught her to read, Mrs. Sydney to wait, and I undertook her morals. Bunch became the best butler in the county."

But Bunch was not merely butler—she was valet too. A visitor thus describes her:

"Coming down one morning, I found Bunch pacing up and down the passage before her master's door in a state of great perturbation.

"'What is the matter, Bunch?'

"'Oh, ma'am, I can't get no peace of mind till I've got master shaved, and he's so late this morning!'

"This 'getting master shaved' consisted in making ready for him with a large painter's brush a thick lather in a huge wooden bowl as big as Mambrino's helmet, which she always considered as the most important avocation of the morning."

When the Danes Were Skinned.

In former times the Danes used to sail up the mouths of the English rivers to pillage the churches. When they were caught they were skinned and their skins nailed to the door of the church they attacked. In course of time all the exposed portions would peel off, but that covered by the nail would be protected and thus bear testimony to the cruelty of the ancient Englishmen. In the London College of Surgeons may be seen three specimens of human skin bearing labels such as this: "Portion of human skin said to be that of a Dane from the door of a church at Hadstock, in Essex." A second specimen is from Copford, in Essex, and a third from the north door of Worcester cathedral. Such fragments of sacrilegious Danish hide have been found on doors in Westminster abbey.

Were Kind to Him.

A West Philadelphia man who was severely injured some months ago when his horse took fright at an automobile and bolted, upsetting the carriage, has only recently been released from the hospital. He is well now and in the best of spirits notwithstanding the fact that severe operations were necessary in order to save his life.

A few days after he left the hospital a friend asked him if he had been kindly treated.

"Oh, yes!" he said. "Oh, yes, indeed! Considering the fact that they amputated both my feet, removed my collar bone, cut off my left thumb, trepanned my brain, took out a piece of my underjaw and sawed my left hip bone in two, I got along very nicely They were most kind to what was left of me."—Philadelphia Press.

Beaconsfield the Dandy.

The dandyism Benjamin Disraeli affected in his dress is the subject of many pen pictures in Monypenny's "Life of Beaconsfield." At the age of nineteen he is described as wearing a black velvet suit with ruffles and black stockings with red clocks. A later portrait, in 1830, comes from a friend's diary, which has the following entry:

"March 29.—B. D. to dine with me. He came up Regent street when it was crowded in his blue surtout, a pair of military light blue trousers, black stockings with red stripes and shoes. 'The people,' he said, 'quite made way for me as I passed. It was like the opening of the Red sea, which I now perfectly believe from experience. Even well dressed people stopped to look at me.'"

Haroun-al-Raschid to Charlemagne.

The only sovereign of the time who could compare with Charlemagne was the famous Haroun-al-Raschid who as the head of the Moslem world sent the keys of Jerusalem to the head of the Christian world, besides a striking clock, an ape and an elephant—things which impressed the imagination of those times as typifying that Charlemagne had been invested with the sovranty of Jerusalem and the lordship of the world.—T. A. Cook in "Old Provence."

Where Once a Home Stood.

And what is more melancholy than the old apple trees that linger about the spot where once stood a homestead, but where there is now only a ruined chimney rising out of a grassy and weed grown cellar? They offer their fruit to the wayfarer—apples that are bitter-sweet with the moral of time's vicissitude.—Hawthorne.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette is very much exercised over the financial affairs of Pennington County. This is but natural, for, when people have no business of their own to look after they are apt to poke their noses into more prosperous peoples affairs.

For the benefit of our younger readers we will say, that Red Lake Falls was, at one time a prosperous village, situated at the junction of the Clearwater with the Red Lake River. It may still be found on some of the older maps.

On the 6th inst. the supreme court will hear for final determination the case of Ed. L. Healey versus Pennington county. County Attorney Stanton, who has so ably conducted the case, will represent the county and the famous "paper" will see its finish.

Very large sums are being spent yearly by township, counties and cities in the purchase of metal culverts. In some cases these appear to be of doubtful value and in the interest of both the honest manufacturer and the purchaser, the legislature should apply a touch of the pure food law to this class of merchandise. Why not compel manufacturers to stamp plainly on the article the kind of guage and quality of material used. It would then be a simple matter to ascertain if the article was as represented. It is stated that culverts are being sold with the proper weight of metal in the ends while the balance is too light to last. This sort of thing, if true is bad for everyone though it may temporarily benefit the guilty crook who sells them.

In this county of ours popular idols are quickly made, and; as quickly forgotten. Journals who hailed Roosevelt as the greatest personalty in the country, some went so far as to say in the world, a few weeks ago, now think it quite the thing to decry him and refer to him as a dead one. Theodore Roosevelt's honesty of purpose, fearlessness, and integrity cannot be questioned, and the fact that his candidates were defeated by the political sharps of New York state is perhaps not to his discredit. If he is not again a force in the affairs of the nation, it will be owing to his desire to quit politics, and we do not believe he has any such desire. It is inconceivable that a man who for years was the idol of the people and whose efforts were largely directed to the betterment of the common people, should so quickly lose the confidence he so long enjoyed. We do not believe he has, and the more his enemies decry him the sooner will he regain his former commanding place in the affairs of the nation.

Marble & Granite Works

Oscar Sponheim of this city and I. G. Sands, of Crookston have made arrangements to open a marble and granite works shortly after New Year.

Some of the finest Vermont marble that is on the market today is now on its way for the new concern.

Eastern and foreign granite, also the well known Minnesota, will be handled by them.

The works here will be equipped with the latest machinery known in the manufacturing of monuments and headstones.

Mr. Sands is an expert at this business, having spent several years with the Crookston Marble works of Crookston, one year with the Grand Forks Marble and Granite works of Grand Forks, N. D., and one year with the Fargo Marble and Granite works of Fargo, N. D.

Mr. Sands has just returned from St. Paul, where he spent several months with one of the best concerns in the northwest getting acquainted with the latest designs and methods of executing them.

The works will be known as the Thief River Falls Marble and Granite Works. The new concern will commence business about March 15 and will secure a location on 3rd street.

Soo Plans A New Line.

Duluth, Jan. 3.—The Soo is planning to build a branch north from the line between Duluth and Thief River Falls It will start near Portage lake, cross the Great Northern at Bena and the Cass river at Winnebigoshish dam and extend into the Round lake and Cut Foot Sioux country.

The road is to be built primarily to get out timber for the Thief River Falls Lumber company, but it will reach a territory occupied by many settlers, and it is believed that ultimately the branch will be extended to the international border. The road will be built this year.—Duluth Herald.

May Make Live Town.

Charlie Daymand, of Red Lake Falls, was in the city last Tuesday enroute home from Federal Dam, the new town just established on the Duluth-Thief River Falls extension of the Soo line. Mr. Daymand says that Federal Dam is booming and bids fair to become a live little village. Not only, he says, has it the making and prospects of a good town commercially, but it has the natural advantages of a fine summer resort.

Making a Major.

John Esten Cooke, who went into the war as an enlisted man in a Richmond battery, was soon afterward appointed an officer on the staff of General J. E. B. Stuart. On Stuart's staff, Mr. George Cary Eggleston says in "Recollections of a Varied Life," he distinguished himself by a certain laughing nonchalance under fire and by his eager readiness to undertake Stuart's most perilous missions.

It was in recognition of some specially daring service of that kind that Stuart gave him his promotion. The delightful way in which the great boyish southerner did it is best told in Mr. Eggleston's own words.

"You're about my size, Cooke," Stuart said, "but you're not so broad in the chest."

"Yes, I am," answered Cooke.

"Let's see if you are," said Stuart, taking off his coat as if for a boxing match. "Try that on."

Cooke donned the coat with its three stars on the collar and found it a fit.

"Cut off two of the stars," Stuart commanded, "and wear the coat to Richmond. Tell the people in the war department to make you a major and send you back to me in a hurry. I'll need you tomorrow."

How It Feels to Be Run Over.

"When I was run over," writes a correspondent, "I had not seen the car approaching. The first thing I knew was that I was on the ground, kicking upward with my legs in an effort to get from under the car. Then I felt a wheel going over my chest, which bent as it passed over. In the intervening second or two I went through several minutes' worth of feelings. I had the sensations of astonishment at being on the ground; of wanting to roll aside and away, of bracing myself—and my chest especially—stiff to resist something, whatever it might be, while a lightning flash of fear was dimly there and a subconscious query, 'What on earth next?' Yet it was hardly fear, because there was no time for such a durable sensation. It was rather a sense of being suddenly confronted with a grave reality, of doubtful, obscurely terrible import."—London Chronicle.

Origin of Coal.

Coal is of vegetable origin. When vegetable matter accumulates under water it undergoes a slow process of decomposition, giving off its nitrogen, hydrogen, oxygen and some carbon, the result of which if carried far enough is the formation of a mass of carbon. Peat, found often in swampy tracts, is the first stage in the coal forming process, and the further stages are formed by the burial of these vegetable deposits under great loads of sediment, where they become subject to pressure and sometimes to heat. This effects a series of changes, consolidation and loss of oxygen and gives a series of products whose nature depends on the degree to which the original vegetable matter has been changed. The products are known as lignite, bituminous coal and anthracite coal.

Mixing His Dates.

There is a story of a man who was so transported with joy as he stood up at the altar rail to be married that his thoughts reverted to a day when he stood up at the prisoner's bar in a court of justice to plead "guilty" or "not guilty" to a criminal charge. So powerfully did that, the most painful event of his life, obtrude itself upon his mind that when the clergyman put the question, "Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife?" and so on, the poor distracted bridegroom answered with startling distinctness, "Not guilty, so help me!"—From Tuckerman's "Personal Recollections."

A Stubborn Opening.

The head of the household was going through her husband's pockets the next morning.

"What kept you out so late last night?" she suddenly demanded.

"It was the opening of the campaign, my dear," the lesser half replied.

"Well, it didn't take three corkscrews to open it, did it?"

And she drew the offending articles from his side pocket and waved them before him.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Riot of Ink.

Canon Nicholl used to tell how on one occasion he had visited the famous house of the Thrales in that suburb of London where Dr. Johnson was at home. "Johnson," said the canon in recalling his visit, "had occupied two rooms, and these were left as he last used them. The sight was an extraordinary one, for ink was splashed all over the floor and even on the walls. It was one of the doctor's habits to dip his pen in ink and then shake it."

Teaching the Teacher.

Teacher—Johnny, what part of speech is 'nose?' Johnny—'Tisn't any. Teacher—Ah, but it must be. Johnny—Maybe yours is, because you talk through it, but the only part of speech I've got is my mouth.

Same Old Story.

"Does he pay his alimony promptly?"

"No. He has to be urged and threatened every pay day; but, then, of course, I got used to that when we were living together."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Masculine Perversity.

Men are funny creatures to cater for. A woman will buy the things she wants, but a man will only buy the things he needs.—Exchange.

When the fight begins within himself a man's worth something.—Browning.

The Rajahs of Bustar.

The rajahs of Bustar are hybrid rajputs, claiming to be of the family of the moon, and have reigned in Bustar for between five and six hundred years. The family bears the name of Rathputty, and every year the rajah has to sit on the rath at the festival of the Dusserah wearing the jewels of the goddess Dunteshwarre, the tutelary goddess of the state, which are brought from Dantawara temple for the purpose.

"Save for the jewels he is clad only in wreaths of flowers," says a writer in the Wide World, "and when we saw him he looked very solemn—almost ashamed of himself—as he passed us.

"In connection with this ceremony there used to be a brutal custom of dragging the rath, a huge sort of juggernaut car weighing many tons, over the bodies of live buffaloes, often only partly killing them.

"This horrible practice was stopped by British officials."

Indispensable.

Three camels presented themselves at the dock where the ark was tied up, whereas but two animals of a kind had been called for.

"One of you fellows will have to step aside!" shouted Noah very peremptorily.

But the three ships of the desert smiled knowingly.

"I," said the first of them, "am the camel which shall pass through the eye of a needle sooner than a rich man shall enter the kingdom of heaven."

"I," said the second, "am the camel which so many people swallow while straining at a gnat."

"And I," said the third and last, "am the camel whose back was broken by the last straw."

Whereupon Noah, perceiving that posterity could ill spare any of these and would be lost for illustrations without them, graciously made an exception in their favor.—Puck.

A Famous Vine.

In the Cumberland Lodge portion of the royal gardens at Windsor there is a vine, known all over England as the Cumberland Lodge vine, which is a shoot of a still older vine which grows at Hampton Court, but the shoot has far outdistanced its parent in dimensions and productiveness. In England grapes are generally grown under glass, and the Cumberland Lodge vine has a great glass structure, 120 feet long by 20 wide, all to itself. Growing with astonishing luxuriance, the vine spreads itself over a roof area of 2,400 square feet and bears annually a crop of approximately a thousand huge bunches of the finest flavored grapes. These grapes are frequently found on the royal table, and the subject who is presented with a basket of them considers himself highly favored. The shoot from which the great vine has grown was planted in 1775.

Cliff of Natural Glass.

A cliff of natural glass can be seen in Yellowstone park. It is half a mile long and from 150 to 200 feet high, the material of which it consists being as good glass as that artificially manufactured. The dense glass which forms the base is from seventy-five to a hundred feet thick, while the upper portion, having suffered and survived many ages of wind and rain, has naturally worn much thinner. Of course the color of the cliff is not that of natural glass—transparent and white—but is mostly black and in some places mottled and streaked with brownish red and shades of olive green and brown.

Exclusive.

At an evangelistic service at Glasgow the preacher at the end of his address cried, "Now, all you good people who mean to go to heaven with me, stand up!" With a surge of enthusiasm the audience sprang to its feet, all but an old Scotchman in the front row, who sat still. The horrified evangelist wrung his hands and, addressing him, said, "My good man, my good man, don't you want to go to heaven?"

Clear and deliberate came the answer, "Aye, Awm gangin, but no wi' a pairsonally conducted pairty!"—St. James Gazette.

Kindly Fruits.

The expression in the prayer book "Kindly fruits of the earth" has for most persons no definite meaning on account of the difference in significance now attached to the word kindly from that used when the expression was first written. The word kindly in that connection meant as nearly as possible "of its kind," and the expression "kindly fruits of the earth" meant "the fruits of the earth each after its kind."

Why Waste His Breath?

Teacher—Now, Tommy, suppose you had two apples and you gave another boy his choice of them. You would tell him to take the bigger one, wouldn't you? Tommy—No, mum. Teacher—Why? Tommy—Cos 'twouldn't be necessary.—Suburban Life.

Fairly Warned.

He—My dear, I can't afford to buy you that hat. She—Still, you'd save money if you did. He—How so? She—Because I'll just be ill if I don't have it, and you know what doctors' bills are.

Hit Both Ways.

"It ain't no fun bein' a kid," observed a boy bitterly. "You always hafter go to bed when you ain't sleepy an' git up when you are."—Toledo Blade.

It is worth a thousand pounds a year to have the habit of looking at the bright side of things.—Johnson.

The Measure.

The ancient judge sat before the scales of worth.

"Bring forth the royal treasure!" he cried, and the hurrying slaves poured into the huge pan sacks of golden metal, caskets of sparkling gems until it seemed as if all of the wealth of earth were there. Yet the balance never stirred.

"Let the learning of the ages be added," came the order, and tons upon tons of the wisdom of sages, philosophers, scientists and poets was heaped upon the pile. And still the great arm of the scales remained high in air.

"Add now the men of power and high position," said the judge, "and the scale will fall." But all in vain.

"But what is on the other side that outweighs all these?" asked one.

"It is character," said the judge.—Portal.

A Good Sleeper.

Talleyrand used to tell an extraordinary story of the impassiveness of Louis XVIII. When he was minister of foreign affairs a courier came to him one evening bearing unpleasant news, and he therefore postponed the communication of it to the king till next morning, when he explained that he was afraid the tidings might have disturbed his majesty's sleep. The king replied: "Nothing disturbs my sleep, as you may see from this instance. The most dreadful blow of my life was my brother's death. The courier who brought this dreadful news arrived at 8 o'clock in the evening. For many hours I was quite overcome, but at midnight I went to bed and slept my usual eight hours." The story is told by the Duchesse de Dino, Talleyrand's niece, in her memoirs.

Sons of Butchers.

Three of the stained glass windows in the hall of the Butcher Guild, London, contain the portraits of Cardinal Wolsey, William Shakespeare and Daniel Defoe in recognition of their connection with the meat trade.

The cardinal was the son of a "respectable" butcher at Ipswich, in Suffolk, and "the immortal bard" assisted while a youngster a butcher in his native town of Stratford-on-Avon.

Defoe, nowadays known as the author of "Robinson Crusoe," but in his day an adventurer and secret agent of his government, was the son of a butcher in Fore street and a member of the guild.—National Provisioner.

Time, but No Money.

Street Missionary—My good friend, why idle away the precious hours in this fashion? Don't you know that time is money?

Loafer—Don't you believe it, guv'nor. If that was so I should be a bloomin' millionhair, I should. I've been doing time on and orf ever since I was a nipper.—London Mail.

The Mean Thing.

"Phyllis is the meanest kind of a gossip."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because she never tells you anything herself, but gets you to tell her all you know."

During the past two years 91,000,000 pounds of butter were made in this state, according to the report of the dairy commissioner. This is an increase of 5 per cent over two years ago. There were 3,567,000 of cheese manufactured, also showing an increase. The price of butterfat at the close of the biennial period was 30 cents a pound, an increase of 7 cents. At the same time milk cost $1.11 per 100 pounds, an increase of 17 cents.

A female person gave a party last week in Boston for the benefit of her pet dog. A Christmas tree was arranged, and the visiting dogs were each given a present. We have no objection to these foolish people giving parties to their curs if they want to, but the idea of desecrating the Christmas tree with all it means to the children for the sake of a few poodles, is going the limit. We hope that in the next world the Lord will have a special corner for these people, where they can be alone with their poodles. The company of so many happy children there might make them unhappy.

This is the season of the year when the lodges get busy and elect some fellow outer guard of the wicket and compel him to stand out in a cold ante room without any hat on, to catch the pass word as it is thrown out to him by some belated brethren who are in a hurry to get in alongside of the box stove. On rare occasions he gets a chance to warm the tip of his nose by sticking it through the port hole and telling the inner guard that Brother Smith is outside without the password, but as a rule he doesn't get next to the heat until somebody with a bad breath raises the wicket and whispers in his ear that they are about to gather around the urn and close up the lodge, and his frosty voice is nearer in the closing ode. Then they blow out the lights before he has a chance to get his feet warm, and he limps around for the next week with the chilblains, and just about gets healed up when the next meeting night rolls around, when he again takes his stand at the wrong side of the door, after first casting a white pebble to signify that all's well with him except a touch of rheumatism, which he's willing to stand "for the good of the order." Say, were you ever outer guard of the wicket?—Ex

The S. T. Holdahl general mercantile store is being organized into a farmers co-operative store. That the re-organization will go thru is evident, as the promoters find no difficulty in disposing of shares to farmers everywhere around Roseau. Shortly after Jan. 1, the farmers who have not been seen in the matter will be called on, and the plan of the proposed co-operative concern will be explained to them and an opportunity will be given them to obtain stock in the company.—Roseau Region

Installation.

The A. O. U. W. Lodge will have their installation of officers tomorrow (Friday) evening. A social function will follow the installation and every member is requested to be present.

School Announcements.

School will re-open on Monday January, 9th. The pupils of the 7th and 8th grades will report at the old high school building, second floor. These two grades, enrolling some 150 students, will be organized on the departmental plan. This provides that the grade teacher who excels in some subject will teach that subject to all the pupils in these grades. It is somewhat similar to high school organization and is in operation in some of the best schools in the state. The results obtained by this system are better than under the ordinary method. Nearness to the Lincoln building will also permit these pupils the use of the gymnasium and the privilege of hearing speakers and other entertainers who may appear before the high school students.

The children who have attended the Masonic block school will report at the old high school building, first floor. The 6th grade will take the Northwest room and the others southwest. Miss Anderson's room at the Knox will be the one formerly used by Miss Ekholm. The high school students will report at the Lincoln. All other pupils and teachers will report at their former rooms. The superintendent's office will be found in the Lincoln building.

A special short course of three months for boys and girls over 16 who have not been enrolled in the local schools this year will begin next Monday. No qualifications are required for entrance to this course, and the school's best talent will be employed to make the work useful and within the reach of everyone enrolled. The studies presented will include spelling, practical arithmetic applicable to every day affairs, agriculture, including as many departments of this study as can be presented in the three months, lessons in ordinary English, civics and simple accounting, carpentry, sewing and cooking.

Students are not required to take all of these, but only such work as they can accomplish. Neither is it necessary for them to attend all day; they may enter and leave to suit their out of school duties. Some may find it convenient to attend only half a day, and others from the country with chores to do may wish to leave for home at 3. All should enroll the first morning however and report at the office or the high school assembly. The course is designed particularly for those boys and girls from the country or the town who feel the need of more practical knowledge, but have duties which compel their absence for a large part of the school year. The course is absolutely free, but no one should enroll who cannot be present at least forty days.

A course for Wednesdays only for farmers and their wives will begin on Wednesday, January 18th, and continue for six weeks, closing with a two days farmers' institute. These will be held in the gymnasium of the Lincoln building. Experts from the college of Agriculture, assisted by workers from the northwestern part of the state, will have charge of these meetings. The departments of agriculture, manual training and domestic science in the local high school will co operate. This course will be practical and the information presented must be applicable to local farm conditions. Announcement will appear later giving the particulars of each day's work. At present, the farmers and their wives should plan to meet this new and valuable proposition more than half way and make arrangements to spend every Wednesday at this farmers' school. It might be added that some form of amusement will be introduced into every session. This course, too, is free to all. The construction of the Lincoln school permits of this school extension work in this section of the state. It will be broadened in the future and the school buildings with their fine equipment will be made of service to more than those who formally enroll as ordinary students.

Chooses Special Judge.

Governor A. O. Eberhart the latter part of last week announced the appointment of William Smith as special judge of the municipal court in this city. Mr. Smith took his oath of office last Tuesday.

Closes at 6 o'Clock.

A change has again been made in the closing hour of the stores in this city. The stores will hereafter close at 6 o'clock p. m. instead of 6:30 as first agreed upon, and mention of which is made elsewhere in this issue.

Civil Service Commission.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces that it has been unable to supply the demand for MALE stenographers and typewriters in the United States Government service, especially at Washington, D. C.

Young men who are willing to accept appointment at an entrance salary of $840 to $900 per annum have excellent opportunities for appointment. Advancement of capable appointees is reasonably rapid.

The Government service offers a desirable field to bright and ambitious young men.

Examinations are held at frequent intervals in the principal cities of the United States, and applications may be filed with the Commission at Washington, D. C., at any time.

For full information in regard to the scope and character of the examination and for application forms address the U. S. Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., or the Secretary of the U. S. Civil-Service Board of Examiners at any of the following named cities: Boston, Mass., New York, N. Y., Philadelphia, P. A., Atlanta, Ga., Cincinnati, Ohio, Chicago, Ill., St. Paul Minn., St. Louis, Mo., New Orleans, La., Seattle, Wash., and San Francisco, Cal.

A Clever Trick.

Beyond Highlanding there is a community where the farmers have installed and are operating a telephone system of their own. This telephone line, however, is not connected with any line from the outside world but is used solely for their own convenience and pleasure. Last Sunday morning Dr. Mellby received a hurried call for medical attendance over the telephone from that community and was surprised when told by which method they had managed to send their message.

As the time was short and medical attendance was urgent the parties concerned were almost in despair as to what method they should adopt so as not to cause too long a delay.

At a place where the farmers telephone line is but a short distance from the line that connects with the local telephone exchange they had strung a wire which connected the two systems, and in this manner sent their message without difficulty. On the spur of the moment this is certainly a clever piece of work.

The Fire Bag.

Every whaler and sealer that sailed the seas in the days of wooden ships carried a fire bag. This was a tarpaulin bag about a foot long and six inches wide lined with waterproof material, with interlinings of oilcloth and thick flannel. Into this was placed the flint and tinder box for kindling fire, and the bag was then securely fastened with double flaps and tied to keep its contents dry. It was the special duty of the second mate to look after the fire bag and in case of shipwreck to attack it at once to his person by means of stout straps provided for the purpose. Thus if officers and crew were cast away on some deserted shore in the desolate arctic circle the means of obtaining a fire to warm themselves by and to heat food and drink would not be wanting as long as the precious fire bag was safe.

The steam whalers and sealers of the present day still carry a fire bag stowed in the lifeboat with the bread and water, but now it is of rubber and contains half a dozen tin boxes of matches.—New York Press.

Hanged the Clever Forger.

Of curious petitions against the death penalty being enforced one recalls the eighteenth century case of William Lyland, who was sentenced for forging a bill for £7,114 on the East India House. The forgery was a work of art. No less than thirty signatures were imitated, and at the trial not one of the victims could swear that the signature was not his own. However, with the help of the paper manufacturers Ryland's guilt was brought home. Then came the petition of his friends. So clever a man ought never to be hanged, they pleaded. His craftsmanship should save him. It gained him a respite. He was allowed to finish a fine engraving he had begun, but nothing more. Though the engraver was a favorite of George III., that king quite failed to see how a forgery could be excused on the ground that it was a clever forgery.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Soap and Water Cure.

The traveler in the Himalayas must be prepared for surprises. Two days after the Hon. C. G. Bruce had reached Mana he received a message from a young lady saying that ever since she had seen him on the day of his arrival she had been ill. "I was very much hurt, I allow," says Major Bruce in "Twenty Years In the Himalayas." During the course of a short but interesting career no such snub had ever been administered to my self respect. I said, 'But can't I do anything?' She said, 'Yes; wash your face and let me have the water.' So we got hot water and soap, and she sat on a rock to see that there was no deception. The water, or, rather, the decoction, was then put into a long tumbler, and she then and there drank it all! What is more, the next day she sent word that she was quite cured."

Four Hundred Years Before Peary.

The north pole is the place of greatest dignity in the world, and the people who dwell near it "have a wonderful excellency and an exceeding prerogative above all nations of the earth." How blessed we may think this nation to be, for they are in perpetual light and never know what darkness meaneth, by the benefit of twilight and full moons, as the learned in astronomy do very well know, which people, if they have the notice of their eternity by the comfortable light of the gospel, then are they blessed and all of nations most blessed. Why then do we neglect the search of this excellent discovery, against which there can be nothing said to hinder the same?—From Hakluyt's Voyage (Sixteenth Century).

An Ill Fated City.

The ill fated Sicilian city of Messina was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake in 1693 and greatly damaged by another in 1783. In 1743 the plague carried off nearly half of its inhabitants. In 1784 the city was visited by a terrible quake and tidal wave, which finished its destruction. In fact, it would be difficult to find anywhere a city with a more mournful history than Messina, which has been practically destroyed twenty-one times during the past 3,000 years.

Apropos of loss of friends somebody was saying one day before Morgan, the great calculator of lives, that they had lost so many friends, mentioning the number, in a certain space of time, upon which Morgan, coolly taking down a book from his office shelf and looking into it, said, "So you ought, sir, and three more."—Thomas Moore.

Making the King's Bed.

Among the duties of the yeomen of the guard in the olden times was the singular one of making the king's bed every night and searching it for any dangerous weapon that might be concealed therein to the detriment of his majesty's sacred person. First one of these stalwart soldiers had "to tumble up and down" the mattress. Then "the esquire for the body" took the sheets and rolled them on his arm or "stripped" them through his hands. Whenever the yeomen touched the bedclothes they had to make the sign of the cross and kiss the place, which must have rather prolonged the ceremony! Finally, when the bed had been made, with much quaint but interminable "ritual," the said esquire sprinkled it with holy water, and then the martial bedmakers retired, to a supper provided for them "without the traverse"—i. e., across the corridor.

Henry VIII. greatly embellished the yeomen's costume and presented them with cloth of gold horse cloths valued at £5 a yard. His first queen, Katherine of Aragon, by the way, had a bodyguard all to herself, which, after her divorce, passed into the service of Anne Boleyn.—Richard Davey's "The Tower of London."

Willing to Be Martyrs.

Some years ago a French tradesman stated that he wished to be guillotined instead of a murderer who had been condemned to death. Of course the authorities declined to do as he wished, and he went away vowing that he would give his life for some one else later on.

A Russian peasant who was noted for his quiet piety offered to be shot in order to save a revolutionary who was awaiting the carrying out of the death penalty. This, he said, was not done out of any sympathy for the accused, but merely to show his disapproval of the principle of taking lives of criminals.

Probably the most extraordinary case on record was that of a Quebec citizen who passed himself off as a murderer for whom the police were searching. When the matter was investigated it was found that the self accused man had nothing whatever to do with the crime. "No," he said, "you're right. I'm not the murderer, but my wife leads me such a miserable life at home that I thought I would escape from matrimonial wretchedness by getting the government to hang me."—Pearson's.

Queen Elizabeth and Her Portraits.

The modern grievance of the illustrious against the photographer of the halfpenny paper has a parallel as far back as the early part of Queen Elizabeth's reign, when her minister, Cecil, issued a proclamation against the circulation of ill favored likenesses of her majesty. It stated that, as her majesty had perceived "a great number of her loving subjects to be much grieved with the errors and deformities" displayed in many popular portraits of herself, she had been pleased, "being herein, as it were, overcome with the continual requests of so many of her nobility and lords, to command that some cunning person should shortly make a portrait of her person or visage to be participated to others for the comfort of her loving subjects."

Scottish Names.

No country has experienced the difficulty arising from the commonness of one surname in a district more intensely than Scotland. With a whole countryside populated by Campbells, Frasers or Gordons, some more distinguishing nomenclature had to be found. And no doubt this was the chief reason why at one time men were always known by the name of their estate or farm. Dean Ramsay remembered an old cowherd who was always known as Boggy. His real name was Sandy Anderson, but he had once owned a wretched farm called Boggendreep, and he was Boggy to the day of his death.

The X Ray.

The X ray, so called, was discovered on Oct. 8, 1895, by Professor W. C. Roentgen. The professor was experimenting with a Crookes vacuum tube, electrically excited, and enveloped in a black covering, when he noticed that some of the rays proceeding from the tube passed through the black paper and affected a fluorescent screen some two or three yards away. In such way did his great discovery come to him, when he was least expecting it.

Persistent.

"Our Tommy," said the boy's mother, "ought to make a success in life. He shows great determination to stick to anything he undertakes."

"Does he?" queried the proud father.

"Yes," she replied. "Why, he put in the whole day making soap bubbles and trying to tie a string to them."—Chicago News.

Worry, whatever its source, weakens, takes away courage and shortens life.

He Worried the Judge.

A story was recently told of the elder Judge Peckham, father of the supreme court justice. In the early days of dentistry a hickory plug was put into the cavity to fill the space where a tooth ought to be. This plug had to be gently pounded into its desired position. The old judge was somewhat addicted to strong language, and when the dentist began his wor kthe judge indulged in some classic comment. As the tapping of the plug continued he threw all dignity to the four winds of heaven, and his language became decidedly "more forcible than elegant." When, however, he arose from the chair after what seemed to him an interminable period of agony he pulled out all the stops in his vocabulary for a grand climax. The impression on his listener seems to have been deep and lasting. As the judge passed out the dentist grimly remarked to a waiting patient:

"Wasn't it beautiful? It wasn't really necessary to pound half so long, but I did so enjoy his inflection that I almost pounded the hickory plug into splinters. Wonderful command of language the judge has!"—Case and Comment.

Crossed by the Corpse.

Most of Walthamstow is too modern to have much mystery about it, but the Walthamstow strip" of Leyton preserves the memory of a curious old rule. Barely a hundred yards broad, this strip of land, belonging to Walthamstow parish, ran right across Leyton from the lea to Snaresbrook, parallel with the southern border of Walthamstow. How came Leyton to be crossed by this alien strip? Leyton, it was said, had once refused to bury a body found in the lea; Walthamstow came forward to do it. And in such cases it was the rule that the volunteering parish might take from the other as much land right through to the other side as the men who carried the corpse could cover walking in line hand in hand arms extended. The inconvenient result worried both parishes until the growth of population made new parishes necessary.—London Chronicle.

Wasted on Him.

"Occasionally," remarked the visiting Londoner, "I see in some American paper a supposititious colloquy referring to an aeroplane line to Mars. Do you know, that strikes me as being exceedingly funny. Evidently the writer is ignorant of the fact that our atmosphere does not extend upward more than fifty or a hundred miles and becomes more and more tenuous as it nears the limit. He does not seem to know that the air is absolutely necessary in flying an aeroplane. It is highly probable that no aviator ever will ascend to a higher elevation than ten or fifteen miles even if he can endure the excessive cold he will encounter at that altitude. The idea of sailing an aeroplane through the imponderable ether is ineffably absurd."—Chicago Tribune.

Help the Children.

"There is nothing in all the world so important as children, nothing so interesting. If you ever wish to go in for some philanthropy, if you ever wish to be of any real use in the world, do something for children. If you ever yearn to be truly wise, study children. We can dress the sore, bandage the wounded, imprison the criminal, heal the sick and bury the dead, but there is always a chance that we can save a child. If the great army of philanthropists ever exterminate sin and pestilence, ever work out our race's salvation, it will be because a little child has led them."—David Starr Jordan.

Strange Storehouses.

In the old birds' nests that are placed near the ground in shrubs and small trees close to hazelnut bushes and bittersweet vines one will often find a handful of hazelnuts or bittersweet berries. They were put there by the white footed mice and the meadow mice, which visit these storehouses regularly. Very often a white footed mouse will cover a bird's nest with fine dried grass and inner bark and make a nest for itself.—New York Tribune.

Three Inscriptions.

On the doorways of Milan cathedral are three inscriptions. The first, placed under a carved rose wreath, runs, "All that which pleases is only for a moment." The second, under a cross, reads, "All that which troubles is but for a moment," and under the central arch is the inscription, "That only is which is eternal."

A Popular Game.

"Many games originated from ancient forms of worship, human sacrifice, marriage, burial and other ceremonies," Dr. A. O. Haddon remarked in an address at the Royal Sanitary Institute. "Leapfrog is a game common to almost every country, including New Guinea and Japan."—London Standard.

The Magpie Ceiling.

One of the apartments in the ancient royal palace at Cintra, Portugal, is known as the Hall of Magpies. Painted in the arabesque ceiling is to be found a swarm of magpies. Each has in the mouth a scroll, on which, painted in red on a white ground, are the words, "Por bem." The story runs that King John of Portugal was making love to one of the maids of honor in this chamber and was surprised by the queen. His majesty made the best of the circumstances and explained to the queen, "E por bem minka sacre" ("Oh, it is nothing at all. It is quite right. There is no harm in it"). As to whether the queen was satisfied the legend is silent, but the ladies of the court were deeply interested and were constantly saying to one another with a smile, "Por bem! Por bem!" The king thought it time to act, so he commissioned an artist to paint on the ceiling as many magpies as there were talkative ladies about the court, each holding in the beak the ribbon with the words, "Por bem."—London Globe.

Fate of Portugal's Homer.

"The Lusiad" is one of the noblest records ever written of national glory and success. Camoens, its gifted author, determined to do for Portugal what Homer had done for Greece. The great poem was written in the sixteenth century, which has been called the heroic age of Portugal, and its main feature is the rounding of the Cape of Good Hope by Vasco da Gama, while a most interesting episode is the crowning after death of Inez de Castro as queen of Portugal. "The Lusiad" took its name from Lusius, who was said to have founded Lisbon. Its author was born about 1520, and his career, which began brilliantly, was blighted by the death of a broken heart of the lady of his love, for whose sake he was banished from the land. He wrote "The Lusiad" in his banishment and was recalled in 1571, losing on the way all his property except his poem. Pensioned at first by the king, this great epic poet of Portugal died in great poverty in 1570, when his patron was also dead.

Down In a Coal Mine.

To the ear accustomed to the constant sound of a living world the stillness of a coal mine, where the miles of crosscuts and entries and the unyielding walls swallow up all sounds and echo is a silence that is complete, but as one becomes accustomed to the silence through long hours of solitary work sounds become audible that would escape an ear less trained. The trickling murmur of the gas, the spattering fall of a lump of coal loosened by some mysterious force from a cranny in the wall, the sudden knocking and breaking of a stratum far up in the rock above or the scurry of a rat off somewhere in the darkness strike on the ear loud and startling. The eye, too, becomes trained to penetrate the darkness, but the darkness is so complete that there is a limit—the limit of the rays cast by the pit lamp.—Joseph Husband in Atlantic.

Portuguese and Codfish.

It is an interesting fact that the fishermen of northern Portugal started and developed the fishing industry on the "banks" off the northern coast of America, and, though they now send fewer ships, their taste for salt cod from Newfoundland is unabated—in fact, it is a national Portuguese dainty. It is found in every little grocery shop, hard and brown as a board. A number of Portuguese have made their home on the islands to the south of the mainland of Massachusetts, and there the dark eyes of the Iberian maiden, raven locks and a certain picturesque element in dress are not infrequent. This connection with Portugal dates back many years, the ships of Marthas Vineyard bridging the distance over sea and returning with Portuguese crews.—Exchange.

Adam and Eve.

"I hope this expulsion of ours is not going to injure our social position," said Eve ruefully.

"I guess not," replied Adam. "They can't stop us from being one of the very first families, whatever they do."

"I don't find our names here in the 'Social Register,'" said Eve, looking the volume over.

"Look under 'Dilatory Domiciles,' my love," said Adam as he went out and named the jackass after himself.—Harper's Weekly.

A Pithy Sermon.

Here is the pithiest sermon ever preached: "Our ingress into life is naked and bare, our progress through life is trouble and care, our egress out of it we know not where; but, doing well here, we shall do well there. I could not tell more by preaching a year."

Wanted It Well Hidden.

Little Bobby was too polite to say he wanted a big piece of the turkey, but he said he would like a piece of the chest, where the wishbone was, only he didn't want to find the wishbone too quick.—Browning's Magazine.

"Not exactly. He gave a million away and threw her in."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Ascum—Well, well! I congratulate you, old man. And how is the baby to be named? Peploy—By my wife's people, it seems.—Exchange.

Stage Snow.

In "Personal Reminiscences of Henry Irving" Bram Stoker lets his readers into the secret of how the snow scene in "The Corsican Brothers" was made so effective:

"All over the stage was a thick blanket of snow, white and glistening in the winter sunrise—snow that lay so thick that when the duelists, stripped and armed, stood face to face they each secured a firmer foothold by clearing it away. Of many wonderful effects this snow was perhaps the strongest and most impressive of reality. The public could never imagine how it was done. It was salt—common coarse salt—which was white in the appointed light and glistened like real snow. There were tons of it. A crowd of men stood ready in the wings with little baggage trucks such as are now used in the corridors of great hotels, silent with rubber wheels. On them were great wide mouthed sacks full of salt. When the signal came they rushed in on all sides, each to his appointed spot, and tumbled out his load, spreading it evenly with great wide bladed wooden shovels."

Tuning Bells.

"What a beautiful tone that bell has!" is often heard. There are few, however, who know how a bell receives its joyful or solemn tones. All bells after they are cast and finished must go through a process of tuning the same as any other musical instrument before they respond with a clear, true tone. Every bell sounds five notes, which must blend together in order to produce perfect harmony. The tuning of a bell is done by means of shaving thin bits from various parts of the metal. It is as easy for an expert bell tuner to put a bell in tune as it is for a piano tuner to adjust his instrument to perfect chords. At first thought it would seem that a bell would be ruined should a tuner shave off too much at the last tuning, or the fifth sound, but such is not the case. He would, however, be obliged to begin over, starting again with the first tone and shaving the bell till it gave forth its harmonious sound at the fifth tone.—Scientific American.

No Clock Wanted.

There had been some talk of placing a clock in the tower of the village church. But John, the old sexton, who lived in the little cottage opposite the church, declared himself "dead agin it" and expressed the opinion that it would mean "an awful waste o' brass" were the scheme carried out.

"We want no clocks," he said the other day. "We've done without clocks up to now, an' we shall manage. Why, lyin' i' my bed of a mornin' I can see the time by the sundial over the porch."

"Yes," replied one who approved of the scheme, "that's all right so far as it goes. But the sun doesn't shine every morning. What do you do then?"

"Why," answered John surprisedly, "I knows then as it ain't fit weather to be out o' bed, an' I just stops where I is."—London Tit-Bits.

The Lavish Jenkins.

In October, 1886, a religiously minded Buckinghamshire farmer named Jenkins brought his firstborn to the parish church to be christened, and this was to be the name: Abel Benjamin Caleb Daniel Ezra Felix Gabriel Haggai Isaac Jacob Kish Levi Manoah Nehemiah Obdiah Peter Quartus Rechab Samuel Tobiah Uzziel Vaniah Word Xystus Zechariah. It will be observed that the names are all arranged in alphabetical order and are as far as possible selected from Scripture. It was only with the very greatest difficulty that the clergyman dissuaded Mr. Jenkins from doing the lasting wrong to his child that he had unwittingly devised, but eventually it was decided to christen the boy simply Abel.—Chambers' Journal.

Where Plato Taught.

The famous academy of Plato was in a suburb of Athens, about a mile north of the Dypilum gate. It is said to have belonged to the hero Academus; hence the name. It was surrounded with a wall and adorned with walks, groves and fountains. Plato possessed a small estate in the neighborhood and for some fifty years taught his "divine philosophy" to young and old assembled in the academy to listen to his wise words. After Plato's death in 348 B. C. the academy lost much of its fame, but the beauty remained for centuries after the great teacher was no more.—New York American.

Poet Laureate.

The office of poet laureate practically begins with Chaucer, who assumed the title about 1385. After Chaucer the office was more or less in the shadow, but from Spenser in 1599 the line of poet laureate is pretty well filled down to the present time. The office is largely honorary and has not always been held by the greatest of English poets, Dryden, Wordsworth and Tennyson being the most illustrious of its holders.—Exchange.

His Own Valuation.

"Belle tells me she is sorry she ever married you," said a young lady to the husband of her dearest friend.

"So she ought to be," he retorted. "She did some nice girl out of a good husband."

Unhappiness.

They who have never known prosperity can hardly be said to be unhappy. It is from the remembrance of joys we have lost that the arrows of affliction are pointed.—Emile Fels.

It will never rain roses. If we want more roses we must plant more trees.

Why He Wanted References.

At a credit men's dinner one of the veterans told this story: "In the reconstruction days a man from a Mississippi valley town came to our western house one day. We had sold him before in a small way, and he always paid. He had enlarged his business, he told us, and wanted a bigger line than usual, but before making his selections he wanted us to give him references. We expressed surprise at such an unheard of demand, but he said, 'My two brothers-in-law have gone in with me, and they're very particular as to whom they do business with.' So we sent him to our banks, and he came back, said we were all right, picked out a big line of goods, and in sixty days he 'busted.' We couldn't collect a dollar. Two years later I met the man in Cincinnati and told him we had become reconciled to our loss. 'But will you please tell me,' I asked, 'why did you want references as to our credit?' 'Well, you see,' he answered, 'I wanted to know if you could stand it.'"—Exchange.

No Law's Delay Here.

In Perak, in the Malay peninsula, lawyers find no business, for a modified form of trial by ordeal decides all disputes. In place of the legal practitioner the pleader is a native boy who is assigned to one or the other of the sides and is given a bamboo tube in which is sealed the pleading of the person or party whom he represents. When all is ready two stakes are driven into the bed of a stream, and by aid of a bamboo pole the heads of the two boys are submerged at the same time. By grasping the stakes they are enabled to remain under water for quite awhile after their natural inclination would bring them to the surface, but at last one of them gives in and, releasing his hold of the stake, comes to the air. He is immediately seized, and the tube he holds is cast aside. The other lad is led ashore, his tube opened, and the document contained therein stands as the decision in the case.

Scott Relics at Abbotsford.

The present estate of Abbotsford was formed during the years 1811 to 1817 from various small farms, the first one purchased bearing the "inharmonious designation" Clarty Hole. After Sir Walter Scott's death in 1834 a committee of friends collected £8,000 toward the redemption of the estate, and Mr. Cadell, the publisher, contributed the rest on receiving the rights over Scott's works. The library and museum had been given some years before by the creditors. As his son, Lieutenant Colonel W. Scott, died on his way home from India, the property descended to J. R. Lockhart, his son-in-law, and thence to his daughter's husband, J. R. Hope-Scott, whose daughter held the estate for some years. Many Scott relics are preserved in the house, notably his chair and writing table in the study and his hat and gloves in the hall.—London Standard.

Hard For the Eskimos.

One of the difficulties of the Moravian missionaries in Labrador is to make the Old Testament, with its wealth of pastoral detail, intelligible to the Eskimos, not one of whom has ever seen a horse. "Sheep and cattle," says Hesketh Pritchard in "Hunting Camps In Wood and Wilderness," "they cannot realize or conceive of, for there are no domesticated animals save dogs in that portion of the peninsula. They comprehend the story of Esau, the hunter, and that of Samson and the lion, which animal can be translated as polar bear, but of Abraham in the land of Mesopotamia they can form no picture. The nearest approach to these ideas is drawn from the harvest of the sea, seals and fish taking the place of flocks and herds."

Mistletoe a Menace.

Few people who know mistletoe only as a desirable feature of Christmas decorations understand that the plant is a parasite dangerous to the life of trees in the regions in which it grows. It is only a question of time after mistletoe once begins to grow upon a tree before the tree itself will be killed. The parasite saps the life of the infected branches. Fortunately it is of slow growth, taking years to develop to large proportions, but when neglected it invariably ruins all trees it reaches. The only method of extermination is the cutting down of diseased trees.—Exchange.

Magnitude of Stars.

The brighter a star is the smaller the number representing its magnitude, and consequently a star of the first magnitude is brighter than one of the second, and one of the second magnitude is two magnitudes brighter than one of the fourth. In the same way stars brighter than the first magnitude can be represented by numbers smaller than one, by decimals, or even by negative numbers. Sirius is of the 1.4 magnitude, Vega of 0.2 magnitude. Our sun is a star of the 26.5 magnitude, and it gives us 10,000,000,000 times as much light as Sirius. If the sun were twice as far away from us as it is it would give only one-quarter as much light. If it were 100,000 times farther off than it is its light would be the same intensity as that of Sirius. But even at this enormous distance the sun would be only about one-sixth as far away as Sirius exactly lies. In other words, Sirius shines with a luster fully thirty times that of our sun.—New York World.

How Fast of Ramadan Begins.

Since the Mohammedan year is composed of lunar months, the beginning of the fast is dependent upon the appearance of the new moon. The word of the almanac is not taken as true evidence, and before the mufti, the highest Moslem official in the nation, declares the fast to have begun two Mohammedans must appear before him and swear that they have seen the new moon. In precisely the same manner the fact comes to a close. The mufti proclaims a three days' feast whenever the next new moon is seen by two of the faithful. One year the moon was visible in upper Egypt the night before it was observed in Cairo. Two Mohammedans up the Nile telegraphed the fact to the mufti, asking him to announce the feast. This he refused to do on the ground that a telegram could not take the place of two Moslem witnesses.—Christian Herald.

Old Daddy Longlegs.

Everybody is well acquainted with the insect called "daddy longlegs," but not everybody knows that there is evidence to show that this strange little creature, towering high upon its threadlike stilts, is probably a more ancient inhabitant of America than any representative of the human species. Far back in tertiary time, at the very dawn of the modern world, its ancestors lived, we are told, in great numbers in that part of the continent which we call Colorado. The fossil remains of these insects show the characteristic features that mark them today, although new species have taken the place of the old, for even "daddy longlegs" knows what evolution is and has attained to something that in his view is perhaps a kind of civilized existence suitable to the exigencies of life in the twentieth century.—Harper's Weekly.

The Hunting of the Tahr.

Of all the ways of hunting surely that of the hillmen of Garhwal is the strangest. This, according to Major the Hon. C. G. Bruce, in "Twenty Years in the Himalayas," is their method of killing the tahr, a local species of goat: "Having driven the tahr into deep nullahs with most precipitous sides, out of which there are certain well known tahr runs, they proceed to cover these runs where the ground is most difficult with mats made of split bamboo which have been previously well drenched in water. The result is the mats freeze and become as slippery as glass. Then they frighten the herd and drive them over these mats, with the result that they are precipitated from the cliffs and that the Garhwali pick up the remains—perhaps twelve basketfuls."

Mostly Hall.

A New Yorker bought one of those fine old colonial places down in Virginia, principally on account of the glowing description of the real estate agent and on information from friends. When he went down to see his mansion he was much impressed by the great pillars, the spacious porch and particularly the great hall running from the front to the back of the house.

He inspected the place and came back to New York.

"What shall you name it?" he was asked.

"I think," he replied, "I shall call it Mostly Hall."—Saturday Evening Post.

Philadelphia Is Not So Slow.

"Mother," said a thoughtful Boston child, "is Philadelphia older than Boston?"

"Of course not, my son. The first settlement was made in Charlestown in 1630, while William Penn did not arrive on the site of Philadelphia until fifty-two years later."

"That was always my impression, mother. How is it, then, that Philadelphia is mentioned in the Bible, while Boston is not?"—Boston Star.

He Worried the Judge.

A story was recently told of the elder Judge Peckham, father of the supreme court justice. In the early days of dentistry a hickory plug was put into the cavity to fill the space where a tooth ought to be. This plug had to be gently pounded into its desired position. The old judge was somewhat addicted to strong language, and when the dentist began his wor kthe judge indulged in some classic comment. As the tapping of the plug continued he threw all dignity to the four winds of heaven, and his language became decidedly "more forcible than elegant." When, however, he arose from the chair after what seemed to him an interminable period of agony he pulled out all the stops in his vocabulary for a grand climax. The impression on his listener seems to have been deep and lasting. As the judge passed out the dentist grimly remarked to a waiting patient:

"Wasn't it beautiful? It wasn't really necessary to pound half so long, but I did so enjoy his inflection that I almost pounded the hickory plug into splinters. Wonderful command of language the judge has!"—Case and Comment.

Crossed by the Corpse.

Most of Walthamstow is too modern to have much mystery about it, but the Walthamstow strip" of Leyton preserves the memory of a curious old rule. Barely a hundred yards broad, this strip of land, belonging to Walthamstow parish, ran right across Leyton from the lea to Snaresbrook, parallel with the southern border of Walthamstow. How came Leyton to be crossed by this alien strip? Leyton, it was said, had once refused to bury a body found in the lea; Walthamstow came forward to do it. And in such cases it was the rule that the volunteering parish might take from the other as much land right through to the other side as the men who carried the corpse could cover walking in line hand in hand arms extended. The inconvenient result worried both parishes until the growth of population made new parishes necessary.—London Chronicle.

Wasted on Him.

"Occasionally," remarked the visiting Londoner, "I see in some American paper a supposititious colloquy referring to an aeroplane line to Mars. Do you know, that strikes me as being exceedingly funny. Evidently the writer is ignorant of the fact that our atmosphere does not extend upward more than fifty or a hundred miles and becomes more and more tenuous as it nears the limit. He does not seem to know that the air is absolutely necessary in flying an aeroplane. It is highly probable that no aviator ever will ascend to a higher elevation than ten or fifteen miles even if he can endure the excessive cold he will encounter at that altitude. The idea of sailing an aeroplane through the imponderable ether is ineffably absurd."—Chicago Tribune.

Help the Children.

"There is nothing in all the world so important as children, nothing so interesting. If you ever wish to go in for some philanthropy, if you ever wish to be of any real use in the world, do something for children. If you ever yearn to be truly wise, study children. We can dress the sore, bandage the wounded, imprison the criminal, heal the sick and bury the dead, but there is always a chance that we can save a child. If the great army of philanthropists ever exterminate sin and pestilence, ever work out our race's salvation, it will be because a little child has led them."—David Starr Jordan.

Strange Storehouses.

In the old birds' nests that are placed near the ground in shrubs and small trees close to hazelnut bushes and bittersweet vines one will often find a handful of hazelnuts or bittersweet berries. They were put there by the white footed mice and the meadow mice, which visit these storehouses regularly. Very often a white footed mouse will cover a bird's nest with fine dried grass and inner bark and make a nest for itself.—New York Tribune.

Three Inscriptions.

On the doorways of Milan cathedral are three inscriptions. The first, placed under a carved rose wreath, runs, "All that which pleases is only for a moment." The second, under a cross, reads, "All that which troubles is but for a moment," and under the central arch is the inscription, "That only is which is eternal."

A Popular Game.

Tamed Him.

"Slip me a brace of cackles," ordered the chesty looking young man with a bored air as he perched on the first stool in the lunch room.

"A what?" asked the waitress as she placed a glass of water before him.

"Adam and Eve flat on their backs! A pair of sunny siders!" said the young man in an exasperated tone.

"You got me, kid," returned the waitress. "Watcha want?"

"Eggs up," said the young man. "E-g-g-s, the kind that come before the hen or after, I never knew which."

"Why didn't you say so in the first place?" asked the waitress. "You'd 'a' had 'em by this time."

"Well, of all things!" said the young man.

"I know what he was drivin' at all the time," began the waitress as the young man departed. "But he's one of them fellers that thinks they can get by with anything. He don't know that they're using plain English now in restaurants."—Kansas City Times.

Knew Just How.

Many years ago in Paris at the first presentation of a tragedy that had for its closing scene the murder of a Swedish king which had taken place nearly half a century earlier all went well till the murder scene came on, when a very dignified old gentleman in the stage box showed signs of strong dissatisfaction and at length called out angrily:

"Absurd! They've got it all wrong!"

The manager himself heard this plain spoken comment, and, being naturally disturbed by so sweeping a condemnation, he sought out the critic and politely begged to know what fault he had to find with it.

"Why, my good sir," cried the old man, with an air of authority, "the whole grouping of the scene is incorrect! You have made them kill the king to the right of the door, whereas we murdered him on the left!"

The Tea Chewers.

"Chewing tea comes from Siam," said a traveler. "They call it mieng. It is in a plug, like chewing tobacco, and it has a villainous smell. This smell is due to the fermentation it has undergone. The tea that the Siamese employ for chewing purposes is a very coarse, rank plant. It is gathered like ordinary tea, but the leaves after being compressed into plugs are buried for fifteen days. They ferment during burial. On their resurrection they are very, very fragrant indeed. The Siamese boatmen chew tea. The rickshaw men chew it. The litterateurs chew it. They say it makes them work better. This is probably the truth, for I chewed a plug myself in Anam, and it exhilarated me strangely. But the aftermath was bad—a headache, smarting eyes and nervous depression."—Washington Post.

When Tolstoy Tried to Fly.

From earliest childhood Tolstoy was remarkably observant of the things that were going on in the world around him. Thus, while still in his teens, we find him taking an interest in the art of flying that was too practical to suit his devoted mother. With characteristic thoroughness he invented a design of his own and with equally characteristic courage proceeded to put it to an immediate test from a second story window. But the boy, who was afterward to find food for thought for the whole civilized world, was not destined to make his mark as an infant aeroplanist. He fell instantly to the ground, and, though by great good fortune no bones were actually broken, the concussion was so great that young Tolstoy afterward slept for sixteen hours on end.

Joy For Johnny.

Johnny's mother was telling Johnny stories from Bible history. And Johnny for a long time was very silent. At last he sighed and looked up questioningly into his mother's face.

"When I get to heaven shall I know every one?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," answered his mother.

"Napoleon, and Samuel, and George Washington, and Solomon, and—and David?" persisted Johnny.

"Certainly, dear!"

"Well, then, mother, if I'm very good—if I'm ever so good and ask him ever so nicely, do you think that David will let me touch his slingshot—just touch it—once?"—Philadelphia Times.

Death.

Death, the dry pedant, spares neither the rose nor the thistle, nor does he forget the solitary blade of grass in the distant waste. He destroys thoroughly and unceasingly. FARM ORCHARD AND GARDEN BY F.E.TRIGG CENTRAL POINT ROGUE RIVER VALLEY OREGON CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED

WHAT TWO STUDENTS DID.

As showing that the instruction that is given at the agricultural colleges is of a practical and valuable kind may be cited the case of two Minnesota young men. One after finishing his course at the state school took up the raising of potatoes on a scientific scale. On 200 acres, which was a virgin prairie a half dozen years ago, he raised last season (1909) an average of 187 bushels to the acre, from which he realized net $10,000. This year he expected to increase his yield to 200 bushels and to get just as large a net revenue. To do what this young fellow did took brains and hustle. The other graduate of the same institution started five years ago with $500. He went into debt $11,500 for a 240 acre farm. He also had hustle and brains. Now he has property valued at $12,500. In the interval mentioned he has paid $1,000 a year in interest, spent $1,000 on buildings, has pure bred horses, cattle and swine worth $5,000, and he holds that his farm has increased $10 an acre in value, which it must be admitted is a conservative estimate. The book farming he learned at the agricultural college he put to good account, his wheat averaging ten bushels more per acre than his neighbor's, whose soil was just as good. These instances may be termed by some exceptional, yet they show nicely what a fellow can do if he is equipped for his work and takes hold of it with determination.

ONE CAUSE OF HIGH PRICED MEATS.

While the prevailing high prices for all commodities have doubtless been in a large measure due to a price inflation which has been worldwide, there is little question that a very important factor in causing high prices of meats has been due to the rapid cutting up of considerable range areas of the western plain and mountain sites through settlement by homesteaders. This settlement, which is going on more rapidly today than ever, means that the day of the vigorous range sheep and cattle, which were eagerly bought and shipped to points farther east for feeding, is fast passing and that ere long the territory which heretofore has been raising the feed with which to fatten these cattle will also have to breed and rear its own fattening animals. Taking into account that this will have to be done on high priced land, it means that higher prices are bound to prevail for cattle and sheep, whatever fluctuations from month to month may be, due to stockyard receipts. Corn belt should keep this situation in mind and be ready for it.

DO MOLES EAT GRAIN?

There has been considerable discussion over the question whether the mole is entirely an insectivorous animal or whether its bill of fare includes besides insects some grain. To settle this question one of the instructors in the Michigan agricultural college put a mole in a box of fresh earth in which some twenty kernels of corn were placed in four or five places. At the end of thirty-six hours it was found that all of the corn had been searched out and devoured, and there was no getting around the fact that the mole was responsible. This experiment tends to prove the claim of some that when a mole follows a row of corn he is not only after insects which may have been attracted by the presence of the seed, but the seed itself. It is a matter of common observation that when the mole can get all the big, white, juicy grubs he wants he does not seem to care for or molest anything else, but it is more than likely when these are not to be had he goes after other insects and grain if he can locate it.

WATER IN THE HOUSE.

In response to 600 queries sent out by the country life commission a couple of years ago, asking what one thing would be of most interest to farm life from the standpoint of the housewife, some [illegible] replies mentioned first "water in the house." Considering the distance some farm women have to go for water and the amount of it they have to carry in twenty-four hours, we guess these good housewives hit the nail on the head. The lack is one that ought to be remedied by digging a well nearer the house or moving the house nearer the well. Better than either of these is the installation of a tank and pipe system which will make it possible to have water on tap in the kitchen all the time, while the installation of a galvanized tank connected with a water front in the kitchen stove will mean that hot water will be under faucet all the time, thus doing away with much of the teakettle nuisance. Properly arranged, the same system may be used to furnish water for the stock in the barn.

A Jersey calf of the male persuasion that hasn't sufficient merit to justify his use as a sire should be converted into veal by the time he is ten weeks old.

Some one who has tried it says that scattering concentrated lye in their runways will fix the rats. The stuff gets on their feet and burns them, and they next put their feet to their mouths to lick the lye off, and this finishes them.

A rat trap that works like a charm may be rigged up by sprinkling a couple of handfuls of bran over the surface of half a pailful of water, with some sort of an approach fixed so that the rodents can get into the pail without difficulty. We have seen this tried and know that it works well.

Roughly a horse will eat as much hay per day during the year as it weighs in hundred pounds; hence a horse weighing 1,200 pounds would eat twelve times 365, or 4,380 pounds of hay. This estimate is on the supposition that a fair grain ration is fed. If this were increased or diminished a trifle less or more hay would need to be fed.

In the purchase of cows for the dairy herd the cow is of vastly more importance than the price paid for her. To many men a cow is a cow and one worth no more than another. Yet when you get down to hardpan one cow for dairy purposes may be worth four or five times as much on a cash revenue basis as another that outwardly seems to be as good looking and be cheap at $80 or even $100, where the other wouldn't be worth a cent more than she would fetch as butcher's stock.

The fellow who goes with hair and beard untrimmed, dirt on his neck and in his ears, belongs exactly to the same class as the woman who goes about the house in a dirty, slovenly old wrapper when one neat and clean would not cost a cent more. Both are sinners and should repent—should clean up and try to make themselves as winsome and attractive as possible. A little gumption and the same amount of soap won't remove freckles, cure a hair lip or make over ugly features, but they will go a long way toward making a pretty unlovely individual look clean and presentable.

More boys go to the bad every year because they are not made to feel that they amount to something than from any other cause. The ball is started to rolling when they are little fellows and treated as if they were all round nuisances, and it's kept up until the job is finished. Those who have a hand in this process of degeneration apparently forget that the boys (and girls) are the best asset the country has, not excepting all the blue ribbon winners at the big stock shows. Give the boys something to do and try to cultivate in them a feeling that they amount to something in the busy workaday life and many of them will be saved from failure and utter misery.

Kids that are allowed the run of all outdoors will get their hands and faces dirty, but for their own sakes and the reputation of the place they call home they ought to be cleaned up at least once a day and be given an all over warm water bath once or twice a week—twice won't hurt 'em any. We saw some forlorn little heathen the other day that but for the fact that they stood on their hind legs might have been little pigs right out of the pen or kittens from an ash barrel. When the good Lord ordained lye and grease he made soap possible and probably intended when six or eight bars can be had for a quarter that parents should use enough of it to keep their kiddies clean.

There's many a man engaged in tilling the soil who is wont to poke fun at the agricultural college professors and lead pencil farming in general, has got up at 4 a. m. to do chores and has wound up with them at bedtime and has literally grown gray headed at the farming business, who has not up to the present time learned the simplest and most important truth in agriculture—that a fellow can't keep skinning his land year after year in the raising and selling of raw grain products and not have his good acres become destitute and impoverished any more than he can lift himself by pulling on his boot straps or make water run uphill. The fact is if the lead pencil were used by more farmers in simple processes of addition and subtraction in the several lines of farm work there would be more profits on paper and in the bank at the end of the year.

The state of Wisconsin has a law which went into effect Dec. 1 of the present year which makes it unlawful to sell or otherwise transfer any bull, sow or heifer over six months old for other than breeding purposes or to export from the state or slaughter any animals unless the same shall have within a period of two years prior to such sale been tuberculin tested by some competent person approved by the state sanitary live stock board and been found free from tuberculosis. This law, which should be used as a pattern in other states, is supplemented by a state dairy law which makes unlawful the sale of milk and cream from diseased animals. In case the test applied shows animals are affected with tuberculosis the owner on their being slaughtered receives three-fourths of the appraised value, which in no case shall exceed $55, while if no lesions of tuberculosis are found on slaughtering the full appraised value of the carcass is received.

There are mighty few dogs that are so handsome that the owner is willing to have one of them around his back door and pay from $3 to $5 for the privilege. A number of towns we know have about extinguished the canine tribe by assessing just such a fine. It's a whole lot better than anonymous poison and works automatically.

Where it is possible to do so it is a good idea to place the semi-tropical plants such as the palm, sword fern, sprengeri and cactus as high on the plant stand as possible, this because of the fact that there is a difference of several degrees in a stove heated room between the air three feet and seven feet from the floor. One of the most beautiful and long fronded sword ferns we ever saw was given a high niche, and we do not doubt that the warmer upper air had something to do with its thriftiness.

A postmaster general—if we remember correctly it was John Wanamaker—said that the four chief reasons why a parcels post had not been adopted in this country were the American, Wells Fargo, Adams and United States Express companies, and these same reasons still persist and keep the people of the United States from having a decent parcels service when every other civilized country has the system in successful operation, and some of them more than a century. When the farmers of the country wake up and make a roar they will get what they want, but not before.

Among other means which may be employed to protect the trunks of young fruit trees from the attacks of mice and rabbits whitewash gives excellent results. A recipe for making it recommended by the Ohio experiment station is as follows: Slack one peck of fresh lime with old soapsuds, thin to the consistency of whitewash and stir in one gallon of crude carbolic acid, four pounds of sulphur and one gallon of soft soap. This wash should be applied with a brush and will not only prevent rodents from gnawing the trees, but will kill insects and promote the health of the bark.

Owing to the scarcity of hay very generally through the north central states many a townsman who in years past has fed timothy, clover or alfalfa will have to feed instead shredded corn fodder, which has been put up in extra good condition this season. For the family cow this may be nicely balanced as a milk giving ration by feeding a quart of cornmeal, two quarts of bran and a double handful of oilmeal twice a day. This is sufficient for a cow giving from twelve to fifteen quarts of milk per day. If she is giving less than this the ration should be reduced proportionately. If ensilage is available and the ear corn was not removed when it was put up the same ration will suffice, leaving out the cornmeal.

There are now and then occasions when the circumstances seem to justify one in going to law, but they are few and far between. Especially is this true in equity cases, where property or money is involved and where a settlement could by all odds be best effected by arbitration and compromise. The folly of "lawing" it out willy nilly lies in the fact that before a settlement is effected in the court the chances are that the lawyers will have the bulk of the money or proprty that the litigrants are scrapping over. Folks who persist in "lawing" in this way are easy "pickin's" for the legal fraternity and those who contribute most largely toward buying their flour and bacon and footing their coal and electric light bills.

Some experiments which have been conducted the past four years by the Ohio Agriculture college to determine what sized and shaped ears will on the average produce the most corn per acre, while not entirely conclusive, present some interesting facts. First it was found that long ears produced 3.97 bushels per acre more than shorter and deeper kerneled ears; that seed from ears with bare tips produced more corn per acre the first year than from ears that were well filled, but that in succeeding years the seed from well filled ears yielded from 1.5 to 2 bushels per acre more. It was also found during a period of five years that crease dented corn produced 2.81 bushels more per acre than rough dented seed and that seed from a well manured plot produced 2.4 bushels less per acre than seed from an adjoining plot that was not manured at all.

One of the best propositions we noticed listed for sale in a recent auction was a flock of forty pure bred Shropshires. We say best because there was nothing else on the list which put to its best possible use would do so much good to the man who bought it as these sheep. Rightly handled they will give an easier return than any other resource on the farm. For at least seven months in the year they will get their living from the weeds on the farm, which are worse than useless; will convert this into fertilizer, which every farm needs, in much larger quantities than it gets, while the lambs can be finished for market in a comparatively short time. The wool fetches a high price and will add a snug sum to the bank account. It is better to start with twenty sheep than sixty and get experience as one goes along, which if unfavorable doesn't come in as big chunks.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

BAD FIRE SUNDAY

The A. J. Giller Store on LaBree Avenue The Scene of Destructive Fire.

$11,900 Stock of Merchandise Totally Destroyed—Covered By $9,000 Insurance.

At shortly before three o'clock last Sunday afternoon fire was discovered in the A. Joe Giller store on LaBree Avenue by some chance pedestrian and a hurried alarm was sent in. The call was responded to by the quick action of the fire department, who encountered some difficulty with the frozen hydrants, etc., which entailed a little delay before they could begin operations, but did some heroic work, when once they got started. The fire had gained considerable head way by this time and at first fears were entertained for the buildings adjoining, but the efforts of the firemen were successful in quelching the flames, and no damage was done to the other buildings.

The stock of A. Joe Giller, which is estimated at some $11,000 was almost a total loss by fire and water, but was covered by $9,000 insurance. The loss also includes the furniture of the family, who resided over the store.

The building, which was owned by O. H. Nelson had no insurance and the exact extent of the loss is not known as yet.

The exact origin of the fire is not known as Mr. Giller was out of the city and the family was not at home at the time, but it is thought to have been caused by an over-heated stove in the store.

As soon as the building is repaired or other suitable quarters secured Mr. Giller will again put in a supply of goods and resume the mercantile business in this city.

Lien is Librarian.

E. J. Lien, assistant state librarian, was today named librarian to succeed John G. King, of Red Lake Falls, a Johnson appointee. Mr. Lien is credited to Kittson county and became identified with the state government under the second Van Sant administration. He is a republican. The appointment settles a controversy of many weeks' standing. Asa Wallace, of Fairfax, now assistant fire marshal was an early candidate, and generally considered as having the position beyond a question.

The Angora Goat Useful.

The Angora goat is receiving considerable attention in farming communities of the United States, and from the report, which has just been made by the department of agriculture, will interest the farmers of northern Minnesota.

The government investigator says: "Investigation proves that Angora goats are not only classed among the most useful of the domestic animals, and have been so classed for thousands of years, but their usefulness is manifested in a variety of ways. The fleece, called "mohair", furnishing some of the finest fabrics among ladies' goods, and is used in various other manufacturers, their habit of browsing enables the farmer in a wooded locality to use them to help in subjugating the forest; their flesh is exceedingly delicate and nutritious; the milk is richer than cows' milk; their skins are used for leather, their pelts make the neatest of rugs and robes; a few of them in a flock of sheep are a protection against wolves and dogs, and they are excellent pets for children".

The soft undercoat of the Angora, known as "pashm", is combed out in the spring, and sells for $1.50 and $2 a pound, each animal producing two to four pounds. The government authority says that the flesh of even the present cross bred animal is superior to mutton and that it is scarcely possible to distinguish it from spring lamb.

Clapp Nominated.

Senator Moses E. Clapp was renominated by the Republican caucus in St. Paul to succeed himself as United States senator. The term begins March 4th of this year.

An Elaborate Production

Twelfth Night, to be presented at the Auditorium, in Five acts and Sixteen Scenes. When William Yule, Violet Eddy, and their supporting company of Shakesperian Players appear January 23rd in the ideal comedy (Twelfth Night) theatre-goers will see probably, the most elaborate and complete scenic production ever handled on the local stage. Manager C. P. Walker has furnished with a lavish hand an equipment sufficient to supply five acts, divided into sixteen scenes. Every inch of scenery, every piece of furniture, every platform and stage brace is carried by the company, together with special lighting effects. The scenery has been built especially for this territory, and can be readily adjusted to any stage. Manager Walker is particular in his instructions to his stage carpenters, and insists that the scenery be used in each and every town.

DOING BIG BUSINESS

Williams Ice Co., In This City, Has Large Order For Ice.

To Supply Various Towns in This District This Winter.

Frank Posten, manager of the Williams Ice Co., in this city, is having his hands full these days in supplying the demand for ice in various towns in this district and North Dakota, most of which are on the Wheatline, west of this city.

Many new towns along that line have erected storage houses this summer, but as ice is not available in their locality, it becomes necessary to secure their supply elsewhere.

Warren alone will require about twenty car loads that will be shipped from this point, and to supply all the towns combined will require an enormous amount of ice and considerable hard labor.

The heavy freezing the last few days has proved of great benefit and the ice is of about the right thickness for cutting.

Bad Fire at Newfolden.

Hoberg & Erickson's general store at Newfolden was burned to the ground on Monday during the heavy wind and the entire stock was lost. This was the largest and best store in the place. Newfolden, like most of the small country postoffice towns, has no fire protection and the usual bucket brigade was insufficient to stay the flames against such high wind.

Announcement.

E. A. Mostue, Co. Supt. of Schools will be at his office in the Register of Deeds office in the Auditorium on the 1st and 3rd Saturday of each month until further notice. He will be pleased then to meet personally any person, school officers or teachers wishing to confer on school matters. He solicits your inquiries and correspondence.

Fraternally yours;

"Twelfth Night" Coming.

To be presented here on January 23rd.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the lovers of the best in dramatic literature is that of the engagment of the superior company of players headed by William Yule and Violet Eddy, in "Twelfth Night".

Shakespeare was manifestly in a holiday mood, when he penned this delightfully irresponsible comedy of improbalities. No great problem clogged the flow of his fancy—no call to right the wrongs of humanity choked the serene utterance of his joyous muse. Even Viola is less strenuous than most of our poet's heroines, and throws herself with a gay spirit into the masquerading adventures through which she passes to comedy's inevitable goal—the hymeneal altar. No less an authority than Mr. Halliwell Phillips, describes "Twelfth Night" as the perfection of English comedy and the most fascinating drama in the language.

To Attend Father's Funeral.

T. P. Hornseth, proprietor of the new confectionery store on LaBree Avenue, Mrs. Oscar Williams and Peter Hornseth left last Saturday evening for Hector, Renville county, this state, where they went in response to a message conveying the sad intelligence of the death of their father, Peter P. Hornseth, who had died on that date.

Deceased was 74 years of age and an old resident of Renville county. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss.

The funeral services were held last Tuesday.

PLAN BIG MEETING

International Conference of Zion Free Church to Be Held In This City.

Between 500 and 1,000 Delegates Expected At Meeting June 1st.

What will undoubtedly be the largest gathering of its kind ever held in this city, in fact, possibly the entire Northern Minnesota, will be held here the first week in June, this present year.

This city has been selected as the scene of the next annual International Conference of the Zion Free Church and between 500 and 1,000 ministers and delegates from different parts of the states are expected to be present.

Extensive preparations have already been commenced by a committee consisting of members of the local congregation for the accomodation and entertainment of this vast number of guests.

The meeting will commence on June 1st and will continue for six days.

Wanted—A Denser Population.

According to some census figures put out the other day, Minnesota has only 25.7 people to the square mile.

Many states have a sparser settlement than this, but most of them are more thickly settled.

Some of them are settled so densely that it really amounts to congestion, though these states seem contented with this condition in spite of the fact that it means distress in many cases, and not enough to eat for thousands.

Clearly, a readjustment of the population is necessary, to the end that the relation of the population to soil shall be better proportioned to the ability of the soil to support the population.

Clearly, Minnesota's population of only 25.7 persons to the square mile—and that's counting in nearly six hundred thousands people in the three large cities—calls for some plan of development that will increase the density of the state's population by bringing people willing to work to the rich but idle soil that is willing to respond with wealth to the wooing of the tiller.

The legislature can put before itself no worthier object than that of increasing the density of population in Minnesota by covering the millions of rich acres now idle in Northern Minnesota with farmers.

The legislature has before it no higher duty than this, no task calling for so much patriotism and public spirit, no opportunity so certain to yield large results and to make this session a shining epoch in the state's history.

Minnesota has 2,075,708 people, and at 25.7 to the square mile, that figures out 80,767 square miles of land in the state.

Wisconsin which still has much unsettled land in its northern portion, has a population of 42.2 to the square mile. That is not a dense population—Rhode Island has 508.5 people to the square mile. Massachusetts 418.8, New Jersey 338.7, Connecticut 231.3, New York 191.2 and Ohio 117.

If Minnesota had as dense a population as Wisconsin—42.2 for the square mile—its population would be 3,408,367 instead of 2,075,708—an increase of 1,332,659—and most of the citizens would be in Northern Minnesota, settled on its fertile acres and producing wealth for the greater glory of the state and the benefit of every part of the state.

That increase isn't difficult to manage. The legislature can do it if it will take wise and business-like steps toward the development and settlement of Northern Minnesota.

The reason Minnesota ranks so low among the states in density of population is that its area of idle acres is a large. If its population were as dense as that of Rhode Island it would have 41,070,019 people: but it is hoped that it will not have that many people for many years to come. If its population were as dense as that of Ohio, Minnesota would have 9,419,639 people, and there is ample room for that many people in Minnesota without unduly crowding the cities.

The legislature has the opportunity to add a million people to the population of Minnesota in the next decade, if it will make wise use of latent resources of the idle acres of Northern Minnesota.—Duluth Herald.

International Sunday School Association.

The Minnesota Sunday School Association is to hold 18 big Sunday School Institutes in the following cities of the State:—Winona, Red Wing, Rochester, Owatonna, Worthington, Mankato, Marshall, Benson, Breckenridge, Fergus Falls, Moorhead, Crookston, Bemidji, Duluth, Brainerd, St. Cloud, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Stillwater. The tour begins January 14th and ends February 5th, 1911.

The tour party consists of two International workers, W. A. Brown and Hugh Cork of Chicago and two State workers, A. A. Locker and Paul S. Districk of St. Paul. The plan is to hold a two day's meeting in each place and these workers have full charge of the program. Mr. Cork and Mr. Dietrick will conduct the program the first evening and the next morning and Mr. Brown and Mr. Locker will take the afternoon and the evening of the second day.

Perhaps the best place for our workers to reach is at Crookston on Jan. 28 and 29, 1911. Every Sunday School worker who can possibly go should attend one of these meetings. It is the chance of the year. Programs can be secured by addressing the county president, L. P. Poppenhagen of Thief River Falls.

The citizens of Crookston will entertain free all outside workers.

Richardson Has Resigned.

Judge of Probate Ira O. Richardson, of Red Lake county has resigned his office, and Governor Eberhart has appointed Joseph Perrault, deputy county auditor, to fill the vacancy. The county commissioners have approved Judge Perrault's blond, and he has taken the oath of office. The reduction of the salary owing to the division of the county, is what induced Judge Richardson to resign. He felt he could not give up his law practice for the salary that the office pays in the reduced county. Judge Richardson was a competent official.

TO PROTECT SETTLERS

The New Ruling of Land Office Will Prevent Speculative Contests.

Any Persons Bringing Contests Must Show Their Good Faith.

A change in the rules of practice of the United States land office will shut out speculative land contests after Feb. 1. The revised rules of the department have been received at the land office at Duluth and the rule governing contests is one of the most radical innovations.

In the future, it will be necessary for any person bringing a contest, to show that he is qualified to enter upon the land in question in the event of winning the suit. In other words, the department will require that contests be brought in the future by people desiring to settle on the land. In the past, many contests have been brought by people who expected to profit by winning the contests and then having a price for waiving the right of entry to let somebody else take up the land. Such a proceeding will be impossible in the future, or will be possible only once, at least, for each person involved.

The new rule is in line with the policy of the department to protect actual settlers against the activities of people seeking to profit only in a financial way from contests.

Another rule established by the department in the revised list seems to pave the way toward the proposed court of appeals in public land cases. In the future, reviews and re-reviews, which have been means of delay and arrangements for prolonging litigation, will not be possible. No review will be allowed in any case.

The new rules contain a number of other radical departures from the old rules, but they are technical in their nature.

P. P. Hamre last week disposed of his interest in and severed his connection with the Langseth Mercantile company. Mr. Hamre has for about the last four years been manager for that company and has in that capacity won the friendship and confidence of all who have had dealings with him, and has been a most respected citizen. Mr. Hamre will, as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made, remove with his family to one of the western states, where they expect to make their future home. T. P. Hamre has resumed the responsibility of manager of the Langseth Mercantile Co.'s store.

"Jim" Powers Leaves Crookston

Mr. James Powers, with the International Harvester Co., who has made his headquarters here for the past several years, has been assigned new territory, which comes in the way of an advancement, but which removes his headquarters to Mitchell, S. D. He left for that place last evening, and will represent the same company there. Mr. Powers has made many friends while here, not only by his genial manner, but also by his public spirit, and his departure is a source of regret to a wide circle of friends in this city and throughout his territory. — Crookston Times.

"Jim" Powers is well known among the old residents of this city, he having been engaged in business in this city a few years ago, and his advancement will be good news to his many friends here.

Young Boys Arrested

Considerable commotion was caused Tuesday morning about 3 o'clock, just as the Soo flyer had left the local station, by five young men of this city. It appears that as the night agent was about to enter the depot with the express, etc., the entrance was blocked by these young men, and, on requesting them to clear the entrance, he was jeered at by the bunch and had to use violence in trying to defend himself. Section Foreman Davis, of Hazel, who was present with his sick wife and son, and took part in defending the agent from his young assailants, received some minor injuries as a result.

What makes the charges of assault doubly worse is the fact that while Mrs. Davis was trying to part her husband from the bunch she received a blow from one of the boys, inflicting a severe wound over her eye.

The main cause for the boys' action is generally attributed to an over indulgence in whiskey, which, nevertheless, does not lighten their case.

Patrolman Frank Chittick arrested Guy Larson and Orville Harmon, two of those implicated in the affair, who were tried yesterday and on pleading guilty were fined $5 and costs.

Warrants were sworn out last night for the arrest of Arthur Williams, Henry Thompson and Olaf Wedmer, also wanted on the same charge.

Wm. Moeller, of St. Hilaire, received two thorough bred Chester White sows yesterday from Howard Lake, Minn. Mr. Moeller states he now has two of the best bred sows in the country.

Owing to the many difficulties encountered in arranging for the transportation of logs from Winnibigosh Lake to this city, it is learned that the Lumber Company has decided not to saw them here. This decision was arrived at partly owing to the fact that the Company has secured from another source a sufficient quantity to keep the local plant in operation for some years.

Irrigated Lands in Oregon

The representatives of the Hermanton Valley orchard Lands Oregon are in the city this week and will be here off and on until the middle of February when they expect to take several local people in a special car to visit this project, wherein the United States government has expended $1,850,000 in the construction of the water system.

The project is situated across the Columbus river just south of North Yakima in eastern Oregon and is on the line of two transcontinental railroads. The water is assured and on the lands at present. This project has the soil, water, climate, altitude, transportation and market. Several local persons have already made investments and will begin to cultivate and improve their orchards this spring. The party en route to Hermantown will visit the famous North Yakima Valley and Hood River. Special rates will be secured and the round trip ticket will probably cost, including berths, about $70 or $72.

More definite statement regarding rate will be made after hearing from the railroad companies. Those who desire to join this party on a trip of inspection whether prospective buyers or not should communicate at once with Messrs. Jones and Wherry, room 11, Dobner-Meehan block, city, phone 268. A car with fifty persons leaves Fort Wayne, Indiana on Jan. 15 for Hermanton valley orchard lands.

VERY POPULAR IN STOCKHOLM

Major Emil Fredrik Saberstrom, Chief of the Fire Department, Dies Very Suddenly—Christiania School Children Have Large Sum Deposited in Banks—Review of Reviews Lauds Georg Brandes, Danish Poet.

SWEDEN.

Major Fredrik Sabelstrom, chief of the Stockholm fire department, died very suddenly from heart disease Dec. 14. He was very popular in Stockholm because he had during his twenty-five years service in the fire department of the city introduced such thoroughgoing reforms that Stockholm today boasts of the best fire department of any capital in Europe. As an officer he was capable and fearless and on several occasions when his and his subordinates' lives have been in danger he displayed such self control and such good judgment that he commanded the admiration of hundreds of Stockholm's citizens. His funeral was attended by several hundred prominent citizens and he was buried with military honors.

The Mormon church in Stockholm has sent in a protest to the minister of ecclesiastics against the contemplated measures against their sect in Sweden. They demand that the authorities give their mission in Sweden a thorough test before they are driven out and refer to the attempts at curtailing their propaganda as something smacking of persecution. The history of the Mormon church in Sweden is not the very brightest and the government will not handle their case with kid gloves by any means.

The national debts of the Scandinavian countries average about $31.50 per inhabitant. The rate is the same for Denmark; but for Sweden it is only $25.75, and for Norway $38 per inhabitant. By way of comparison it may be mentioned that the corresponding figures for the neighboring countries are as follows: Russia, $29.70; Finland, $10; Austria-Hungary, $66; Germany, $71.50; Holland, $78; Great Britain, $81.25; Belgium, $96, and France, $161.50.

Director G. Lindgren estimates that it will take at least 335,000 crowns to make any kind of a respectable restoration of the famous old Riddarholm's church, where rests sarcophogi of Sweden's kings. The matter of restoration is growing more important every day, as the old edifice is showing signs of decay and the walls may tumble in at almost any time. The riksdag will be urged to take up the matter at once.

The so called "Three Crown" thieves, who robbed the Stockholm postoffice of several thousand crowns last summer and were arrested in Germany, have received their sentence. Peterson-Gahne received a two-year sentence at hard labor, Malmborg also received two years and Helling will have to serve a one-year sentence at hard labor.

The University at Upsala, Sweden, has an enrollment of 2,117 students, nearly all from the different cities and provinces of Sweden. Of these 1,271 pursue a philosophical course, 429 are preparing for the legal profession, 251 studying medicine and 155 study theology. Sweden will soon have plenty of philosophers at this rate.

The first wireless station of importance in Sweden and the largest in the Scandinavian countries is ready for operation. The system is that known as the "Gothenburg United Wireless," which is capable of transatlantic service and is used by the Wilson line of steamers on the North sea.

No less than 11,516 persons are employed in the Swedish mail service, and it is estimated that almost 1 per cent of the population of the country are dependent upon this service for their living.

The street cars and other public conveyances in the city of Stockholm carried 60,770,000 passengers from Jan. 1 to Oct. 31. The figures for the corresponding period of 1909 were 55,380,000.

NORWAY.

The teachers of the public schools in Christiania have taught the children a most useful habit—to make it a point to deposit a penny now and then in the safe deposit banks of the city. As a result there are not less than 14,000 school children who have started accounts and the total amount deposited by them during a period comprising only two years amounts to not less than 165,000 crowns. The children are commencing to take a great deal of interest in that movement and they are naturally aided by their parents. It is proving to be a great thing for the school children in Christiania, for it teaches them a valuable lesson in economy at an early stage in life.

Minister Brys, the newly appointed minister to Washington, D. C., from Norway, has arrived at his post. Mr. and Mrs. Brys have had considerable experience in official life and that Norway will be most ably represented at Washington through Mr. Brys seems to be the consensus of opinion in the Norwegian press. Minister Brys is a man of stately appearance and Madame Brys is said to be a very highly accomplished woman. Mr. and Mrs. Brys will do considerable entertaining in Washington this winter.

The so called Sunday employes on the street railways of Christiania are demanding an increase in wages. Up to this time they have been getting 45 ores per hour. Now they want 65 ores per hour. The indications are that they will be given the raise. It is a very difficult thing to get men to work on Sundays and the employers will undoubtedly be only too willing to give in to their demands.

The Norwegian submarine boat Kobben, which was built in Germany about a year ago and which has been placed under a year's test, was inspected the other day by one of the government's experts and found to be in first class condition. It is possible that the storthing may order another submarine boat built during the current year.

H. Schielbler has just published an interesting book, which contains a splendid account of the progress of the printing and newspaper business in Norway during the last 100 years. The historical end of it is particularly interesting. The book is richly illustrated and a large number of copies have already been disposed of.

Consul Holmboe, in Tromsoe, has donated 10,000 crowns for charitable institutions in the aforementioned city. The consul will donate an additional sum of money provided all the money thus donated will be used for the purpose of checking the ravages of consumption in that part of the country.

Norwegian-American colonists in Iowa, who hail from Strand, in Ryfylke, have sent a sum of 24,000 crowns to the home community. This sum will be set aside for a poorhouse, which will hereafter be supported by generous contributions from philanthropic countrymen in America.

Rev. Karl Konow has been giving a series of lectures on "The Eternal Life" at the Unitarian church in Christiania, which have attracted a great deal of attention. Rev. Konow is a brilliant lecturer and is regarded as one of the country's greatest religious thinkers and leaders.

Prominent among the members of the new South African parliament is the Norwegian, Carl Thesen, from Stavanger. He is serving on one of the leading committees and represents the Knysna district. He speaks English and Dutch fluently.

The "Count of Luxembourg" has been rendered not less than 100 times at the Central theater in Christiania and is making a decided hit. The music is by Lehar, the same gentleman who composed the music for "The Merry Widow."

Five of the hotels in Sandefjord have been denied the right to dispense liquor because they have been selling it unlawfully at various times and have not otherwise complied with the laws that regulate the liquor traffic.

King Haakon has appointed Professor Kristian Krogh as commander of the Order of St. Olaf, and Fahlstrom, the well known actor, has been made a knight of the same order.

Henrik Dahl, the popular ballad singer, is on a concert tour throughout some of the northern towns in Norway and is making a great hit wherever he appears.

DENMARK.

Says the Review of Reviews: Poets have not infrequently become dominating influences in the life of a nation. There were moments when the will of Hugo seemed to sway the destinies of France. Bjornson was popularly spoken of as "the uncrowned king of Norway." With the mass of his people the word of Tolstoy went as far, if not farther, than that of the czar. But that such a position might be reached by a literary critic was never heard of until Anders Krogvig pointed out in Samtiden (Christiania) that Georg Brandes, professor of literature at the University of Copenhagen, must be recognized as "the central personality of Denmark throughout an extended and eventful period." All the world now recognizes Brandes as the most eminent living Scandinavian.

But the influence of Brandes does not only extend beyond his own field It has made itself powerfully felt outside the limits of his own country. The renascence of Scandinavian literature is traceable to him. Realism—not only in poetry but in any art—was unknown in the three Scandinavian countries until he made his now famous plea that the artist should "sing and paint and carve what he himself was familiar with." From poetry and art that demand for a new and more clear eyed truthfulness spread to every field of human activity, until, today, the three kingdoms are fermenting with new life and new thought. Nor has the fructifying influence of the Danish thinker been restricted to the peoples descended from a common Norse stock. It has made itself felt in Germany and France, in England and Russia, in Italy and the United States. In fact, it may be said that before him no literary critic with the possible exception of Taine, ever during his own lifetime assumed such a farreaching international importance.

Farmers Telephone Meeting.

The Farmers Mutual Telephone Company held a meeting in the Auditorium in this city yesterday afternoon, and aside from the general routine of their business, elected officers for the ensuing year as follows:

President—A. Miller.
Vice President—A. Krause.
Treasurer—F. T. Satre.
Secretary—Paul Bergan.
Trustees: Messrs. Rigerd, Engelstad and Peterson.

Bound Over.

The case of the state against Frank Peterson, a bartender in this city, who some time ago was arrested on the charge of bastardy came up for hearing last Monday. The complainant is Miss Eva LaCoe, a sixteen year old girl of this city. The case was bound over to the first term of the district court.

Antlers Dance Tomorrow Night

The Antlers Club will give a dance at the club rooms tomorrow night. This will be the formal opening of the club since the partial destruction of their quarters by fire some time ago. The music for the occasion will be furnished by the Thief River Falls Concert Orchestra.

Mrs. Perry Starkweather, assistant state commissioner of labor, will have a bill introduced into the next legislature providing for the appointment of women police officers to patrol the depots of the big cities, watch for homeless and friendless girls and see that they are guided to paths of safety.

John Zignego of Minneapolis, organ grinder, who died Nov. 19, left an estate of $30,000, accumulated touring the continent with a monkey and organ. Zignego left a portion of his fortune to charity and divided the balance among relatives.

During the December term of the Ramsey county district court a total of eighty-eight divorce cases are set for trial, which is seventeen more than were to be tried during the November term.

That 116 St. Paul children under the age of two years died last fall as a result of diseases attributed to the use of impure milk is the assertion of Dr. J. H. Armstrong, assistant commissioner of health.

The appointment of Andrew Fritz of St. Cloud as public examiner, when the term of Anton Schaefer expires early next year, has been officially announced by Governor Eberhart.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

John C. Welch was taken into custody at Stillwater on a bench warrant issued by the district court, in pursuance of an indictment alleging that as one of the judges of an election district of the Second ward at Stillwater at the primary election he wrongfully announced to the clerks of election a canvass of votes for county attorney, county superintendent of schools and city treasurer.

While three sons of August Spitzack, living northwest of Faribault, were playing with a loaded gun it was accidentally discharged, the load taking effect in an arm of their three-year-old sister. It was necessary to amputate the arm.

Mike Vovich, a miner employed at the Buffalo-Susquehanna mine at Hibbing, had his eyes so badly injured by a blast that he will never have the use of them again. The man's right arm was also fractured by the force of the explosion.

Mrs. W. L. Rittenour, wife of a farmer residing near Wheaton, was drowned in Mustinka river. A small hole had been cut in the ice where the stock was watered and either Mrs. Rittenour fell in or willfully committed suicide.

Inviting her five-year-old son to go with her, Mrs. G. Halverson of Granite Falls, who was released from the insane asylum at St. Peter recently, grabbed the child and pounded his head on a rock until she had fractured his skull.

Leland Whiting, twelve-year-old son of Charles Whiting of Clitherall, Otter Tail county, was drowned while skating across Lake Clitherall on his way home from school. He went into an air hole, drowning in fifteen feet of water.

Ben Forman, who, it is alleged, shot and killed Mrs. Mina Altschuler in a room at the Willard hotel at St. Paul Nov. 22, has been indicted by the grand jury on a charge of murder in the first degree.

William Branson, a farmer fifty-one years old, was run down by a Milwaukee freight train near Lamoille and killed.

Sporting News

A wrestling match has just been arranged between Wm. Kline of this city, and John H. Gorden, the well known policeman wrestler of Minneapolis, in which Gorden agrees to throw Kline three times in one hour or forfeit the match. This promises to be a very exciting event as Mr. Kline has many friends in this city who feel confident that no man can throw him three times in one hour, with the toe hold barred, while Mr. Gordon is confident of winning.

TIDINGS FROM SCANDINAVIA

Interesting News From Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

KNIGHTED BY KING GUSTAF

Swedish Ruler Honors Nine Residents of Various Sections of United States. Novel Proposal Made by Bishop Brun to the Norwegian Storthing—Denmark Entertains the Youthful Crown Prince Olaf of Norway.

SWEDEN.

Announcement comes from Chicago, Ill., that nine persons in different parts of the United States have been selected for knighthood by King Gustaf of Sweden for their services and activity in Swedish religious and charitable movements. The honor of the Royal Order of the North Star was conferred on Rev. M. C. Ranseen of Chicago, Professor J. A. Udden of Rock Island, Rev. Fritz Jacobsen of Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. C. M. Esbjorn of New Haven, Conn., and Rev. G. A. Brandelle of Denver, Colo. Rev. Eric Norelius of Vasa, Minn., and Rev. I. C. Abrahamson of Rock Island, Ill., have been made Commanders of the North Star. The degree of Commander of the Royal Order of Vasa has been conferred on Rev. G. A. Andreen and F. G. Kenkman of the same city. The honors were conferred on the recommendation of Bishop von Scheele, envoy of the Swedish king, who visited the United States last summer. Rev. Mr. Norelius has been advanced from Knight of the Order of the North Star to one of the highest honors distributed by the Swedish throne. Rev. Mr. Norelius is the patriarch of the Augustana synod. He was present at its founding in Clinton, Wis., in 1860 and is the only surviving minister who participated in the organization of the synod. He has held every office and for the last twenty years has been president of the synod. He was decorated by King Oscar in 1902 as a Knight of the Order of the North Star in recognition of his services and work in behalf of the intellectual development of Swedish-Americans. The recent honor is for his further endeavors in this line. He is the author of an extensive library on the Augustana synod of the Swedish Lutheran church.

A new instrument for measuring nocturnal terrestrial radiation, invented by the late Knut Angstrom of Stockholm, is described by his son, A. K. Angstrom, Jr., in Annalen der Physik, under the name of "condensation-actinometer." Excepting an external cylinder of metal, the instrument is made entirely of glass. It consists of a reservoir, exhausted of air, and containing ether, into which projects a glass chamber, open above to the air, and coated with lampblack. The blackened surface radiates heat more rapidly than the rest of the apparatus, and tends to lower the temperature within the reservoir; this cooling is, however, compensated by the condensation of ether, which distills over a graduated glass tube. The total amount of radiation from the black surface during a given interval is proportional to the amount of ether condensed. Its value in thermal units may be obtained by the use of a constant, determined by comparing the instrument with other forms of actinometer.

Professor Bendixson has been chosen as rector of the Stockholm high school to succeed Professor de Geer, who has held the position during the past eight years. Professor Bendixson comes very highly recommended and is considered one of the most advanced educators among the younger set of men in the country.

The L. M. Ericsson Telephone company of Stockholm received an order for 7,000 telephone apparatuses, representing a value of not less than 325,000 crowns. The order came from Sydney, Australia. In the latter country the Swedish telephone is in general use.

"Old People's day," when all expenditures had been taken care of, netted 45,000 crowns. Of this sum 15,000 crowns go to the poor in the various churches and the rest goes to the society known as "Pauvres Honteaux."

There are an unusual large number of idle persons in the Swedish capital at this season of the year. During the month of November there were over 150 applicants for fifty places.

NORWAY.

The famous Bishop Brun, who enjoys the respect and good will of the church people in general throughout Norway, has sent a proposition to the storthing which aims at granting the privilege to each and every one to have a civil burial. In other words, Bishop Brun wants a law passed by the storthing extending the right of civil burials throughout the kingdom of Norway. He has made this proposition to the storthing because of the fact that nearly every atheist or free thinker who dies is generally given a Christian burial, or, rather, one in accordance with the tenets of the church. In accordance with the proposition made, members of the state church may be buried without the assistance of a pastor, providing that the deceased has one time or other during his life so expressed it as his or her wish. The tolling of bells may also be permitted. The chapels of the various churches may be open for use at such funerals, but not the churches. It will be interesting to see what the storthing will do with the bishop's proposition. There have thus far been some comments in its favor in a number of the leading papers throughout the country.

When a few years ago a number of whaling companies were driven away from the coasts of Finmarken they came to the conclusion that they would begin to operate elsewhere. Now a number of them have transferred their activities to Newfoundland; others, again, have gone to the southern coasts of Georgia and South Africa. There are in all twenty Norwegian whaling vessels who make their home headquarters in Tonsberg, Sandfiord and Larvik. The total result of their work this year is 130,000 hogsheads of whale oil.

The Solor railway between Flisen and Elverum has been opened for traffic. It passes through one of the richest forest tracts of the country, thus opening up a section which has never before had any direct communication with the outside world. Little stations have sprung up here and there and it will be the means of much industrial benefit to this rather bleak section of the country.

The new Norway-Amerika Steamship company has again declined an offer to purchase the ocean liner Kaiser Friedrich. No reason is given for the company's decision not to purchase this vessel. It is very well known that the company contemplates the purchase of two large ocean liners and three large freight steamers.

Jacob Hveding Asmundsen, the well known Bergen actor, is dead. He was born in that city in 1841. He made his debut on the Norwegian stage in 1859 and since that time has been almost continuously connected with the National theater in Bergen.

The chamber of commerce in Bergen has unanimously decided to push the proposed project of the establishment of a free harbor for Bergen. It will undoubtedly be located near the large customs house buildings.

There are at this time hundreds of homeless people who have to be cared for at the various police stations and by the various charitable institutions of Christiania. The Salvation Army barracks are overcrowded.

DENMARK.

Denmark has been entertaining Crown Prince Olaf of Norway, and a very popular prince he is at Copenhagen, in the home of his grandfather. He is now a stalwart blue eyed little chap of eight, who is learning the art of kingcraft in all seriousness. He returns the onlookers' salutes with the utmost gravity, drawing himself straight up and touching the back of his hand to his forehead with soldierly precision. Few people realize how important a member of the British royal family Prince Olaf is. He actually comes twelfth in the line of succession to the British throne, for between him and the king of England are only King George's children, the Duchess of Fife and her two daughters, Princess Victoria and Queen Maud. He is still, perhaps, the best looking of all the late King Edward's grandchildren—a brilliantly fair boy—with his mother's deep blue eyes and the only one who has inherited Queen Alexandra's delicate coloring and finely chiseled features. The Norwegians, who are essentially a domesticated nation, fairly worship the boy heir. King Haakon says: "I would never have believed that a mere child could have so conquered the hearts of the people. I often say to the queen, 'How these Norwegians love the best part of the government, which is our child.'"

There are some pretty old business institutions in Denmark and some of them have a record for stability which dates back several hundred years. The oldest business institution in the country is "Munkle Molle," in Odense, which was established in the year 1100. Second in order comes the Royal brewery in Copenhagen, which was established in the year 1443 and which in 1687 fell into the hands of private capital. Two other business institutions which have a long and interesting history behind them are the Kiltgaard Lumber company in Blokhus and Wibroes' factory in Aalborg, the former having been established in 1635 and the latter in the year 1696.

When the International Grammophone company began its operations in Copenhagen seven years ago it was next to impossible to induce the singers to sing into the funnel. A great change has taken place with regard to this matter. Now the individual singers as well as the chorus count on the grammophone for a very material part of their regular receipts. During the past few years the International Grammophone company has paid out about $20,000 to Danish singers.

A workingmen's exhibition is being given in Copenhagen, aiming to show how the workmen are protected by means of insurance, industrial safeguards, hygiene and many other things too numerous to mention. The exhibition is given under the auspices of the Danish Laboringmen's Protection society and has already been visited by thousands of workingmen.

FATAL FIRE AT ST. PAUL

Two Women Dead and Many Persons Injured, Several Fatally, When Apartment House Burns.

Two women are dead, another is seriously injured, one man may die and a score of others are more or less seriously injured as a result of a fire, starting from a gas explosion on the first floor of the Concord apartments at St. Paul, which burned for at least twenty minutes before being discovered.

An unidentified woman was cremated. Her body was found burned to a crisp on the third floor of the building. She is believed to be Jeanette Wilford, a waitress.

Anna Erd, a clerk, died at St. Joseph's hospital from the burns she received while running down the hall to find an escape. Her death was largely due to having inhaled fumes.

Besides the eleven injured seriously enough to be taken to St. Joseph's hospital at least a dozen more are suffering from minor injuries.

The fire was replete with awesome features, endangered persons aroused from sleep jumping from windows or balconies to be injured on the walks below, while in several cases children were thrown from windows to the arms of rescuers beneath, several lives being saved in this manner.

Improvised blanket ropes were hung from balconies and windows and men, women and children slid to safety.

Some, maddened by the intense heat behind them, jumped thirty feet to the icy ground below and crawled away with broken limbs, thankful only to escape from the demon behind.

DUNN IS CHOSEN SPEAKER

Result of Republican Legislative Caucus at St. Paul.

The selection of H. H. Dunn of Albert Lea as the Republican candidate for speaker of the house of representatives, which has been almost a foregone conclusion for a month or more, was confirmed by the Republican caucus by a vote of 55 to 29. Those of the friends of J. A. A. Burnquist of St. Paul who did not leave him when the band wagon was started late in November stood by him and went on record for him.

The officers of the senate are as follows:

President, Lieutenant Governor S. Y. Gordon, Browns Valley; secretary, George W. Peachey, Owatonna; first assistant secretary, W. A. Simonson, Glenwood; second assistant secretary, Alex Anderson, Wabasha; engrossing clerk, S. G. L. Roberts, Pine City; enrolling clerk, Carl Anderson, St. Paul; sergeant-at-arms, J. H. Ege, Minneapolis; assistant sergeant-at-arms, A. A. Christianson, Tracy; chaplain, Rev. Andrew D. Stowe, Minneapolis.

The officers of the house are:

Speaker, H. H. Dunn, Albert Lea; chief clerk, Oscar Arneson, Herman; first assistant, G. A. Hage, Crookston; second assistant, Jerome Rice, Minneapolis; enrolling clerk, J. G. Thoreen, Stillwater; engrossing clerk, Crawford Sheldon, Little Falls; sergeant-at-arms, George H. Deans, Forreston; assistant, Barney Seiz, Red Wing; postmaster, William Scanlan, Minneapolis; assistant, O. O. Holman, Slayton; chaplain, Rev. Moses E. Maxwell, St. Paul.

The caucus nominees were endorsed by both houses.

LATER HOURS FOR SALOONS

Mayor of Minneapolis Favors Closing at Midnight.

Mayor James C. Haynes of Minneapolis, in his inaugural address to the Mill City council, recommended extension of the closing law for saloons until midnight in cities of the first class, legal authority for granting saloon licenses to first class hotels outside of the Minneapolis police patrol limits, placing the county poor farm under municipal control, complete abatement of the smoke nuisance, increase of the building inspector's force, extension of the social and civic center ideas and provision for a bond issue which will allow larger extension of the municipal hospitals.

MORE CENSUS STATISTICS

Minnesota Has 25.7 Persons to the Square Mile.

The little state of Rhode Island has 508 persons to the square mile, thus, according to the census bureau figures, leading the list of states in the matter of density of population. Minnesota has 25.7 to the square mile. Nevada, with only seven-tenths of a person to the mile, finds a place at the lower end of the table giving these facts.

Farmer's Wife Hangs Herself.

Mrs. Ole E. Roble, fifty-seven years of age, residing on a farm eight miles south of Caledonia, in a fit of melancholia committed suicide by hanging herself to the doorknob of her residence by a strip of carpet. No cause for her act is assigned.

The creameries of this section have closed a very successful year, not withstanding that the dry season of 1909 was not favorable to the dairymen.

The increase in production has been considerable, the prices received very satisfactory, and the farmers have demonstrated so far at least as creameries are concerned, that co-operation is a success. We will be very glad to publish the yearly statements of any of the creameries, as no better argument can be offered to show the advantages of this section of the state for mixed farming, the only kind, by the way, that can be permanently successful.

It is up to the people of this city to decide which it will be, an amended charter under the present form of government, or government by commission. This paper has decided for the latter as the best of the two. The law, or charter, under which the city was organized, was general in its character, intended to fit everyones case but this city has long ago outgrown it, and a change of some kind is imperative.

Governor Eberhart's message to the legislature was a very able document. His desire to place the management of State fairs upon a better business basis, than at present, will commend itself to everyone.

On the matter of its lands, the State has been a hard landlord, and has in the past entirely failed to bear its portion of the burden of development. If the land were in private ownership, and handled as the state has handled them, public opinion would have brought a change long ago.

For the first time in its history this section of the country is exporting hay. Farmers as far out as twenty miles find it profitable to bale and ship their surplus, though the high prices promised last summer are not being realized.

School Notes.

The high school students occupied the Lincoln school for the first time on Monday. It is needless to state that for room, comfort and convenience it is beyond description. Dedication will take place as soon as the electric fixtures arrive and are installed. It would be more satisfactory to citizens if they await the dedication to inspect the building.

The short course students started their three months of work on Monday. The class at first consisted of ten young men, but more are joining every day. This is a splendid opportunity for young people in town and country to secure something which will be of immediate value to them, and at absolutely no cost. There is a number of large boys and young men about the city who ought to be taking advantage of this short course. It might mean a stepping stone to some better position. No qualifications are required to enter the course, except that the student be over 16.

Miss Wahl was forced by ill health to resign her position as sixth grade teacher at the Central. Mrs. O'Brien of the Knox takes Miss Wahl's room and Miss Herrick, of Little Falls, takes the Knox sixth grade.

Nearly all the pupils were in school on opening day last Monday. Very little illness now exists among the children and were it not for the extremely cold weather, the lower rooms would be crowded.

The grammar grade students are now in the old high school building in the quarters formerly occupied by the high school students. A seventh grade teacher will be secured this week to aid in caring for these grammar grade children, as the enrollment has been increasing for the last two months until it is impossible to seat the children in three rooms.

Bemidji has 34 teachers and fewer children than has Thief River Falls. There are 30 teachers in Thief River, and the departments of agriculture and normal training are in operation in the local city, but not in the Bemidji schools.

Four high school boys and the superintendent were busy all the Christmas holidays getting furniture in place and making other preparations for the opening of school on January 9th. The simple task of scrubbing the Lincoln floors developed the fact that this building has over three quarters of an acre of floor space.

Pension Bill Passed.

Washington, Jan. 10.—The house of representatives today passed the Sulloway general pension bill, which grants pensions ranging from $12 to $36 a month to all soldiers, who served ninety days in the United States army in the civil war, or sixty days in the Mexican war, and who have reached the age of 62 years. The bill adds about $45,000,000 a year to the pension roll.

Winkjer Foe To Dirt.

Joel P. Winkjer, the new state dairy and food commissioner, announces that he will inaugurate at once a more rigid inspection of creameries and dairy barns in Minnesota.

Owners and managers will be given peremptory orders to remedy any bad conditions found. Mr. Winkjer believes there is great need of improvement. He was formerly an inspector in the department and since has covered part of Minnesota as a government inspector.

"Minnesota creameries are not what they should be in cleanliness and methods", says Mr. Winkjer. "I have visited a good many and am not pleased with conditions. In some of them every rule, which tends to preserve public health is violated. There is also room for improvement in some of the canning factories".—Minneapolis Journal.

Meeting Not Assured.

The next meeting place of the International conference of the Zion Free church has not been officially designated as is stated elsewhere in this issue. This place, nevertheless, has the approval of the president of this denomination, but as yet it remains for the theological faculty of Augsberg Seminary, the head department of this sect for the States, to officially announce the next meeting place.

There is little likelihood that the president's selection will be reversed by the board of regents, and the local congregation feel almost certain that this will be the favored one of the many that are trying to secure the conference.

Governor Names State Corn Day

Governor Eberhart has given his approval to the plan of the promoters of the national corn show to be held in Columbus, Ohio, to observe Friday Feb. 3, as national corn day. The governor sanctioned the plan when he appointed 100 delegates from Minnesota to the Columbus show.

Following the governor's approval of the plan, it was suggested the people of Minnesota have a corn dinner Feb. 3. Prof. C. P. Bull, of the department of agronomy, Minnesota college of agriculture, says it will be easy to fix up a palatable menu and has suggested the following:

Corn Soup, Illinois Style.
Corn Fritters, with Louisiana Corn Syrup.
Corn Pone, Southern Fashion.
Escalloped Corn, a la Minnesota.

Minnesota, according to George P. Welsh, state immigration commissioner, has better reason for celebrating corn day than any other state in the Union. "There was a time," said Mr. Welsh, "when everybody thought Minnesota was too far north to produce corn in any quantity. But we have fooled these skeptical persons in the last few years. Our agricultural experts have found Minnesota soil is as good for corn as it is for wheat, and the world knows about our wheat. Corn is now being raised throughout the 405 miles of the state's length from Iowa to the Canadian border. The yield last year was 58,000,000 bushels and in 1909 it was 60,000,000. The decrease was due to the fact that fewer acres were planted in 1910.

"Official figures show that Iowa having been excelled already, Illinois will soon have to look to her laurels as a corn producing state if Minnesota keeps up her advancement in this branch of agriculture. Thousands of acres of fine corn land are lying beneath swamps, muskegs and timber lands in northern Minnesota and thousands of acres of tilled land are devoted to wheat, yet the average yield per acre for 1909 in Minnesota was 31 8 bushels, as against 35.9 bushels for Illinois and 31.5 bushels for Iowa. In the southern part of Minnesota the average yield per acre is 45 bushels. The state's average yield per acre in 1910 was 32.5 bushels. The Illinois and Iowa figures are not available. but it is understood they made a better showing than in 1909."

Insurance Company Elects.

The Bray Mutual Insurance company of Pennington county held its annual business meeting here last Monday. This company is owned and directed exclusively by farmers. The following officers were elected: President, Nels K. Anderson; Secretary, John O. Swanson; Treasurer, Charles Gustafson.

Annual Meeting.

The Annual meeting of the Scandinavian Evangelical Lutheran church of the Norwegian Synod was held Jan. 9th in the Sunday school rooms of the church. A large number of the voting members were present, more than ever before in the history of the church.

From the Pastor's annual report it was learned that the church had enjoyed a vigorous growth. 60 persons had been admitted to membership and one asked to become a member at the meeting and was accepted and wished welcome.

The Treasurer submitted a printed report that was distributed to all the members present. From that report it could be learned that the church has had a prosperous year. Some over $1200 has been received in the current expense fund. All obligations were paid with a small balance in the treasury. It was also learned that all the indebtness on the church building has been paid. The receipts of the Ladies Aid and the Young Peoples Society of the congregation were close to $1,000 for the year. Other reports of committees were also read and acted on.

The result of the election was as follows: A. G. Loftnes and Lars Thorson were re-elected for a term of 3 years on the board of Trustees that consists of 6 members and elected yearly. D. B. Bakke was elected treasurer. Lars Backe, secretary. Rev. I. T. Aastad was re-elected Sunday School Superintendent. D. B. Bakke was also elected chief usher. Board of auditors: R. Oen and Levi Robertson. School Committee: G. H. Sandum, J. J. Weeks and Jorgen Eide.

It was stated at the meeting that the church would have to be enlarged to meet the demands of the growing congregation, but no definite action was taken at this time.

It was generally conceded that the past year was in all respects the best in the history of the church. The Pastor's salary was raised in a very substantial way.

Leaves for California.

Alex. F. Lattimore, postmaster at Erie and owner of the Eleven Towns, expects to leave in a short time for California, where he goes to seek relief for a severe attack of chronic rheumatism. Mr. Lattimore has been suffering for some time from that ailment and doctors advise this as the only possible remedy. During his absence his brother John Lattimore will have charge of the postoffice and the publication of the Eleven Towns.

Legislature May Help Fire Relief.

Representative George H. Mattson of Roseau is preparing a series of bills covering the question of relief for the sufferers from the forest fires last fall on the northern border of the state. One of them will make a direct appropriation of $25,000 for relief work, to supplement the $75,000 already raised by private means, the additional amount being considered necessary to carry the people of that district through the winter in comfort.

Another measure contemplates a supply of timothy and clover seed to be given out for seeding the great tracts of land that were burned over. The land is now in fine condition to take grass seed, and without it there will be a rank growth of weeds and underbrush covering the burnt area. The problem is to put this appropriation in a valid shape, as seed grain appropriations have been held invalid by the courts. Mr. Mattson will not introduce the bill until he has conferred with Governor A. O. Eberhart, Attorney General George T. Simpson and W. A. McGonagle of Duluth and J. H. Beek of St. Paul of the relief committee. His plan is to place the appropriation at the disposal of Dean A. F. Woods of the state agricultural college, and to have it made under the guise of experimental work under state auspices.

A bill may also be presented to appropriate a fixed sum to be drawn upon by state officers in future, when emergencies arise that call for prompt relief.

Place Stephens in Lead

Crookston, Minn., Jan. 9.—The inspection of the ballots cast for Saugstad and Stephens for senator was conducted by W. A. Martin, a Saugstad champion, G. A. E. Finlayson, a pronounced Stephens man, and Judge L. E. Gossman, who has been neutral. They were unanimous in their findings and their report shows that, counting only the ballots that were properly marked, the vote was as follows: For A. D. Stephens, 2,754; for John Saugstad, 2,580; majority for Stephens, 174.

In addition, there were thirteen ballots upon which an "X" had been placed after the name of A. D. Stephens for senator, but somewhere else on the ballot, for congressman and for other offices, a Saugstad sticker had been affixed. None of these was counted for Stephens by the official ballot inspectors but they are likely to be credited to him by the senate. All that the Stephens contingent asks is that the records of the contest be given fair consideration.

Files Petition in Bankruptcy.

S. H. Sharbach, who has been conducting a general merchandise store in this city for the last four years, today filed a petition in bankruptcy. Mr. Sharbach places his assets at about $12,000 and his liabilities at about the same. Lack of business and the failure to realize anything on his goods is the reason for the assignment.

INDIAN LID IS LIFTED

Judge Willard Grants Injunction Restraining A. W. Johnson From Interfering With Saloons.

Holds Admission of Minnesota to the Union Gives It Power to Regular Liquor Traffic

An injunction restraining W. E. "Pussyfoot" Johnson, special agent of the bureau of Indian affairs, from interfering with the liquor traffic under the provisions of the Indian cession treaty of 1855, was issued last Monday by Judge Willard of the United States circuit court. If this decision holds there will be no more of the "federal Indian liquor lid" in Minnesota outside of the limits of the actual Indian reservation.

The suit on which the decision was rendered was instituted by twelve saloon proprietors of Bemidji against Johnson and two of his deputies.

In the meantime the saloons in the towns where Johnson had inforced the so-called "lid" may open up again and the railroads and express companies may resume the shipping of liquor to that district.

Steals Coat and Takes Trip.

A man by the name of Sweet who claims to be a traveling salesman for a silk firm, and who had made his headquarters at the Ogahmah Hotel for some time past, one night the first of the week in some manner managed to annex an overcoat belonging to Geo. Miner, night agent at the Soo depot, which contained a ticket to Minneapolis, and on this made good his get-away without casting a shadow of suspicion.

By making himself scarce in this city and helping himself to the coat Sweet also leaves behind him a big board bill at the Hotel Ogahmah.

Warrants have been issued for his arrest and it is expected that he will be taken into custody in a short time and brought back here for trial.

Mooney Starts Things.

Considerable excitement was caused last Tuesday afternoon, when a Leonard Mooney, who claims he hails from Grand Forks, N. D., walked into the H. K. Strand confectionery store on North Main Avenue and tried to take possession by main force, and also made himself obnoxious around the women present. Mr. Mooney started the proceedings by assaulting Elmer Severson, a clerk in the store, who sustained a badly bruised nose. Mr. Strand, the proprietor, was the next one to enjoy a tussle with the Mooney person, while trying to evict him from the building, and also sustained a few minor injuries about the face.

Chief of Police Lang was summoned and arrived on the scene, when the fight was at its height and "crushed the mutiny".

Mooney, according to reports from police headquarters in Grand Forks, has been in the lime light before and is one of those characters that can be dispensed with by any well governed community.

Case Dismissed.

The case of the city against H. C. Anderson, construction foreman of the Tri-State Telephone company and who was arrested some time ago for putting up poles and making other improvements for that company in this city, came up for hearing before Special Judge Wm. Smith in the municipal court last Friday morning.

The case was dismissed on the ground that the complaint was not sufficient to merit a further hearing of the case.

"BACK TO THE LAND."

The writer has lately run across two or three concrete instances of this "back to the land" movement where it was painfully apparent that the ones taking the step should have rented a half acre near their old home and worked it nights and mornings. This would have enabled them to determine whether there were in their makeup those qualities which would make it possible for them to hold permanently that rosy view of agriculture and horticulture that is pictured in the magazines and which has such a subtle fascination for the man who is wearied with the smoke, the racket and strain of city life. If any one having this "back to the land" hankering will painstakingly tend a half acre of onions or other intensive crop, doing the bulk of the weeding, the cultivating and harvesting himself, and after doing this still looks upon the tilling of the soil with zest and favor, it is fair to assume that he would succeed if he engaged in such a work on a more extensive scale. There are backache, sheer weariness, gnawing hunger (a blessing) and often restless nights for the "man with the hoe," and all who have in mind taking up such work should have these facts in view before taking the step. Then, again, aside from one's willingness to do hard work, there is sometimes painfully lacking what may be termed adaptability or knack. This was shown in one of the instances referred to above, where a fine young fellow was just crazy over the orchard business when the fact was that at the end of two months' apprenticeship he couldn't harness a team and get the breeching on the right end to save his gizzard. He simply lacked the ability to "catch on" and in a short time re-entered the banking business, which he left in his "movement to the land." We would not by any word discourage any readers of these notes who long to have a "home on the land," but would only utter such word of caution as will cause them to have their eyes wide open when they take the step. There is hard work, yet competence, health and contentment, for those who till the soil. There should be more folks engaged in it.

SOME FAULTY STANDARDS.

There is one serious criticism that can be fairly lodged not only against stock shows as usually held, but also corn shows—namely, that the standards of excellence adopted for judging tend to encourage the development of abnormal and artificial rather than practical and normal types attainable under every day animal husbandry and agricultural conditions. The standards set up in the fat stock show tend to the ruination for breeding purposes of all animals exhibited, while the prize steer usually requires from two to four nurse cows to put him in shape to carry off the blue ribbon. Ordinarily more attention is directed in the prizes awarded to a pampered, unnatural individual than to the production of the best bunch of steers possible under conditions which are practicable in the average feed lot. In all too many corn shows the tendency is to encourage the growing of ears of corn of a fixed, artificial standard rather than of a type which will produce the largest number of sound ears—that is, the most marketable corn—per acre in a given latitude. Those interested in the welfare of the stock and grain business as handled by the average man have noted these and similar defects in shows which have been held and are hoping for some change in standards which will offer greater incentive to the class of agriculturists most in need of encouragement and assistance.

FRUITS AS FOOD.

Some food analyses which have been made by the California, North Dakota and some other experiment stations show quite clearly that apples and other fruits have a food value that should commend them for use in the average family entirely apart from the fact of their fine flavor and the relish with which they are eaten by the average person. These experiments show that fruits are fairly cheap sources of energy and are to be commended on the ground of economy for combination in proper quantities with cheap proteid foods to furnish a balanced ration. It has been found that 10 cents' worth of fresh apples used as food furnish 1,467 units of energy to the body, 10 cents' worth of porterhouse steak furnishes 444 units, while 10 cents' worth of dried beans furnish 862 units or calories. From this it will be seen that apples as well as other fruits are to be favored because of their food values, entirely apart from the fact that they are pretty to look at, fine flavored and have a wholesome effect on the digestive processes.

Cement makes an excellent pen or stable floor, but a generous supply of bedding should be used to offset coldness and a tendency to dampness.

A bright farm housewife whom we read of the other day has hit upon the idea of using her vacuum cleaner for currying the Shetland ponies on the place.

The cedar or cypress hedge has none too much to commend it from the artistic point of view when carefully trimmed. When neglected it is a decidedly scraggly, useless proposition.

The federal government has taken a hand lately in a movement to stop the sale of impure food in some eastern cities. As a result bad eggs, known to the trade as "rots and spots," have tumbled in price from about $2 to 25 cents a case. It was found that these were used quite generally in the manufacture of confectionery and bakeshop stuff.

Arbitration as a means of settling neighborhood differences and disputes does not give to either party that "get even" type of satisfaction that one of them might feel in the event of a lawsuit, but there is no getting around the fact that it promotes neighborliness and good feeling in the long run and does not entail such a heavy toll in the matter of court and attorneys' fees.

There is just one kind of proposition that is more costly to finance than a red automobile, and that is an ill advised case in justice or district court where a greedy lawyer or two have got hold of the steering gear. It is a mighty well to do fellow that can afford this type of entertainment, and even such a one will do well to have all of his real estate listed in his wife's name.

There may be times when it seems worth while trying to save a few dollars a month in the hire of a man who is to do nothing but operate a manure spreader, but it is folly usually to attempt it in the case of the man who is to care for and milk the dairy cows, as the loss in milk and butter fat due to carelessness and rough treatment will usually offset many times the amount saved in the wages of the man.

Rarely if ever do you see a father, whether tiller of the soil, merchant or day laborer, who has taken time from his pressing duties to take an interest in his boy and share in his sports who is later called upon to "give the boy his time"—that is, virtually renounce the responsibilities of a father toward him. Seldom even in such cases is the fault entirely with the parent, but naturally as the elder he is fairly chargeable with the larger measure of responsibility, and time was probably when he failed in his duty to the boy along the lines suggested.

The proper place for little girls up to eighteen years of age who want to develop into pure, winsome and estimable women is at home with their folks when night comes and not on the streets, unless some specific errand calls them thither. Many a tragedy too pitiful for print, with heartbreak and heartache, would be spared if mothers would take this simple precaution with their daughters and were daughters on their part sensible enough to appreciate the wisdom of it. And the place for boys who want to grow into clean, manly men is also at home when night comes, and for the same reasons.

The writer inspected the contents of a box of Pacific coast fruit the other day that was sure an eye opener in view of the packing standards that are supposed to be in vogue with the most progressive western apple growers' associations. The fruit in question was odd sized, bruised, wormy and much of it positively runty, fit only for hog feed. Of course it is the unusual scarcity of apples that made possible the transportation of this kind of fruit 2,600 miles, and yet we seriously question if the profit accruing to the boxer and shipper of this "truck" will not be more than offset by the ill repute which will be attached to Pacific coast fruits as a class as a result.

The machine cornhusker still seems to be in the experimental stage—that is, it has not developed as yet to a point where it will work with entire satisfaction under the varied weather conditions which are likely to exist at husking time. If the soil is dry, the corn sound and well matured, there is little more to be desired. On the other hand, if wet weather prevails at harvest time, the field is muddy, husks are damp and cob butts soft and spongy the machine husker comes a long way from being satisfactory, and it is usually retired for the more tedious hand method. As regards the relative cost of husking by the two methods the Iowa station has compiled some figures that are interesting. Figuring repairs and depreciation of a $325 machine at 12 per cent and interest on investment at 6 per cent, the cost of machine maintenance was $58.50 per year. The labor of two men and a boy was put at $5 per day, and at this figure the husking of a 100 acre field which yielded at the rate of sixty-five bushels per acre, requiring eighteen days, cost $90, making the total cost of machine husking $148.50. Husking this 6,500 bushels of corn at 3 cents per bushel would come to $195. An advantage of the machine husker, aside from greater economy, was that the job could be done in less time. A drawback noted was that it left the leaves and husks in bad condition for forage.

With the manure spreader costing from $90 to $125, depending upon make and capacity, every farm on which an attempt is made to follow agriculture intelligently and effectively should have one. The question is not whether one can afford to buy one, but, rather, whether he can afford to be without one.

The young fruit tree should be pruned during the winter or early spring months if the object is the encouragement of wood growth and the building of a proper frame. If the trees are old enough to bear and one wishes to induce such a result the pruning should be deferred until midsummer, preferably during the month of July.

While there is some evidence tending to show that silage fed steers do not possess quite as firm flesh as those dry fed on hay or corn fodder, there is at the same time no evidence tending to show that a silage fed steer brings any less when fitted for market than one given the dry feed. This is a question that may have arisen in the minds of many who are about to build silos for dairy and stock feeding purposes.

Now and then a wooden silo blows over during summer storms when it is empty. The other day a big cement block silo at one of the Illinois state institutions which was being filled with silage split and collapsed because the structure was not re-enforced at intervals with steel girders or rods of some description. The loss sustained in the last instance was about $1,000, covering the damage to silo and loss of silage, but it furnishes a valuable object lesson in silo construction.

We have attended more than one farmers' institute where men were present who were very successful in their special lines and chock full of good ideas, but who through modesty or embarrassment when on their feet wouldn't volunteer a sentence. To elicit information from just such fellows as these there should be a concerted effort on the part of those in charge of the sessions by making a list of the bashful farmers and putting such questions to them as would bring out the desired information. Men of this type will answer questions without much embarrassment who would be scared stiff if they were to get on their feet and speak voluntarily.

Some "short cuts" are commendable; then, again, others are not. We ran across an instance of the latter kind the other day. It had to do with a young fellow who seemed to be discouraging in himself the inclination to honest toil. He thought he would try his hand at a short cut, so intercepted a nine dollar money order, forged it, and at the present writing he is in a nearby jail awaiting action by the grand jury. His youthfulness may lead the authorities to consent to a compromise; otherwise he is likely to do two or three years in the pen. It's a mighty rocky road this young fellow is setting out on. The "short cut" he counted on bids fair to be much longer and much more difficult than he thought.

During a season when typhoid fever seems to be more prevalent than for many years it is worth while repeating some of the precautions given in these notes some months ago. The chief sources of infection are through food and liquids taken into the system, and of these the most prolific are drinking water, milk and oysters which come from beds where city sewage is dumped. The only way to be on the safe side is to boil all water and milk used and to thoroughly cook oysters and any other article of food that might contain the germs. Another precaution of equal importance where there is a typhoid patient in the house is the use of the utmost care in disinfecting all of the patient's sputa, excreta and urine. These are not pleasant things to talk about, but many a life has been lost from this scourge through lack of proper attention to these simple precautions.

The writer has had occasion of late to make inquiry into the rating of some young men who have been desirous of securing loans of banking houses, and it is interesting as well as instructive to note some of the factors which the average banker takes into account before extending a loan. Among these may be mentioned the amount of money which the prospective borrower has saved—in other words, his present financial status. Another and very important consideration, linked with the above and determining it, is the habit which one has acquired in the handling of his earnings, whether saving them or spending them carelessly without a thought of the future. Another is the habits which the prospective borrower has acquired along the line of steadiness, push and promptness in meeting obligations assumed. It is due to these and other reasons why one man can get an accommodation at a bank and others cannot, and it is a pity that more young men do not realize the fact early in their career when the acquiring of habits of industry and thrift will mean ultimately success or failure in a business way. The lack in such fellows is that they have little ambition to be anything and have nothing in the future toward which they are working energetically and with a well defined purpose.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

LOSS REACHES HALF MILLION

Plant of the General Electric Company at Minneapolis Totally Destroyed by Fire.

A large section of Minneapolis was plunged into darkness and its commercial life almost paralyzed by an explosion of the "13,000 wire" leading into the power plant of the Minneapolis General Electric company. Eleven men employed in the building made their way to safety by groping their way through the valley of the mill race after the explosion. The plant was wrecked and a tangled mass of wire, machinery and lumber was thrown in every direction by the force of the explosion. Fire followed and completed the demolition of the building.

Three men were injured and the damage to the property is estimated at $500,000.

The burning of the plant put five sub-stations out of commission and affected the West Side of the city. Lights in that section were all out and factories' power shut off. Department stores and hotels used candles for lighting and many elevators were stationary.

Among the most seriously hit by the shutting off of power were the newspapers, who are practically dependent on electric power to run their plants. Eager cries for news shortly after the fire could not be answered until the Journal shoved into use a hand press of pioneer days. On this a one-page extra was issued.

BOY BANDITS KILL OFFICER

Duluth Policeman Slain by Youthful Highwaymen.

William Muzzary, aged twenty years, and Algot Johnson, aged seventeen, discharged bellboy and night porter, respectively, of the Hotel McKay at Duluth, held up, robbed and shot at the night clerk and escaped with $50 belonging to the hotel. They were arrested and placed on a street car after a chase through the Interstate bridge district. While being taken back to the city they asked that they be allowed to go inside the car, which request being granted one of the youthful bandits pulled a revolver from a pocket that had escaped the attention of Policeman Harry Cheamore, who had made the arrest, opened fire on that officer and killed him after shooting him twice in the lungs and once in the forehead.

The robbers then held up the passengers and crew of the street car and escaped, but were captured several hours later.

BANDIT HELD FOR MURDER

Slayer of St. Paul Motorman May Be Under Arrest.

Identified, according to the St. Paul police department, as the man who killed Motorman James Alexander at the end of the Grand avenue car line on the night of Oct. 22, William Kohn, known as "Shaggy Eyebrows," who, the police say, is a self-confessed bandit and robber of seven stores in various parts of the city, has been charged with murder. Walter Gross, conductor of the street car in the defense of which Alexander met his death, identified Kohn at Central police station.

The identification cannot be taken as absolutely positive, but it is regarded as practically so by the police.

ON GROUND OF INSANITY

Patrick Gibbons, Slayer of Two Persons, Is Acquitted.

Patrick Gibbons, tried at Hastings for killing Rev. Father Walsh at South St. Paul May 29 last, when he also shot and killed his wife, was acquitted. The verdict was as follows:

"We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty as charged in the indictment, on the grounds that at the date the act was committed he was insane and had homicidal insanity."

Gibbons was committed to the hospital for the insane at St. Peter by Judge Johnson.

WOMAN ENDS LIVES OF THREE

Kills Her Two Little Children and Herself.

Mrs. Nelson Swanson killed herself and her two boys, Carl W., aged nine, and Bernard W., aged six years, with carbolic acid at the family home at Virginia. The three bodies were found clothed in night attire, lying on one bed. The lips of the trio were burned by the fluid.

The woman's act is believed to have been induced by brooding over the prospect of going to a hospital for an operation.

Minnesota Labor Commissioner.

The next labor commissioner of Minnesota will be William F. Houk, a union printer, for twenty-two years foreman of the composing room of the Minneapolis Tribune. Announcement of his appointment was made in the governor's office. He was not an applicant for the place and was backed by no special interest.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

Problems of the universe, embracing nearly every phase of thorough research and extending from infinitesimal insects to myriads of whirling great worlds, were discussed at the University of Minnesota by profound and recognized authorities of American schools, gathered at the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Some twenty odd affiliated scientific sections met in as many rooms scattered through a half dozen buildings on the university campus.

Public schools in Minnesota cost 40 per cent more during the last school year than they did four years previously. The biennial report of C. G. Schulz, state superintendent, shows the total disbursements in the state for public school purposes during the year ending July 31 to have been $12,724,437. For the year ending July 31, 1906, they were $9,820,737.

An expenditure of $1,100 by the Minnesota state fair board for the maintenance of a restaurant in the basement of the administration building during fair week, at which, it is asserted, the officers and their families and other invited guests ate their meals, is criticised in a report made to the governor by Public Examiner Schaefer.

The Dupont Powder company's black powder factory at Wilpen, on the Duluth, Missabe and Northern road, five miles from Hibbing, is nearly completed. It will be put in full operation by spring and will have a daily capacity of 2,000 kegs of the explosive and will employ seventy-five men. The cost of the plant will be $250,000.

George T. Simpson, attorney general, refuses to consent to having the franchise of the Creamery Package Manufacturing company restored in Minnesota. A delegation from Mankato visited the attorney general and sought his consent to having the order ousting the company from the state changed.

Officials of Pennington county filed an application with the state supreme court for a writ of prohibition to stop proceedings started by citizens of Red Lake county. Pennington county was created out of Red Lake at the last election. Red Lake seeks to annul the creation of the new county.

The Minnesota National bank of Minneapolis has been taken over by the Scandinavian-American National bank. The Scandinavian National had assets, according to its last published report, of $2,412,381. The Minnesota National had assets of about $1,000,000.

Officers were elected by the Minnesota Educational association at their meeting last week as follows: George F. James, University of Minnesota, president; Mrs. Charlotte Knudson, Fergus Falls, recording secretary, and F. G. Sperry, Mankato, treasurer.

The Northwestern National bank of Minneapolis will establish a pension fund for employes and put into operation a plan for the retirement of those who have been with the bank a stated number of years and have an age limit to be determined upon.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

Peter Sutherland, a resident of Minnesota since 1852, one of the few men to whom the state paid a pension for service in the Indian wars, friend and adviser of Bishop Henry B. Whipple in his work among the Indians and a member of a Scottish family several of whom achieved high rank in the service of the British government, was found dead in his chair in his lodging at St. Paul. Mr. Sutherland was born at Maryshoen, Scotland, in 1832.

Mrs. A. M. Kerst, aged ninety-six years, is dead at Villa Sancta Scholastica in Duluth. Her husband died eleven years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Kerst were among the early settlers of St. Paul, settling there in the fifties. They removed to Duluth twenty-five years ago and have been so active and helpful to the Catholic institutions that both received recognition from Leo XIII., and Mrs. Kerst from Pope Pius X.

Rev. John Hauck, for many years presiding elder of the Southern Minnesota district of the German Methodist church, died suddenly at Live Oak, Cal., of a stroke of paralysis. He gave up the position of presiding elder three years ago, on account of failing health, and moved to California.

Aaron Doty, an old soldier of the Second Minnesota infantry, is dead at Sauk Center. He was born in Chautauqua county, N. Y., March 1, 1825. He came to Minnesota in 1857. He joined the Second Minnesota infantry and was present in several important battles.

Mrs. Mary McNeeley, an old settler of Woodland, Wright county, died at the home of her son in Woodland. Mrs. McNeeley was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in 1808.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Clifford Schaefer of Ely, son of John Schaefer of that city, a lad of fifteen, was induced to drink whisky by a woodsman he and two other boys met while hunting and as a result the Schaefer boy became lost and froze to death. The authorities are seeking the woodsman.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

Railroads operating in Minnesota did a profitable business for the fiscal year ending June 30. According to compilation of the reports made to the railway and warehouse commission the dividends paid on their whole lines by the roads operating in this state amounted to $73,089,044, an increase of $10,557,762 over the preceding year. The total taxes paid by the roads on their gross earnings in the state of Minnesota was $3,640,568, an increase for the year of $525,000.

Property valued at $258,883 was stolen from Minneapolis people in 1910, including eighty-two automobiles, valued at $165,200, all of which were recovered by the police, and other goods, valued at $93,683, as reported by the pawnbroker inspector, Joseph Scallon, of which $53,220 worth was recovered and restored to the owners.

There were 210 more miles of railways in the state at the close of the year ending June 30 than in the preceding year. The total mileage, exclusive of terminal and transfer lines, was 8,485.56. The largest increase was by the Soo line, which added 110 miles to the lines it has in the state.

Miss Josephine Norval will be the assistant state librarian. She is the choice of the judges of the supreme court and will take up her work in a few days. At present she is stenographer for Justice Lewis, where she has been employed for several years.

Elias J. Lien has been appointed state librarian, to succeed John E. King, who has held the office for the past six years. Mr. Lien hails from St. Vincent, Kittson county, and has been assistant librarian for a number of years.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Joseph Anderson, station agent for the Great Northern at Edrahl, and John T. Iverson of the same place, went to Elbow Lake to celebrate the new year. They made the trip on a railway velocipede, which while crossing the bridge over the Pomme de Terre river, just east of Thorsberg station, jumped the track. Both young men and the speeder were hurled to the ice, thirty feet below. Their bodies were found about a week later, this being the first known of the accident.

Tossing red pepper into the eyes of a clerk in the Finkelstein jewelry store at St. Paul a robber made away with a $250 diamond ring. He was arrested by Policeman Fallon a short distance from the store after he had attempted to shoot the clerk, who, but slightly blinded, followed him bareheaded into the street.

Andrew Pavl, a laborer in the Hopkins Sewer Pipe Plant company, was found dead, a victim of murder, in his cottage in Hopkins, just a week after he had told his friends that he feared some one would kill him. Extreme cruelty had been used by the murderers, for Pavl had been literally beaten to death.

Fire did $15,000 damage in Tower and for a time the entire city was threatened with destruction. A row of frame structures, which included those occupied by the Tower News, John Hickey's saloon, Kearn Martala's confectionery, Palmer Pearson's barber shop and a vacant store, was burned.

Joseph J. Schitz, a farmer residing near Duluth, was indicted by the St. Louis county grand jury for murder in the first degree. He is charged with shooting his neighbor, George Riley, Oct. 21. This is the second time Schitz has been indicted, there being an error in the first indictment.

The dead body of Edward C. Bushnell, sixty years old, a bachelor farmer living near Saginaw, on the Missabe road, was found in his cabin. His face was terribly burned and every indication points to his having fallen on the stove when it was very hot and being burned so severely that he died.

After three days of wedded life Robert Dunworthy, twenty-six years old, of Minneapolis, was fatally injured. While switching cars he stepped from an engine in front of another oncoming locomotive. He was unconscious when picked up and died on the way to a hospital.

Fire originating in the basement of the Jensen Printing company at Minneapolis and followed by a gasoline explosion spread with lightninglike rapidity, causing a property loss approximating $50,000 and rendering thirty people homeless.

The safe in the box office at the Shubert theater at St. Paul was robbed of over $3,000 the other day. The robbers discarded checks aggregating $3,700 found in the safe. The night watchman was overpowered and bound by the bandits.

Succumbing to wounds inflicted by the accidental discharge of his revolver Patrol Driver Bartholomew H. Moriarity, for fifteen years a member of the St. Paul police force, died at St. Joseph's hospital.

Fire broke out in the Habstritt dry goods and grocery store at Maynard not only completely destroying the building and contents, but wiping out four other mercantile houses with their contents.

Nels Ahlberg, aged thirty-five, a fireman on the Great Northern railroad, was instantly killed in a collision in the yards at St. Paul. Several others were slightly injured.

SENATOR CLAPP.

Choice of Minnesota Republicans to Succeed Himself.

SENATOR CLAPP ENDORSED

Choice of Minnesota Republicans to Succeed Himself.

Moses E. Clapp, for ten years senator from Minnesota, was unanimously endorsed by the caucus of Republican members of the legislature for another term of six years. The opposition, which was talking loudly a few days ago and working quietly almost up to the time of the caucus, disappeared entirely when it was called to order. There was not a suggestion of opposition. No other name was presented. No motion to postpone the caucus was made or considered.

MINNESOTA LID LIFTED BY COURT

Indian Agents Enjoined From Interfering With Saloons.

An injunction restraining W. E. Johnson, special agent of the bureau of Indian affairs, from interfering with the liquor traffic under the provisions of the Indian cession treaty of 1855, was issued by Judge Willard of the United States circuit court at Minneapolis.

The reasons given for the decision are sweeping in their character. If the decision holds there will be no more of the "federal Indian liquor lid" in Minnesota outside of the limits of the actual Indian reservations.

Judge Willard holds that the admission of Minnesota to statehood gave the state the power of regulating the liquor traffic and repealed the anti-liquor clauses of the Indian land cession treaties. He points to the fact that only a year ago was any attempt made to enforce them since the state was admitted. For about a half a century before that the control of the liquor traffic, outside of the Indian reservations themselves, was left to the state.

OLD GUARD FARES POORLY

Minnesota Insurgents Head the Senate Committee.

"Progressive" senators got all the better of it in the committee assignments made by Lieutenant Governor Gordon. The chairman of the important committees are all of the "insurgent" type.

Frank Clague of Lamberton is given the most important committee assignment, that of chairman of the finance committee. Carl Wallace of Minneapolis heads the committee on taxes. O. G. Dale of Madison heads the education committee. J. E. Haycraft of Madelia heads the elections committee. G. P. Wilson of Minneapolis is chairman of insurance. F. E. Putnam of Blue Earth is chairman of the judiciary committee. The reapportionment committee is headed by Senator Hackney of St. Paul. Senator H. E. Sundberg of Kennedy heads the railroad committee.

V. L. Johnson of Chisago heads the temperance committee and seven of the nine members are believed to be county option men.

ONLY ONE PASSENGER KILLED

But Casualties on Minnesota Railroads Numbered 215 Last Year.

The railroads in the state of Minnesota killed 215 and injured 1,858 by the movement of trains during the year ending last June, according to a compilation of the reports of the roads by the railroad and warehouse commission. This is an increase of forty-seven killed and 203 injured over the figures for the year preceding.

Of the number killed trespassers constitute by far the largest number, 116. Only one passenger was killed on all the roads operating within the state. Forty-seven of the dead were trainmen.

May Lose His Eyesight.

Threatened with approaching blindness Justice E. A. Jaggard of the state supreme court left St. Paul with his daughter for Philadelphia to consult surgeons. From there they will sail for the Bermuda islands, to be gone three months or more.

ELIJAH CLARK SEARS DEAD

South Dakota's Patriarch Passes Away.

Canton, S. D., Jan. 4.—Elijah Clark Sears died in this city at the home of his daughter, Mrs. William Shields, aged 105 years, 6 months and 8 days.

His father and two uncles served under Washington, and his oldest brother was a soldier during the war of 1812. Mr. Sears saw the first steamboat on the Connecticut river, named the Oliver Ellsworth, just after Fulton's success in New York.

He was born at East Hampton, Conn., June 23, 1805, when Thomas Jefferson was president, and cast his first vote in 1828 for John Q. Adams, the Federalist candidate for president the same year that Andrew Jackson was first elected president, and his last vote was cast for President Taft who, upon learning of his age, wrote him a complimentary letter.

Of the many important events in his long life, none gave him so much satisfaction as the saving of three little girls from being drowned in Lake Pocotopaug, near East Hampton, when he was a boy of nineteen. The little girls broke through the ice and young Sears ran to their rescue, which he effected after a desperate struggle in the water.

At the time of his death he had been a member of the Baptist church for seventy-five years, and was an honorary member of Bridgeport, Conn., camp Sons of the Revolution. He was an inventor of note, a musician in younger days, and for the past three years was actively engaged in breeding a new variety of potato from seed.

CRAWFORD AFTER LORIMER

South Dakota Senator Opposed to Illinois Man.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Senator Crawford of South Dakota will deliver a speech in opposition to the committee report which declares William Lorimer of Illinois to be entitled to a seat in the senate. Announcement to this effect was made by Senator Crawford. The South Dakota senator is engaged in making a careful examination of the records in the Lorimer case. He has already found enough, he said, to justify him in reaching the conclusion that Mr. Lorimer is not entitled to his seat.

The senate delegation from South Dakota has thus divided on the Lorimer case. Senator Gamble was a member of the senate committee which reported Mr. Lorimer's election was not effected by fraud, but while some votes cast for him were corrupted, not a sufficient number were tainted to make the election invalid. Senator Gamble may make a speech in support of his position. There is a probability, therefore, of a joint debate between South Dakota senators which promises to be one of the most interesting struggles witnessed in the senate in many years.

Sugar Trust Is Suppliant.

New York, Jan. 4.—District Attorney Wise will forward to the treasury department in Washington today the compromise offer of the American Sugar Refining company in the so called "drawback cases." If the government will abandon its prosecution the company agrees not to contest any percentage of the "drawbacks" to which the company is legitimately entitled.

May End Trouble.

Washington, Jan. 4.—It was stated at the White House that President Taft is about ready to issue his order bearing on the Minnesota Indian liquor situation. This order will limit the application of the two treaties that may be set aside by executive proclamation. The indications are that the order will be promulgated by Saturday.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

Minneapolis was plunged into darkness and its commercial life almost paralyzed by an explosion of the "13,000 wire" leading into the power plant of the Minneapolis General Electric company. The plant was wrecked and a tangled mass of wire, machinery and lumber was thrown in every direction by the force of the explosion. Fire followed and completed the demolition of the building. Three men were injured and the damage to the property is estimated at $500,000.

In the Northern Pacific yards at Cheney, Wash., North Coast limited No. 2 struck the rear car of the Burlington passenger train No. 42. Three coaches were wrecked. Four trainmen were killed and a number of trainmen and passengers seriously injured.

The five children of John Markasavaga lost their lives at Minersville, Pa., in a fire which destroyed three houses in the foreign quarter of the town. The children ranged in age from two months to eight years.

Fire originating in the Hollenberg Musical company's building at Little Rock, Ark., destroyed an entire block of business houses, the loss on the buildings and stocks of goods amounting to $1,000,000.

Six deaths have occurred and many residents of the village of Telfener, in Victoria county, Tex., are ill as a result of eating bread made from flour containing poison.

One man was killed, one fatally hurt and much damage done at Chicago by a wind storm. The wind was accompanied by a big drop in temperature.

The business section of Granville, N. Y., a village of 3,000 inhabitants, was swept by fire with a loss of $150,000.

The Carnegie Trust company, one of the largest banking institutions in New York city, with deposits of nearly $9,000,000, closed its doors by order of State Superintendent of Banks Cheney. The suspension hardly caused a ripple in the financial district, where the trust company was often reported in a shaky condition.

Municipal funds of New York city amounting to more than $800,000 are tied up in the Northern bank and the Carnegie Trust company, closed as an indirect result of the operations of Joseph G. Robin, the fallen banker, now in the Tombs.

Statistics show that losses by fire in the United States and Canada in 1910 amounted to $234,470,650, or over $30,000,000 more than the losses in 1909. December losses were exceptionally heavy, aggregating $21,528,000.

The Washington-Alaska bank of Fairbanks, Alaska, which has $1,000,000 on deposit, has suspended payment.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

Wage advances aggregating $7,096,047 annually and the asserted necessity for increased income to meet demand for improved facilities are the principal arguments of the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburg in support of increased class freight rates.

Judge Holland, in the United States district court at Philadelphia, inflicted fines of $40,000 each on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad company, the Lehigh Valley Railroad company and the Bethlehem Steel company, charged with unlawful rebating.

One in every nine persons in New York city receives assistance from charity every year, according to the findings of a city charity committee.

MAKING A PRIZE STEER.

Not only those who have seen the prize winning steers at the international, but many who read about them, will be interested in the system of feeding which is followed in getting one of these blue ribbon beeves ready for the show ring. The Iowa State college at Ames, which fed and exhibited Shamrock II., the grand champion steer of the 1910 international, has lately made public the following data in regard to this steer and the care which he received. Shamrock was calved Jan. 10, 1910, his sire being a pure bred Angus bull and his dam a high grade Angus cow. He was bought by the agricultural college the latter part of April, 1910, and on May 1, when put on forced feed, weighed 346 pounds. His weights at monthly intervals during the feeding period were: June 1, 462 pounds; July 1, 580; Aug. 1, 700; Sept. 1, 822; Oct. 1, 941; Nov. 1, 1,060, and Nov. 20, 1,130 pounds, when he was shipped to Chicago. Beginning May 1 Shamrock was put on a nurse cow, being kept in the barn during the day and allowed the run of a grass lot at night. He was fed in addition all the clover hay he would eat and a grain ration consisting of three parts corn, two parts wheat bran and one part oilmeal. This ration was continued up to Sept. 1. From this time on he was given two nurse cows, fed green corn (ears and stalks), clover hay and roots, while the grain ration was changed to boiled wheat and oats. During the last twenty days of the feeding period his daily ration consisted of from nine to eleven pounds of cooked feed, twenty-five pounds of roots and five pounds of clover hay, besides the milk from two cows. The excellence of the care given the animal is shown in the fact that he did not miss a feed from May 1 to the close of the feeding period. Shamrock II. was sold at auction at the close of the show to Chicago butchers, bringing 60 cents per pound, or $672 for his total weight of 1,120 pounds.

SAMPLE DAIRY RATIONS.

There is probably no other state agricultural college in the country that has so large a number of pure bred dairy cows of different breeds of large butter capacity as that of Missouri; hence some of the suggestions contained in bulletin No. 44, recently issued, will be received with interest by dairymen.

Along the line of general rules the following are laid down: (1) Feed all the roughage the cows will eat up at all times; (2) feed one pound of grain per day for each pound of butter fat produced per week or one pound of grain per day for each three pounds of milk produced daily; (3) feed all the cows will take without gaining in weight. Clover and alfalfa should constitute a part of the roughage, if possible, but in case they are not to be had their place in the bill of fare should be substituted by oil or cottonseed meal and bran. Where possible the ration should be varied with silage and roots—turnips, carrots or beets. The bulletin recommends the following sample rations for cows giving from twenty to twenty-five pounds of milk daily: Ration 1—Corn silage, twenty-five pounds; clover hay, ten pounds; corn, four pounds; bran, four pounds. Ration 2—Corn silage, thirty pounds; alfalfa or cowpea hay, ten pounds; corn, six pounds; bran, two pounds. Ration 3—Clover hay, twenty pounds; corn, four to five pounds; bran or oats, two to four pounds. Ration 4—Clover hay, twenty pounds; corn and cob meal, five to seven pounds; gluten or cottonseed meal, two pounds. Ration 5—Alfalfa or cowpea hay, ten pounds; corn fodder, ten pounds; corn, five to seven pounds; bran, two pounds. Ration 6—Alfalfa or cowpea hay, fifteen to twenty pounds; corn, eight to ten pounds.

CARE OF THE BROOD SOW.

The health and vigor of the little pigs which will be coming on during the late winter and early spring will depend more largely upon the care which is given the brood sow between now and farrowing time than upon any other single factor. By care is meant chiefly the bill of fare which they receive. Corn is excellent for fitting a lard hog for market, but it comes a long way from filling the bill as a sole ration for the brood sow. A ration which will make bone and muscle is what is wanted, and this will contain only part corn. If corn and oats are the most available feeds an excellent ration is made by mixing these two grains half and half and adding to nine or ten parts of the mixture one of tankage or oilmeal. Skimmilk and buttermilk are excellent flesh formers, as are also clover and alfalfa hay. In addition to having a suitable ration, the brood sows should have opportunity for exercise and dry and snug yet well ventilated quarters in which to sleep.

It is as often true of farm animals as of human beings that where there is lack in the matter of shelter there is also carelessness in respect to the bill of fare.

If the hens are not where they have access to it or its equivalent, throw them a bunch of that fragrant alfalfa or clover hay and see how greedily they will go after it.

For the dairyman a pretty good New Year's resolution is the determination to weed out all cows that do not pay for their keep and to pull no teats whose yield of milk does not make the operation a paying one.

Quite naturally conditions which have to do with the comfort of the poultry or farm animals directly affect their health and because of this their ability to produce eggs, milk or meat. In spite of the direct connection in cause and effect, the importance of proper conditions are too often overlooked or ignored.

While feeding experiments which have been conducted by several stations show that pigs do just as well on shelled as ground corn, tests in the feeding of dairy cows show that the grains commonly used as feed for milk cows, if ground, result in an increase in milk flow of close to 10 per cent above that obtained if the grains are fed in the natural state.

A safe and sure poison dope for rats is made by mixing one part of barium carbonate (barytes) with four parts of cornmeal or about eight parts of oatmeal, moistening with water and making into a stiff dough. This should be placed in the runs. It is somewhat slow in acting, and usually the rodents leave the building in which it is placed in search of water and die in the open.

With a shortage of rainfall during the past year of from twelve to fifteen inches over a considerable portion of the country and with an unusually dry winter on, it begins to look as though a whole lot of fellows in the so called humid region would better put in some of their spare time during the next few months studying the principles of dry farming as practiced out in the semiarid sections. It is an interesting subject in itself, and a knowledge of the fundamentals may come in handy.

Although it may be a bit contradictory, it is probably true that those who enter exhibits in grain, poultry or stock shows and get inferior prizes or none whatever derive more benefit from the exhibition than those who carry off the blue ribbons, for there is furnished them in very definite shape a spur and incentive to go home and do better, while the natural inclination with the winner of first prizes is to rest on his laurels. If you have lost out or should lose out in any such exhibitions take comfort from this thought.

Some sixty years ago a writer in the Cornhill Magazine described a rat trap by means of which it was claimed that 3,000 rats were caught in a large warehouse in a single night. Briefly the plan consisted in attracting the rats on to the tops of barrels covered with thick brown paper and there feeding them for several nights. When they had become accustomed to this procedure a cross was cut in the paper, and thereafter as many rats as stepped upon it fell into the barrels and were easily disposed of. The same feature has been carried out by many since in the equipment of barrels with light covers supported by a rod extending across the middle, easily turned, so that the weight of a rat would operate it.

The suggestion by Secretary Ballinger in a recent public report that the nation's natural resources, including coal, mineral and oil lands and water power sites, ought to be placed under the control of the several states in which they happen to be located is interpreted by many thinking people to mean favoring a plan whereby corporations of one description and another can the more easily gobble on to the public domain and its resources. Past history in state management shows not only monumental carelessness and indifference in regulation, but under it such resources have been thrown into the hands of men who have been wantonly designing and corrupt. If the people of the country and their representatives at Washington are wise they will keep this wealth in the hands of the federal government and see that it is administered for the benefit of all.

The practice of covering strawberries and tender raspberries in latitudes where the winters are severe is common in many of the northern states. More rarely is the same plan followed in the case of fruit trees, such as the peach. One Colorado grower has followed this practice for years, and the results following such covering have been uniformly successful. From the time the trees are transplanted he root prunes so as to do away with a taproot as well as the roots extending in two opposite directions. When ready to cover, a trench running at right angles to the remaining roots is started about four feet from the trunk and dug toward it, being gradually deepened. The soil about the roots is then moistened by thorough irrigation, and a little later the trunk is carefully pushed over into the trench, the limbs bent down, covered with straw and a three inch layer of earth. The grower in question harvested last fall over $1,000 worth of peaches from 438 trees thus covered, while from a whole row not covered he picked just one peach.

The plump, blocky, sleek coated Doddy or Angus of today seems to be a descendant of the large horned cattle of Scotland and the Norse hornless, while more remotely they trace their lineage to the black Celtic, the brown Belgian or Swiss and the white cattle of the Romans.

If the amount of dairying done on the place is sufficient to justify the purchase of a separator it would seem to have reached an importance which would likewise make advisable the erection of a convenient house where the supply of cream and the separator may be kept. It is sure that the cow stable is no place for it; neither is the corncrib nor kitchen.

While the old fashioned practice of distributing manure by placing it in piles in the field when thrown from the wagon is fast going out of vogue, yet it is still practiced in some localities. It has much to condemn it from the standpoint of a loss of time, and still more because the fertilizing elements leached out by rain and melting snow are very unevenly distributed and a good share virtually wasted. The manure spreader overcomes this difficulty nicely, doing more effective work than is possible by the most effective hand distribution.

The season of the farm institutes is on, and the success of the meetings is quite likely to depend upon the degree of interest manifested by the rank and file in the program of topics arranged. If one isn't acquainted with the best ways of doing things on the farm—those that tend to reduce labor and give cash results—it is his duty to attend the institute session for his own sake. On the other hand, if one is thoroughly posted and can learn nothing from other farmers who may be in attendance he clearly has a duty to perform in telling others of his successful methods, in which case he performs a real service to his fellows.

It is quite possible that the runty pig or pigs are afflicted with worms, in which case it is just a matter of time until they kick the bucket. We saw one of these runts not long since preserved in alcohol, and the sight made it possible to realize why a pig afflicted with worms gets discouraged. The intestines of the specimen in question were literally a solid mass of long stringy white worms, which not only swarmed in the organs mentioned, but had perforated the stomach, the liver and kidneys. A pig in this shape simply starves to death, saying nothing of great distress and pain it suffers while slowly dying. If pigs begin to appear scrubby, look out for worms and give them doses of some reliable vermicide. Better than this is to keep before the pigs at all times a ration of cob charcoal, salt and sulphur, which will prevent the worms from getting a foothold.

If you owe the local paper or some other publication a subscription account it is a pretty good idea to pay it. You may not have definitely ordered the paper, but the law in this connection is that, no matter how the subscription started, you are responsible for payment if you have taken such paper from the postoffice and read it. A subscriber of a paper not far away owed $8 on subscription. He refused payment, and a suit was instituted. At the conclusion of the hearing of the case the editor, the plaintiff in question, was given his claim, while the costs of the action, amounting to about $20, were assessed on and had to be paid by the delinquent subscriber. In this connection it may be in place to say that the way to stop a paper is to pay it up to date and then have the postmaster in the town where the paper is delivered give the publisher the two or three necessary notices, and after this has been done a subscription account is not collectible, no matter how long it runs.

The other day the writer had opportunity to glean a few facts from a northern corn belt farmer who the past season had forty acres in beets and who realizes the amount of attention which a beet patch of the size requires. It is but fair to say that he had his nerve with him when he tackled so large a proposition. We found that of this tract some land was too low and wet to give satisfactory results, while the highest land in the forty acres was so light and dry that a very poor stand of beets was the result. In spite of these drawbacks he found on "sugaring" off after the last ton of beets was aboard the cars that he had netted $880 on the year's crop, or a net return per acre of $22.50. While hard to determine in terms of dollars and cents, it is fair to say that the excellent tilth in which the field was left as a result of growing the beets was of considerable value, while it should also be added that the beet tops which were fed the dairy cows caused them to nearly double in their flow of milk after the topping season started. Next season this same man will select his beet land more carefully, will either tile or cut out the low acres and not plant seed on land which is too dry, and he thinks by following this plan that he can raise as many beets and make just as much money off about twenty acres. Some points in this farmer's experience may well be taken into account by those planning to grow beets next season for the first time.

Choice of Minnesota Republicans to Succeed Himself.

Moses E. Clapp, for ten years senator from Minnesota, was unanimously endorsed by the caucus of Republican members of the legislature for another term of six years. The opposition, which was talking loudly a few days ago and working quietly almost up to the time of the caucus, disappeared entirely when it was called to order. There was not a suggestion of opposition. No other name was presented. No motion to postpone the caucus was made or considered.

EBERHART IS INAUGURATED

Formally Sworn In as Governor of Minnesota.

Having organized by election of officers, the Minnesota legislature of 1911 is ready to start work. But before starting any legislation on its own initiative it heard suggestions from the executive department. These were contained in the governor's inaugural message, which was read to the assembled solons during the ceremony of inaugurating the governor, which took place in the house chamber on Wednesday.

The inauguration of A. O. Eberhart for his first term as an elected governor of the state was attended with the usual solemnities. Chief Justice Start administered the oath of office as soon as the governor reached the house chamber. As soon as this was done the governor began reading his message.

The governor's message, as required by the constitution, gave a report of the condition of the state and then a number of recommendations for legislation.

GUESTS ESCAPE BY WINDOWS

Moorhead's Largest Hotel Destroyed by Fire.

Moorhead lost its oldest and largest hotel when the Columbia was totally destroyed. The flames started in the basement and spread so rapidly that firemen could not control them, being handicapped by the low temperature.

Because of the extreme density of smoke in the lower part of the building the stairways and regular exits were cut off and guests were saved through windows. There were no injuries.

The building was erected in 1881 at a cost of $80,000. It was owned by John Erickson, who carried only $20,000 insurance.

YOUTH ADMITS THE CRIME

Killed Aged Woman for the Purpose of Robbery.

Joseph Herzan, a Bohemian, about twenty years of age, son of a farmer living between Glencoe and Silver Lake, has confessed to the murder of Mrs. Joseph Fimon, aged sixty-four, at the Fimon farm near Silver Lake on the night of Dec. 4.

Herzan, who was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Kohler, at first stoutly denied having any knowledge whatever of the brutal crime. His movements have been so carefully shadowed since the murder, however, that the authorities were able to wring from him a confession.

COSTLY FIRE AT DULUTH

Property Valued at Quarter of Million Dollars Destroyed.

A $250,000 fire entirely gutted the Metropolitan block at Duluth, including the entire stock of the Duluth Hardware company, the Weiland Shoe company and the Gray-Tallant Department Store company. Most of the losses were fully covered by insurance. The block was owned by Bradley, Tyson & Cabot of Boston, who will rebuild at once.

Several roomers who occupied the upper floors of the building lost their entire belongings, but escaped unhurt. The fire was most spectacular.

Minnesota War Hero Dead.

Francis A. Seeley, former adjutant general of Minnesota, is dead at the Soldiers' home near Ocean Park, Cal. General Seeley was seventy-eight years of age. He enlisted in 1861 and served through the Civil war, engaging in every battle of the army of the Potomac from Yorktown to Gettysburg. He served one term as a member of the Minnesota legislature.

TO SUE STATE FOR LANDS

Suits Have Been Prepared to Recover Thousands of Acres for White Earth Indians.

Many Thousands of Acres of Timber Cut and The Lumber Sold.

Washington, Jan. 12.—Six hundred suits have been prepared by the department of justice and about seven hundred others are under way in an effort to recover thousands of acres of valuable lands and timber said to have been fraudulently taken from the White Earth tribe of Chippewa Indians in northwestern Minnesota.

Combined forces of the department of justice and the interior department have been working on the cases more than a year.

The reservation, covering two counties, was deeded to the Indians by the government with the stipulation that no part of it could ever be deeded to any but full blooded Chippewa Indians. Later, however, an act passed congress permitting sales and transfers.

Attorneys of the department of justice who have had the investigation under way declare that when the latter act passed congress, white men who had gathered at the reservation waiting for it to become law, celebrated the news with bonfires and a carnival. The investigators say insignificant sums of money, whiskey, trinkets and even promises which were never kept were the prices by which the valuable lands were secured. Conveyances were induced from minors, it is charged.

Many thousands of acres of white and Norway pine have been cut over and the lumber sold. The suits which will be filed in the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota will seek to restore the lands to the Indians and recover for the timber of which they have been devastated.

Fires Will Be Investigated.

A joint resolution proposed by Representative Donald Robertson, of Argyle, providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the condition of the sufferers from the forest fires in Koochiching, Roseau, Beltrami and Itasca counties, has been referred to the house committee on forestry.

In his resolution Mr. Robertson recites that the private subscriptions, amounting to about $75,000, will not suffice to provide seed grain, machinery, horses and cattle and other necessaries to enable the settlers to become self supporting.

The commission, if appointed, will consist of three house members and two senators.

A resolution by G. H. Mattson, of Roseau, calling for the appointment of a special committee of three members to confer with similar bodies from the Wisconsin and Michigan legislatures and forestry authorities as to the most effective measures for forest protection and to report the results of the conference and investigation, also was referred to the forestry committee.—Crookston Times.

BRINGS HOME A BRIDE

Ole Legvold Returns Last Sunday Accompanied By Bride.

Wedded at Cumberland, Wis., to Miss Ingaborg Paulson Last Friday.

Last Friday afternoon at Cumberland, Wis., was solemnized the marriage of Miss Ingaborg Paulson, a popular young lady of that place, to Mr. Ole Legvold, of this city.

The marriage took place at the home of the bride's parents and only relatives and immediate friends were present at the ceremony. The nuptial knot was tied by the Rev. Aaskolen, of the Free church of that city.

The bride is a highly respected and accomplished young lady of Cumberland. She has on two occasions visited with relatives in this city, and has made many warm friends during her stay here.

The bridegroom needs no introduction to the people of this city and vicinity, and has by his particularly pleasing disposition and congenial manner won a host of staunch friends that would be the pride of anyone to fall a lot to.

The happy couple arrived in this city last Sunday morning and are at present comfortably quartered at the residence of Mr. Legvold's parents on Knight avenue, but Mr. Legvold is contemplating the purchase of a residence in this city after which they will go to actual housekeeping.

The News among their countless friends takes pleasure in extending to the young couple the best wishes of a long and happy married life.

Antlers Give Dance.

The Antlers gave its initiation of the club rooms, since the reparation of the damages done by fire some time ago, last Friday evening. About 100 members and their friends were present and enjoyed the usual good time that is always to be had at these social functions tendered by the club.

Refreshments were prepared and served to the guests during the course of the evening by a number of young ladies of this city; and the music rendered for the occasion by the Thief River Falls Concert Orchestra.

An Elaborate Production

Twelfth Night, to be presented at the Auditorium, in Five acts and Sixteen Scenes. When William Yule, Violet Eddy, and their supporting company of Shakespearian Players appear January 23rd in the ideal comedy (Twelfth Night) theatre-goers will see probably, the most elaborate and complete scenic production ever handled on the local stage. Manager C. P. Walker has furnished with a lavish hand an equipment sufficient to supply five acts, dividing into sixteen scenes. Every inch of scenery, every piece of furniture, every platform and stage brace is carried by the company, together with special lighting effects. The scenery has been built especially for this territory, and can be readily adjusted to any stage. Manager Walker is particular in his instructions to his stage carpenters, and insists that the scenery be used in each and every town.

Shakespeare's Ideal Comedy.

"Twelfth Night" To Be Given By Strong Company.

Seats will soon be on sale for the engagement of "Twelfth Night" the best picturesque and delightful of all the Shakespearian comedies, which appears here one night, January 23rd, under the direction of C. P. Walker. Presented by a company of experienced Shakespearian actors, with a most elaborate costume and scenic equipment, (Twelfth Night) is ideal entertainment. The company are the famous English Players with Wm. Yule, the popular Canadian comedian, and Violet Eddy, a winsome young actress, especially engaged for the roles of Sir Toby Belch and Viola.

REPORT IS DOUBTFUL

Report of T. R. Falls Population Appears to Be Very Doubtful.

Figures As Published In City Papers Placed At 3,714.

A report is in circulation, and has appeared in some of the city papers, giving the population of Pennington county as 9,566, and of this city as 3,714.

If the figures regarding the city population were correct, we would be a curiosity among towns, in having, exactly every third person attending school.

The number of school children, the number of names in the directory, the revenue of the post office, and all other means of measuring, or estimating, population places it at between five and six thousand, and we believe that when the final figures are announced this will be found to be correct.

"Twelfth Night" Coming.

To be presented here on January 23rd.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the lovers of the best in dramatic literature is that of the engagement of the superior company of players headed by William Yule and Violet Eddy, in "Twelfth Night".

Shakespeare was manifestly in a holiday mood, when he penned this delightfully irresponsible comedy of improbalities. No great problem clogged the flow of his fancy—no call to right the wrongs of humanity choked the serene utterance of his joyous muse. Even Viola is less strenuous than most of our poet's heroines, and throws herself with a gay spirit into the masquerading adventures through which she passes to comedy's inevitable goal—the hymeneal altar. No less an authority than Mr. Halliwell Phillips describes "Twelfth Night" as the perfection of English comedy and the most fascinating drama in the language.

May Start Band.

Ed Moran of Thief River Falls, and well known here as he formerly made his home here, was here yesterday enterviewing the local boys as to the of starting a brass band. If he meets with sufficient encouragement there is no doubt but that a local band will be organized and as this is just what Plummer needs at this point each person interested in the town should be willing to lend their encouragement. Now is the time for all young men who would like to learn to play not only in the village but also in the surrounding farm district to come to the front and show their willingness to do their share in starting something new and progressive in Plummer.—Plummer Pioneer.

AN ATHLETIC CONTEST

AT THE AUDITORIUM

MONDAY, JANUARY 30

8:30 P. M.

ROUSING PRELIMINARIES.

John Gordon, the big Minneapolis policeman, is coming, and will agree to throw William Kline of this city three falls in one hour "catch-as-catch-can" style. All toe and strangle holds will be barrred.

DO NOT CLASS THIS AS A PRIZE FIGHT.

We guarantee absolutely that there will not be a word spoken or an action that the most refined can take exceptions to. You will see a clean cut contest from beginning to end between one of the best heavy weight wrestlers in the country and the best that our city has.

With every paid ticket we will admit one lady free. We especially invite the clergymen to attend this contest, as it is being staged to introduce clean athletics in our city. We will admit them FREE and will also admit the entire high school and eighth grade FREE together with any of the teachers who wish to attend.

The mayor of our city and the promoters of this contest are endeavoring to create an interest in this and clean out-door sports, looking ahead to the time when we will have a Normal School here and will be able to promote contests between the students of the Normal and High School, such as Rowing Contests, etc. Nature has provided this spot of land as the location for a great, large city. We already have a GREAT SMALL city. We already have the best schools in the state. Let's boost clean athletics along with the Manual Training, Cooking and other branches of our school system. This is only a forerunner of a series of "Boosts" for Thief River Falls. A BOOSTING CITY IN A BOOSTING COUNTY AND BOOSTED BY THE BOOSTERS. Let us begin right here to boost two things, "A NORMAL SCHOOL AND A CITY HOSPITAL."

JOHN GORDON.

T. P. HAMRE,
Mayor.

W. SMITH,
Referee.

G. HALVORSON,
Manager.

A Famous Parlor Maid.

Sydney Smith, the famous author and wit, in describing his early married life in a Yorkshire parsonage told how he made a butler out of a village girl:

"A manservant was too expensive, so I caught up a little garden girl made like a milestone, christened her Bunch, put a napkin in her hand and made her my butler. The girls taught her to read, Mrs. Sydney to wait, and I undertook her morals. Bunch became the best butler in the county."

But Bunch was not merely butler—she was valet too. A visitor thus describes her:

"Coming down one morning, I found Bunch pacing up and down the passage before her master's door in a state of great perturbation.

"'What is the matter, Bunch?'

"'Oh, ma'am, I can't get no peace of mind till I've got master shaved, and he's so late this morning!'

"This 'getting master shaved' consisted in making ready for him with a large painter's brush a thick lather in a huge wooden bowl as big as Mambrino's helmet, which she always considered as the most important avocation of the morning."

When the Danes Were Skinned.

In former times the Danes used to sail up the mouths of the English rivers to pillage the churches. When they were caught they were skinned and their skins nailed to the door of the church they attacked. In course of time all the exposed portions would peel off, but that covered by the nail would be protected and thus bear testimony to the cruelty of the ancient Englishmen. In the London College of Surgeons may be seen three specimens of human skin bearing labels such as this: "Portion of human skin said to be that of a Dane from the door of a church at Hadstock, in Essex." A second specimen is from Copford, in Essex, and a third from the north door of Worcester cathedral. Such fragments of sacrilegious Danish hide have been found on doors in Westminster abbey.

Were Kind to Him.

A West Philadelphia man who was severely injured some months ago when his horse took fright at an automobile and bolted, upsetting the carriage, has only recently been released from the hospital. He is well now and in the best of spirits notwithstanding the fact that severe operations were necessary in order to save his life

A few days after he left the hospital a friend asked him if he had been kindly treated.

"Oh, yes!" he said. "Oh, yes, indeed! Considering the fact that they amputated both my feet, removed my collar bone, cut off my left thumb, trepanned my brain, took out a piece of my underjaw and sawed my left hip bone in two, I got along very nicely. They were most kind to what was left of me."—Philadelphia Press.

Beaconsfield the Dandy.

The dandyism Benjamin Disraeli affected in his dress is the subject of many pen pictures in Monypenny's "Life of Beaconsfield." At the age of nineteen he is described as wearing a black velvet suit with ruffles and black stockings with red clocks. A later portrait, in 1830, comes from a friend's diary, which has the following entry:

"March 29.—B. D. to dine with me. He came up Regent street when it was crowded in his blue surtout, a pair of military light blue trousers, black stockings with red stripes and shoes. 'The people,' he said, 'quite made way for me as I passed. It was like the opening of the Red sea, which I now perfectly believe from experience. Even well dressed people stopped to look at me.'"

Haroun-al-Raschid to Charlemagne.

The only sovereign of the time who could compare with Charlemagne was the famous Haroun-al-Raschid who as the head of the Moslem world sent the keys of Jerusalem to the head of the Christian world, besides a striking clock, an ape and an elephant—things which impressed the imagination of those times as typifying that Charlemagne had been invested with the sovranty of Jerusalem and the lordship of the world.—T. A. Cook in "Old Provence."

Where Once a Home Stood.

And what is more melancholy than the old apple trees that linger about the spot where once stood a homestead, but where there is now only a ruined chimney rising out of a grassy and weed grown cellar? They offer their fruit to the wayfarer—apples that are bitter-sweet with the moral of time's vicissitude.—Hawthorne.

Charity.

When thy brother has lost all that he ever had and lies languishing, and even gasping under the utmost extremities of poverty and distress, dost thou think to lick him whole again only with thy tongue?—South.

He Was Generous.

Pallid Clerk—I'm not feeling very well, sir; do you mind if I take things a little easy today?

Grouchy Employer—Not so long as they're not my things.—Lippincott's

Convincing Evidence.

Sportsman (having emptied both barrels at a rabbit)—There, Jacob; I'm sure I hit that one!

Jacob—Well, 'e surtainly did seem to go faster after you shot at 'im, sir.—London Punch.

Economy is a savings bank into which men drop pennies and get dollars in return.—H. W. Shaw.

Tamed Him.

"Slip me a brace of cackles," ordered the chesty looking young man with a bored air as he perched on the first stool in the lunch room.

"A what?" asked the waitress as she placed a glass of water before him.

"Adam and Eve flat on their backs! A pair of sunny siders!" said the young man in an exasperated tone.

"You got me, kid," returned the waitress. "Watcha want?"

"Eggs up," said the young man. "E-g-g-s, the kind that come before the hen or after, I never knew which."

"Why didn't you say so in the first place?" asked the waitress. "You'd 'a' had 'em by this time."

"Well, of all things!" said the young man.

"I knew what he was drivin' at all the time," began the waitress as the young man departed. "But he's one of them fellers that thinks they can get by with anything. He don't know that they're using plain English now in restaurants."—Kansas City Times.

Knew Just How.

Many years ago in Paris at the first presentation of a tragedy that had for its closing scene the murder of a Swedish king which had taken place nearly half a century earlier all went well till the murder scene came on, when a very dignified old gentleman in the stage box showed signs of strong dissatisfaction and at length called out angrily:

"Absurd! They've got it all wrong!"

The manager himself heard this plain spoken comment, and, being naturally disturbed by so sweeping a condemnation, he sought out the critic and politely begged to know what fault he had to find with it.

"Why, my good sir," cried the old man, with an air of authority, "the whole grouping of the scene is incorrect! You have made them kill the king to the right of the door, whereas we murdered him on the left!"

The Tea Chewers.

"Chewing tea comes from Siam," said a traveler. "They call it mieng. It is in a plug, like chewing tobacco, and it has a villainous smell. This smell is due to the fermentation it has undergone. The tea that the Siamese employ for chewing purposes is a very coarse, rank plant. It is gathered like ordinary tea, but the leaves after being compressed into plugs are buried for fifteen days. They ferment during burial. On their resurrection they are very, very fragrant indeed. The Siamese boatmen chew tea. The ricksha men chew it. The litterateurs chew it. They say it makes them work better. This is probably the truth, for I chewed a plug myself in Anam, and it exhilarated me strangely. But the aftermath was bad—a headache, smarting eyes and nervous depression."—Washington Post.

When Tolstoy Tried to Fly.

From earliest childhood Tolstoy was remarkably observant of the things that were going on in the world around him. Thus, while still in his teens, we find him taking an interest in the art of flying that was too practical to suit his devoted mother. With characteristic thoroughness he invented a design of his own and with equally characteristic courage proceeded to put it to an immediate test from a second story window. But the boy, who was afterward to find food for thought for the whole civilized world, was not destined to make his mark as an infant aeroplanist. He fell instantly to the ground, and, though by great good fortune no bones were actually broken, the concussion was so great that young Tolstoy afterward slept for sixteen hours on end.

Joy For Johnny.

Johnny's mother was telling Johnny stories from Bible history. And Johnny for a long time was very silent. At last he sighed and looked up questioningly into his mother's face.

"When I get to heaven shall I know every one?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," answered his mother.

"Napoleon, and Samuel, and George Washington, and Solomon, and—and David?" persisted Johnny.

"Certainly, dear!"

"Well, then, mother, if I'm very good—if I'm ever so good and ask him ever so nicely, do you think that David will let me touch his slingshot—just touch it—once?"—Philadelphia Times

Death.

Death, the dry pedant, spares neither the rose nor the thistle, nor does he forget the solitary blade of grass in the distant waste. He destroys thoroughly and unceasingly. Everywhere we may see how he crushes to dust plants and beasts, men and their works. Even the Egyptian pyramids, that would seem to defy him, are trophies of his power, monuments of decay, graves of primeval kings.—Heinrich Heine.

Pa's Idea.

"What was the trouble at the building of the tower of Babel, pa?"

"I'm not certain, but I think it was between the union and the nonunion workmen."—New York Press

Serious Intentions.

Nellie—Hasn't Mr. Felewalley proposed yet? Nora—No, but he has gone as far as to ask what time we have breakfast and whether mother is a good cook.—Exchange.

Consolation.

Mrs. Gramercy—My husband is anxious to get rid of me. Mrs. Park—Don't cry, dear. In that case he won't haggle over the alimony.—Smart Set

The management of the Auditorium is making arrangements to care for four large conventions during the coming summer.

The excellent railway facilities enjoyed by this city, makes it the convention town of this section of the state.

This with the best convention hall outside of the large cities makes a strong attraction.

Representative O'Neil from this district, has been appointed to a half dozen or more important committees, and will, as expected, do his full share of the work of law making at the capitol this session.

Mr. O'Neil has lots of energy, determination, and some experience, so the best interests of the district will be carefully looked after.

The State tax commission recommends the appointment of county assessors in the belief that more equitable assessments will be secured.

Eighty-six skilled men would do the work, or supervise that now done by over two thousand, and it would seem to be the better plan. Greater uniformity would surely be secured, and it should be dead easy to improve on the present antiquated method.

Now that the legislature is making laws, as well as trouble, who is going to introduce a bill to amend the law, relating to the payment of road taxes? Everyone knows that the present system is unsatisfactory and accomplishes very little. The payment of one half the present tax in cash, would result in more intellegent work and greater results.

It would also be much more satisfactory to the intellegent farmer, or landowner, who as a matter of course is interested in good roads.

Mr. Iver I. Anseley of this city proposes to do someting in the way of graveling roads.

He has investigated a method of doing this cheaply by the use of traction engines, as it is done in some parts of Iowa, and believes that, especially west of town, the work can be done so cheaply that both the town boards and the county will give their support.

Anything that spells good-roads should have the support of everyone.

SCHOOL NOTES

The school enrollment for the current year to Dec. 31, 1910 was 1066. Of this number about 75 were nonresidents, most of whom were classed as high school students. Since school opened on January 9th, 25 new pupils have entered making the total to date 1091. The usual spring additions of from 40 to 80 will further increase this to at least 1150. And there are still more than a few persons in this city under 18 not in school.

A visit to the high school special departments this week reveals this information: The boys in manual training are making hat-racks, footstools, dining chairs, library tables, wheelbarraws with the wheel to same, towel rollers, etc. The high school cooking classes are making bread, and good bread too; while the 8th grade girls are serving as good pancakes as mother used to make. The sewing classes are taking measurements of class members, drafting patterns, cutting and making useful garments for their own wear. The normal, agriculture and commercial departments are solving problems just as practical. The members of the "short course" are busily engaged with their three months' studies, and the ordinary high school work moves along as usual. The whole machine is working smoothly and without a jar.

The 7th and 8th grade classes are now organized into four rooms and are conducted on the department plan. Each room enrolls about 40 pupils. Miss Porter of Lake Benton is the new teacher in this department and is an instructor of several years of experience. She arrived Monday morning. It might be stated that this is the first year in this city when the total enrollment of the sixth grade has continued through the seventh and eighth. About 37 high school students graduate this year, but almost twice that number will enter from 8th grade.

Some inquiry is made as to what is done with the dishes which the cooking classes prepare. These dishes are of small size to save expense, but curious people should remember that the ordinary girl does not leave herappetite at home when she goes to school. The domestic science teacher is authority for the information, that on Tuesday the aroma of real old fashioned pancakes penetrated the halls of the Lincoln and brought the boys swarming to the kitchen after dismissal like a lot of flies. Nothing is really wasted in the cooking line.

Every child in the grades in this city either drinks out of his own cup or drinks not at all. The water jars are also regularly scalded and an abundance of fresh drinking water is supplied.

Physical exercises are presented to all the children, grades and high, every day, unless the weather permits of intermission in the grades below the seventh.

Dedication of the Lincoln will take place just as soon as the electric lights are in place. This has been stated before, but to satisfy numerous inquiries School Notes will repeat it.

This week closes the first semester and the programs will be rearranged Monday to suit the needs of the students for the second half year.

The state library commission has supplied the departments of agriculture and household economics with useful libraries. These will be retained six months and cost nothing but the expenses on them.

Many visitors are calling at the various rooms this term. They are all heartily welcome and are urged to feel at liberty to enter and leave the rooms without any ceremony. This will conserve the time of teachers and pupils and be more satisfactory to callers.

Sporting News

A wrestling match has just been arranged between Wm. Kline of this city, and John H. Gorden, the well known policeman wrestler of Minneapolis, in which Gorden grees to throw Kline three times in one hour or forfeit the match. This promises to be a very exciting event as Mr. Kline has many friends in this city who feel confident that no man can throw him three times in one hour, with the oe hold barred, while Mr. Gordon confi dent of winning.

The preliminaries will be worth the price of admission; the first of which will be best two in three falls between James Turnbeau and Munson and the second will be five round boxing contest between Dad Newbury and Harry Dobner. Dad promises to put Dobner on the stretcher before the end of the bout and Harry is ready to tell what he will do to the other fellow.

Admission to all events $1, 75c and 50c.

Damaged By Fire.

The local fire department was called out yesterday morning to quelch a fire in the Anton Jensen residence on North LaBree avenue.

The origin of the fire was caused by a defective chimney and the fire was started in the roof.

The fire was gotten under control before a great amount of damage was done to the house and its contents, but half of the kitchen roof was damaged as a result.

A Book Bindery in T. R. F.

I wish to announce that I have established a bookbindery in T. R. F. and I am ready to do any work you want done in that line.

During my stay here I have heard much talk from people who have books at home that are useless and worthless too on account of broken binding. Such books that they want in their libraries if they knew where to get them rebound. It makes no difference how old and worn out your books may be, let me show you what can be done to them. Many people are saving magazines and papers that contains good reading matter have them bound into beautiful books and place them in your library.

My bindery is at present in my home, 704 Main ave. North where you can find me by calling in person or phone 295 and I will be pleased to call on you for your work. Respectfully yours for business.

KANSAS CITY LIKES PLAN

Packingtown Finds Its' Income Increased and Economics Made Astonishingly Easy.

Other Improvements and Advantages Gained By Adopting Form This City Is Now Considering.

Kansas City, Kan., Jan. 16.—Kansas City, Kan., has rounded out her first fiscal year under the commission form of government, and she is well pleased with the showing. She has put herself on a business basis, has increased her income, lopped off unnecessary expenditures, and increased efficiency in public service.

When the commission went in last April, it found about $30,000 in the general fund, and $10,000 in the general improvement fund. It costs $12,000 a month to run the city.

The commission got busy. They reduced the police force from 96 men to 56, and the fire force from 74 to 57, and by furnishing up the departments got just as good protection as was secured under the old regime.

Then they went after the money. They got all the money that was coming to the city. For instance, they got for franchises last year $16,000, whereas on the year before, under the same conditions, the city got but $9,000.

This is the way the collections of last year and the year before look in comparison:

Occupation licenses, 1909, $38,885.14, 1910, $51,450.45; Police court fines, 1909, $6,228.75, 1910, $11,373.70; Dog tax, 1909, $3,084.25, 1910, $6,796.50; Interest on deposits in banks, 1909, $3,688.01, 1910, $10,971.07; Franchises, 1909, $9,000.00, 1910, $16,000.00; Motor car taxes, 1909, $......, 1910, $359.95.

According to the report just submitted to the commissioners this is the way they went about it to collect moneys due the city from franchises:

The franchise given the Kansas City Western Railway Co. required the payment of 2 per cent of each 5c fare originating in Kansas City, Kan. This never had been collected by the city until the current year. The commissioners collected not only for this year, but for all previous years.

Prior to this year the Bell Telephone Co. never paid to the city one cent for the rights granted it under its franchise, the only thing granted the city being eight free telephones. Without granting any additional rights to the company the city now is collecting from the company 2 per cent of its gross receipts and receiving the free use of sixteen telephones. This item amounts to about $5,000 for this year alone.

During the past year the city has laid more pavement than in any other year, and has done it at a lower rate than heretofore. Brick pavement has been reduced from $1.70 per square yard to $1.50, and asphalt from $2.10 to $1.85. Furthermore the city is now building two new fire stations and a new city hall.

Altogether Kansas City, Kan., is well pleased with her experiment in the commission form of municipal government.

Nearly all the states will have competitive exhibits, and those winning prizes will have something worth while.

Canadian officials furnish figures which show that the big rush to Western Canada is not only on the wane, but is largely off set by imigration from that country. They say that during the past year 101,000 persons have moved into Canada from this country, but on the other hand 75,000 have left Western Canada for the United States. The Southwest has caught many of these returning settlers, but the Northern States have received a fair share. Advantages of a better climate, soil and associations are the main factors in bringing our people back.

If advertising doesn't pay, why is it that the most successful merchants of every town, large and small, are the heaviest advertisers? If it does not pay, why do the largest business firms in the world spend millions in that way? Is it because they want to donate these millions to newspaper and magazine publishers, or because they don't know as much about business as the six for-a dollar merchant, who says money spent for advertising is thrown away or donated to the man to whom it is paid? Such talk is ridiculous and it requires more than the average patience to discuss the proposition of whether advertising pays or not with that kind of a man.

A story is going the rounds that a certain woman in Blue Earth, who not long ago had occasion to go to Winnebago for a visit for a few days upon arrival there discovered that she had lost her watch, a small affair, which she thought she had dropped on the dining room floor, which was covered with a rug, so she wrote to the hired girl at home as follows: "Let me know if you find anything on the rug in the dining room". A few days later she received a letter from the hired girl saying: Dear Madame:—I was to let you know if I found anything on the dining room rug. This is what I found this morning: Thirteen empty beer bottles, nineteen cigar butts, five cigarette ends, fourteen blue and thirty-one red poker chips thirty-six hundred matches and one pink slipper". The wife hired an auto and was home in just 27 minutes.—Bricelyn Sentinel.

Prof. C. W. Hale, assisted by local instructors, held a farmers' institute in the gymnasium of the Lincoln school yesterday. It was well attended and was the opening meeting of a series of six institutes. The second one will be held on Wednesday, Feb. 1, at 10:30 a. m. at the same place. Mr. Carlson, of Erskine, who is in the emyloy of the College of Agriculture this winter, will have charge. This meeting will be purely a dairy convention and will continue all day. Just at this time the farmers are deeply interested in the subject of creameries, and this opportunity should not be missed by any person desiring to secure greater returns from his cows. The high school gym is an ideal place for these farmers' meetings. It is well lighted, heated and ventilated and has a good rostrum for speaker. The citizens of Thief River Falls are urged to attend at least a portion of the meetings.

The State Prison Reports say: "There are more young men in the penitentiary in this country learning trades than there are outside of them. The principal cause of this is, we are educating our young men for gentlemen, trying to make lawyers, doctors and clerks out of the material nature intended for blacksmiths, carpenters and other hewers of wood and drawers of water. It is a mistake and a big one, to teach boys and girls by insinuation or otherwise, or if labor is necessary for a livelihood to follow a genteel occupation, and that to do nothing for a living is more becoming to the society to which they expect to move and have respect. Hang such society! It is rotten to the core and there are many men's sons and daughters, who are now being educated to play the part of a "leading lady and a walking gentleman" in the great drama of life, who will light out for a poor house or penitentiary before they have played their parts and the curtain drops. Go to work".

Returns From Father's Funeral.

T. P. Hornseth, Pede Hornseth and Mrs. Oscar Williams returned the first of the week from Hector, this state, where they went to attend the funeral of the late P. P. Hornseth, father of the above.

Mr. P. P. Hornseth was a man well known in his locality. He was born Feb. 2, 1837 in Norway. At the age of 30 he came to this country.

Of sturdy Norse lineage and character he did his full share as a pioneer of the State and County in overcoming the difficulties with which the early settlers contended, becoming one of the substantial citizens of his neighborhood, universally honored by his brother pioneers and later acquaintances.

Burial took place Wednesday, Jan. 11, in the cemetery of the Palmyra Evangelical Lutheran Church, where one son, Richard, already lies. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. P. H. Rogulle, ably assisted by Rev. Austbold, of Helena, Mont.

The honest and upright character of the deceased, together with his strong religious convictions and hearty cooperation in church and charitable work will cause him to be long remembered as one of the foremost of the founders and supporters of the parish in which he resided.

Recognizes Pennington.

Minneapolis Journal: The postoffice department recognizes the newly organized county of Pennington by issuing bulletin No. 1159, which recites the creation of the county and gives the names of the postoffices and mail routes. Several of these offices are only five years old, being located on the Eleven Towns which were a part of the Red Lake Indian reservation until the opening six years ago. This whole territory is prairie and is nearly as thickly settled as like areas in the central sections of the state. Rural delivery routes, star and other mail routes traverse the towns and schools, churches and comfortable homes are seen on every hand. The Washington authorities also call attention to the fact that the county government is located in the court house in Thief River Falls.

Alvin Halseth Passes Away.

Alvin Halseth, son of Mr. and Mrs A. G. Halseth died at the home of his parents on the East Side last Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 after a siege of typhoid fever.

Deceased had been sick from the dread disease since Christmas, and the sad tidings of his demise came as a great shock to all who knew him.

The sorrowing family have the sympathy of the entire community in the loss of their son and brother.

Announcements by the County Superintendent of Schools, Pennington County.

Teachers' examinations that ordinarily would have been held in February have been postponed by order of the state superintendent, and will be held May 4, 5 and 6th.

Teachers holding certificates that expire March 1st, 1911, if they are now engaged in teaching in the county, should write the undersigned County Superintendent at his office in the Auditorium, Thief River Falls, at once so that their certificates may be properly extended to the time of a later examination.

ALL teachers now teaching in the new county of Pennington must file their certificates with the County Superintendent in order to be valid. Please see to this matter at once.

Teachers of schools in the county that are entitled to take state High School examinations, should report at once the number of pupils in their respective schools expecting to take said examinations, in order to provide for the necessary questions. The schools in our County entitled to these examinations are districts No. 25, 29, 37, 54 and No. 154, or any other rural school that may have scholars sufficiently advanced to avail themselves of said examinations.

I will be, until further notice, at my office in the Auditorium at Thief River Falls, on the second and fourth Saturdays of each month. I solicit your inquiries as regards school matters, and will be glad to answer same in person or by correspondence.

Respectfully submitted,
E. A. Mostue,
Co Supt., Pennington Co.

Rosseth—Wold Wedding.

Yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the home of Bernt Wold, on the east side, occurred the marriage of his daughter, Miss Inga Wold to Mr. John Rosseth, of the town of North. The marriage ceremony was performed in the presence of immediate friends and relatives.

The bride has grown to woman-hood in this vicinity and is held in high esteem by all who know her.

The bridegroom has made his residence in this vicinity for some years and has lately had charge of the Tharaldsen farm in the town of North.

The happy couple will leave shortly for Northwood, N. D., where they will make their home on a farm near that place.

Holt.

Christmas has come and passed and with the weather a good deal below the freezing point.

Quite a number of parties was given at C. Heinz's, Carl Ingebretson's, Ole Reierson's and Oscar Hanson's, and all was well arranged at their respective homes.

Julius Olson has spent a week on his claim in Roseau.

E. T. Eide has left for Spooner with his teams. He intends taking contracts in the woods hauling pulp wood and Mr. Eide himself will erect a flour and feed store in Spooner.

The Woodmen held a meeting here last night to install a few new members.

On account of extremely cold weather hay operations have been at a standstill.

Parties desiring hay should see or write Holt parties.

Miss Jennie Johnson has resigned her position at Gunheim's. She intends in a short time to leave for California, where her sister is.

Those who find that the business is dull should take a trip to the lively village of Holt. It is a wonder the amount of business that is done here. The Holt Mercantile company intends to build a good store building here as soon as weather permits, in order to take care of their growing business.

Miss Emma Olson, who is clerking at Carlson's, is at present staying home for a while.

The work of moving the Northwestern Drainage Co.'s dredges and camps is well under way. Only dredge No. 1 is left to be moved.

Some slight changes have been made in the management of the bank here. Mr. B Bakke, the assistant cashier, is now cashier.

H. G. Knutson has rented the Andrew Ness farm and will take possession at once.

S. Strenkrean is back from Middle River in order to attend the Woodmen's meeting.

Notice.

The annual meeting of the Thief River Falls Co-operative Creamery Association will be held at the Antlers Clubrooms on the 4th Saturday of January being the 28th at 1:30 P. M. A free dinner will be served to Creamery patrons on first floor of the same building before meeting.

MAKING A PRIZE STEER.

Not only those who have seen the prize winning steers at the international, but many who read about them, will be interested in the system of feeding which is followed in getting one of these blue ribbon beeves ready for the show ring. The Iowa State college at Ames, which fed and exhibited Shamrock II., the grand champion steer of the 1910 international, has lately made public the following data in regard to this steer and the care which he received. Shamrock was calved Jan. 10, 1910, his sire being a pure bred Angus bull and his dam a high grade Angus cow. He was bought by the agricultural college the latter part of April, 1910, and on May 1, when put on forced feed, weighed 340 pounds. His weights at monthly intervals during the feeding period were: June 1, 462 pounds; July 1, 580; Aug. 1, 700; Sept. 1, 822; Oct. 1, 941; Nov. 1, 1,060, and Nov. 20, 1,130 pounds when he was shipped to Chicago. Beginning May 1 Shamrock was put on a nurse cow, being kept in the barn during the day and allowed the run of a grass lot at night. He was fed in addition all the clover hay he would eat and a grain ration consisting of three parts corn, two parts wheat bran and one part oil meal. This ration was continued up to Sept. 1. From this time on he was given two nurse cows, fed green corn (ears and stalks), clover hay and roots, while the grain ration was changed to boiled wheat and oats. During the last twenty days of the feeding period his daily ration consisted of from nine to eleven pounds of cooked feed, twenty-five pounds of roots and five pounds of clover hay, besides the milk from two cows. The excellence of the care given the animal is shown in the fact that he did not miss a feed from May 1 to the close of the feeding period. Shamrock II. was sold at auction at the close of the show to Chicago butchers, bringing 60 cents per pound, or $672 for his total weight of 1,120 pounds.

SAMPLE DAIRY RATIONS.

There is probably no other state agricultural college in the country that has so large a number of pure bred dairy cows of different breeds of large butter capacity as that of Missouri; hence some of the suggestions contained in bulletin No. 44, recently issued, will be received with interest by dairymen.

Along the line of general rules the following are laid down: (1) Feed all the roughage the cows will eat up at all times; (2) feed one pound of grain per day for each pound of butter fat produced per week or one pound of grain per day for each three pounds of milk produced daily; (3) feed all the cows will take without gaining in weight. Clover and alfalfa should constitute a part of the roughage, if possible, but in case they are not to be had their place in the bill of fare should be substituted by oil or cottonseed meal and bran. Where possible the ration should be varied with silage and roots—turnips, carrots or beets. The bulletin recommends the following sample rations for cows giving from twenty to twenty-five pounds of milk daily: Ration 1—Corn silage, twenty-five pounds; clover hay, ten pounds; corn, four pounds; bran, four pounds. Ration 2—Corn silage, thirty pounds; alfalfa or cowpea hay, ten pounds; corn, six pounds; bran, two pounds. Ration 3—Clover hay, twenty pounds; corn, four to five pounds; bran or oats, two to four pounds. Ration 4—Clover hay, twenty pounds; corn and cob meal, five to seven pounds; gluten or cottonseed meal, two pounds. Ration 5—Alfalfa or cowpea hay, ten pounds; corn fodder, ten pounds; corn, five to seven pounds; bran, two pounds. Ration 6—Alfalfa or cowpea hay, fifteen to twenty pounds; corn, eight to ten pounds.

CARE OF THE BROOD SOW.

The health and vigor of the little pigs which will be coming on during the late winter and early spring will depend more largely upon the care which is given the brood sow between now and farrowing time than upon any other single factor. By care is meant chiefly the bill of fare which they receive. Corn is excellent for fitting a lard hog for market, but it comes a long way from filling the bill as a sole ration for the brood sow. A ration which will make bone and muscle is what is wanted, and this will contain only part corn. If corn and oats are the most available feeds an excellent ration is made by mixing these two grains half and half and adding to nine or ten parts of the mixture one of tankage or oilmeal. Skimmilk and buttermilk are excellent flesh formers, as are also clover and alfalfa hay. In addition to having a suitable ration the brood sows should have opportunity for exercise and dry and snug yet well ventilated quarters in which to sleep.

With the manure spreader costing from $90 to $125, depending upon make and capacity, every farm on which an attempt is made to follow agriculture intelligently and effectively should have one. The question is not whether one can afford to buy one, but, rather, whether he can afford to be without one.

The young fruit tree should be pruned during the winter or early spring months if the object is the encouragement of wood growth and the building of a proper frame. If the trees are old enough to bear and one wishes to induce such a result the pruning should be deferred until midsummer, preferably during the month of July.

While there is some evidence tending to show that silage fed steers do not possess quite as firm flesh as those dry fed on hay or corn fodder, there is at the same time no evidence tending to show that a silage fed steer brings any less when fitted for market than one given the dry feed. This is a question that may have arisen in the minds of many who are about to build silos for dairy and stock feeding purposes.

Now and then a wooden silo blows over during summer storms when it is empty. The other day a big cement block silo at one of the Illinois state institutions which was being filled with silage split and collapsed because the structure was not re-enforced at intervals with steel girders or rods of some description. The loss sustained in the last instance was about $1,000, covering the damage to silo and loss of silage, but it furnishes a valuable object lesson in silo construction.

We have attended more than one farmers' institute where men were present who were very successful in their special lines and chock full of good ideas, but who through modesty or embarrassment when on their feet wouldn't volunteer a sentence. To elicit information from just such fellows as these there should be a concerted effort on the part of those in charge of the sessions by making a list of the bashful farmers and putting such questions to them as would bring out the desired information. Men of this type will answer questions without much embarrassment who would be scared stiff if they were to get on their feet and speak voluntarily.

Some "short cuts" are commendable; then, again, others are not. We ran across an instance of the latter kind the other day. It had to do with a young fellow who seemed to be discouraging in himself the inclination to honest toil. He thought he would try his hand at a short cut, so intercepted a nine dollar money order, forged it, and at the present writing he is in a nearby jail awaiting action by the grand jury. His youthfulness may lead the authorities to consent to a compromise; otherwise he is likely to do two or three years in the pen. It's a mighty rocky road this young fellow is setting out on. The "short cut" he counted on bids fair to be much longer and much more difficult than he thought.

During a season when typhoid fever seems to be more prevalent than for many years it is worth while repeating some of the precautions given in these notes some months ago. The chief sources of infection are through food and liquids taken into the system, and of these the most prolific are drinking water, milk and oysters which come from beds where city sewage is dumped. The only way to be on the safe side is to boil all water and milk used and to thoroughly cook oysters and any other article of food that might contain the germs. Another precaution of equal importance where there is a typhoid patient in the house is the use of the utmost care in disinfecting all of the patient's sputa, excreta and urine. These are not pleasant things to talk about, but many a life has been lost from this scourge through lack of proper attention to these simple precautions.

The writer has had occasion of late to make inquiry into the rating of some young men who have been desirous of securing loans of banking houses, and it is interesting as well as instructive to note some of the factors which the average banker takes into account before extending a loan. Among these may be mentioned the amount of money which the prospective borrower has saved—in other words, his present financial status. Another and very important consideration linked with the above and determining it, is the habit which one has acquired in the handling of his earnings, whether saving them or spending them carelessly without a thought of the future. Another is the habits which the prospective borrower has acquired along the line of steadiness, push and promptness in meeting obligations assumed. It is due to these and other reasons why one man can get an accommodation at a bank and others cannot, and it is a pity that more young men do not realize the fact early in their career when the acquiring of habits of industry and thrift will mean ultimately success or failure in a business way. The lack in such fellows is that they have little ambition to be anything and have nothing in the future toward which they are working energetically and with a well defined purpose.

Minnesota Superintendent of Banks Files His Report.

J. B. Gafernault, state superintendent of banks, has filed his annual report with Governor Eberhart. The report covers a great variety of subjects and makes many recommendations of sweeping changes in the laws.

The superintendent of banks, he believes, should be given discretion by law to grant or refuse applications for charters for state banks. There is a craze for the establishment of such banks, he says, often where there is no demand for them. He thinks the department should have authority to investigate local conditions and act accordingly, the same as the federal controller of the currency enjoys, and thus prevent the establishment of too many banks.

RULING OF SUPREME COURT

City of Mankato Must Defend Impure Water Suits.

The city of Mankato cannot avoid prosecution for personal damages brought by administrators of estates of persons alleged to have died of typhoid fever brought on by drinking the contaminated water supplied by that city.

The state supreme court reverses the lower court in sustaining demurrers to the complaints of Della Keever and Kate Flanagan, administratrixes.

The supreme court holds that the municipality can be held accountable for negligence in permitting its water supply to become contaminated sufficiently to cause sickness and death. Both cases go back for trial in the district court.

BUSINESS SECTION BURNED

Fire at Madison Lake, Minn., Causes Loss of $100,000.

Fire which started in the general store of J. J. Brown at Madison Lake caused a loss estimated at $100,000 and wiped out practically all of the business district of the town.

A hand pump operated by a volunteer fire department was the only local means of fighting the fire and though valiant work was done a high wind drove the flames onward and the reservoirs went dry. Help was asked of Mankato and help was sent by that city. However, an engine which Elysian agreed to send did not arrive until the fire had swept both sides of the main business street.

LAWLESSNESS IS RAMPANT

Minneapolis Grand Jury Condemns Existing Conditions.

The Hennepin county grand jury, unable to obtain proof of police graft in the city of Minneapolis, but convinced that police protection has been given resort proprietors and blind piggers, adjourned after making one of the most sweeping reports on municipal conditions ever filed by the grand jury in the county. Reporting "deplorable conditions of lawlessness and vice" the grand jury charges perjury before it and makes several drastic recommendations for remedying municipal conditions. The discharge of several police officials is one of the recommendations made.

SHERK SETTLES PROMISE SUIT

Miss Coughlin's Action Dropped Before Jury Is Empaneled.

A big package of letters, photographs and gifts exchanged hands in district court at Mankato when the $50,000 suit of Miss Agnes Coughlin of Minneapolis against Thomas A. Sherk, a wealthy retired Mankato grocer, for alleged breach of promise to marry, was settled just before the empaneling of a jury was to begin. Miss Coughlin was on hand with her witnesses and attorneys and a large crowd had assembled to hear the testimony.

FATAL END TO A FIST FIGHT

One Dead and One Injured in Brawl in Duluth Hotel.

One man is dead and another may die as the result of a fist fight on the "Bowery" at Duluth.

Jorgen Hendrickson of Christiania, Norway, is the dead man. The name of the other victim is unknown. As he delivered the fatal blow he reeled from a stroke of Hendrickson's fist and fell down a stairway, receiving injuries about the head from which he is unconscious.

Nothing was known by other persons in the hotel of the cause of the fight.

It is as often true of farm animals as of human beings that where there is lack in the matter of shelter there is also carelessness in respect to the bill of fare.

If the hens are not where they have access to it or its equivalent, throw them a bunch of that fragrant alfalfa or clover hay and see how greedily they will go after it.

For the dairyman a pretty good New Year's resolution is the determination to weed out all cows that do not pay for their keep and to pull no teats whose yield of milk does not make the operation a paying one.

Quite naturally conditions which have to do with the comfort of the poultry or farm animals directly affect their health and because of this their ability to produce eggs, milk or meat. In spite of the direct connection in cause and effect, the importance of proper conditions are too often overlooked or ignored.

It Looked Suspicious.

"As I was coming out of a store this evening I saw an amusing sight," said a shopper. "A light rain was falling, and as the woman in front of me stepped out she opened her umbrella. Out of it fell a jeweled hatpin, a pair of gloves and two men's handkerchiefs. On its face it seemed like a case of shoplifting, but as she gathered up the articles the woman said:

"Well, if here isn't Mary's emerald hatpin and the gloves I was looking for last week and two of George's best handkerchiefs. I never thought of looking in the umbrellas for them."—New York Sun

Got His Reply.

A funny man indulged in a practical joke recently. He put an advertisement in a paper for a wife and requested each candidate to inclose her carte de visite. It was a foolish thing to do, but one of the candidates served him out very well by sending the following letter: "Sir—I do not inclose my carte, for, though there is some authority for putting a cart before a horse, I know of none for putting one before an ass."

GLOTFELTER HEADS STATE FAIR

Underwood Defeated for Presidency of State Agricultural Society—Member Dies Suddenly at Meeting.

J. M. Underwood, president of the Minnesota State Agricultural society for 1910, was defeated by the "old guard," who slipped in C. W. Glotfelter of Waterville, practically a new man to the fair. He won out with 169 votes against Underwood's 123½.

Yet to the excitement of the campaign, which was more pronounced and more enthusiastic than the memorable fight in St. Paul last year, a decidedly dramatic touch was added when death stalked the hall in Minneapolis and struck down C. B. Clark, a life member of the association. Scarcely ten minutes before he had made a ringing speech paying tribute to the work of Mr. Underwood in seconding the nomination and urged that no change be made from an experienced man to one who was inexperienced. He did not live to hear the words of Teller W. A. Nolan, pronouncing Mr. Underwood's defeat. The excitement acted on Mr. Clark's heart and he swooned, death coming a few moments later in an outside corridor. The other officers chosen are:

First vice president, E. J. Stillwell, Minneapolis; second vice president, Reuben Warner, Jr., St. Paul; board of managers, Robert Crickmore, Owatonna; C. P. Craig, Duluth; F. W. Murphy, Wheaton; Thomas Canfield, Lake Park; George Atchison, Mankato; W. W. Sivright, Hutchinson.

MINNESOTA CITIES' GROWTH

Census Figures Announced for Those in Excess of 5,000.

The director of the census has announced the population of the following cities and villages in the state of Minnesota having a population in excess of 5,000, as shown by an official count of the returns of the thirteenth census:

City.	1910.	1900.
Albert Lea	6,192	4,500

THREE CHILDREN PERISH

Fire Destroys Their Home at Knife River, Minn.

Three little daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Bubee, aged one, four and six years, perished in their burning home at Knife River, twenty miles northeast of Duluth, having been locked in and being unable to escape.

Mrs. Bubee had gone to a neighbor's house to get some milk. While she was absent the gasoline stove in the kitchen exploded. She had locked the children in to prevent them from straying from home and when she saw the house afire it was too late to save their lives.

The infant was entirely consumed and the two other children were burned to a crisp.

FEDERAL LAND SUITS FILED

Action Taken to Recover Property for Indians.

Announcement was made at the department of justice at Washington of the filing of nearly 700 bills in equity in the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota to recover several thousand acres of valuable timber in the White Earth reservation.

According to the statement issued at the department white speculators have attempted to deprive the Indians of this land and while some of the land is actually in possession of persons who have no legal right to it the officials are hopeful of being able to recover for the Chippewas in every case.

Heads State Board of Health.

Dr. W. A. Jones of Minneapolis was elected president of the state board of health at the annual meeting of that body at the state capitol at St. Paul. He has been vice president of the board and takes the place made vacant by the death of Dr. Henry Hutchinson of St. Paul.

Minnesota Man Burned to Death.

John Lasey, for years a resident of Chatfield, was cremated in his home which burned to the ground at an early hour in the morning. Mr. Lasey had lived alone for the last three months, his family having moved to Montana. He was sixty years old.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

What is considered the largest settlement ever made in a personal injury case in the Ramsey county court was filed in the action brought by Carlton F. Stetson against the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad company. The settlement was for $17,500. The action was brought by Stetson's father to recover $25,000 for injuries alleged to have been sustained by his son while working as a switchman at Milwaukee.

Bishop P. R. Heffron has announced his acceptance of the offer of the Winona board of trade for a site of 120 acres at the western outskirts of the city upon which to erect his $300,000 Catholic boys' college. The announcement will bring to a close the rivalry between Southern Minnesota cities which have been seeking the institution.

Embalmed eggs, embalmed beef, frozen pork, frosted chickens and all other foodstuffs in cold storage will be labeled hereafter, if the bill introduced in the senate by Fosseen of Hennepin is enacted into law.

Total losses from 1910 fires in Minneapolis were $1,864,598, as shown by the fire patrol report of the board of underwriters. Insurance in force on the property involved was $10,340,602.

C. N. Cosgrove, secretary of the state fair board of managers, announced his withdrawal from the contest for re-election. Lyman D. Baird of Austin will probably succeed him.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

H. W. Armstrong, a resident of Minneapolis for fifty-five years and a pioneer fuel dealer, is dead. He was born in Boston in 1829 and reached Minneapolis with his brother, John Armstrong, in 1856, from New England and has resided there ever since. His brother was one of the early day sheriffs of Hennepin county. In the early days he was closely associated with James J. Hill and they always remained staunch friends.

Former Judge James J. Egan, one of St. Paul's earliest settlers, is dead. Mr. Egan reached St. Paul from New York in 1857. He was then but a boy. On the outbreak of the Sioux Indians he was one of those who took up arms in defense of the white settlements and was one of the very few survivors of the battle of Birch Coolie. He also served in the Civil war as a lieutenant in the First Minnesota heavy artillery.

James Hart, aged eighty-three, one of the earliest settlers in Kandiyohi county, is dead at Spicer. He was born in Ireland and reached Kandiyohi county in 1863. Hart was the man who carried the news of the Indian outbreak at Acton to the Green Lake settlers from the Harrison settlement, thereby giving them a chance to escape to safety.

Mrs. Emma Gilson Crosby, wife of the late John Crosby, one of the best known and earliest settlers of Minnesota, is dead at Minneapolis in the sixty-ninth year of her age. Mrs. Crosby was one of the best known and most universally and genuinely beloved among the older women of Minneapolis.

Rev. T. Rosholt, the oldest pastor in point of service in the northern part of the state, died at his home in the town of Norwegian Grove, Otter Tail county, after a long illness of Brights disease and other complications. He was born in Waupaca county, Wis., and was sixty-five years of age.

Word has been received at Winona of the death at Orion, Mich., of Samuel J. Tomlinson, who was once part owner of the Winona Herald. Mr. Tomlinson spent a large part of his life in newspaper work. He was also a mine owner and lumberman.

Mrs. John Orton is dead of pneumonia at the home of her daughter in St. Cloud. She was a settler of Minnesota in territorial days, having reached Elk River from New York state with her husband fifty-five years ago.

Mrs. Anton Kaus, one of the first settlers of Fergus Falls, is dead at the advanced age of ninety-two.

Rufus A. Converse, sixty-three years old, a resident of Minneapolis fifty-four years, is dead.

Mrs. Angeline Montour, St. Paul pioneer, is dead, aged ninety-six.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Arthur Mahlum, aged thirteen, is dead in a Duluth hospital as a result of a bullet wound received Oct. 16 last. Clifford Bijould, aged thirteen, fired the shot from a 22 caliber rifle. He did not know the weapon was loaded. The bullet entered Mahlum's left side, passed through the lung just below the heart.

Mrs. Swan Anderson of Amor, Otter Tail county, was burned to death in her home. She had been living alone and her son-in-law, Charles Erickson, built up a fire for her in the morning. She apparently arose and stood over it and her clothing caught fire. She died an hour later.

Playing "Injun" at his home in St. Paul, Stewart Cohen, twelve years old, aimed a supposedly empty rifle at his brother Milton, three years his junior. It was discharged and the younger lad died a few moments later in his mother's arms. The bullet pierced his heart.

AMERICA GETS FEW PRIZES

Foreign Countries Secure Majority of Honors From Nobel Committee—Ski Jumping the National Sport for Norwegians of All Ages—Charges of Graft in Connection With Denmark's Petroleum Business.

SWEDEN.

The Nobel committee, which has its home in Stockholm, Sweden, comes in for a little criticism, although in a distinctively mild nature, from the following editorial which appeared in a recent number of the Lutheran (Philadelphia): "It is not very flattering to our American pride that nearly all the honors for distinguished work done in the fields of medicine, physics, chemistry, literature and peace should go to other nations than our own. Thus far fifty-six prizes have been awarded by the Nobel committee to individuals, the racial distribution of which is as follows: Germany, 15; France, 10; England, 7; Holland, Russia, Italy and Switzerland, each 4; Sweden, 3; Denmark, Spain and the United States, each 2; Austria, Belgium and Norway, each 1. This speaks well for Germany, the land of science, and well for such small countries as Holland, Switzerland and Sweden. France is also in the forefront. The United States, with its more than 100,000,000 population and its wealthy universities, should have won no less than 100 prizes, in proportion to its size, to be in the same class with such little countries as Holland and Switzerland. What is wrong? Has the prize committee been prejudiced against us? Hardly, we should think; for it seems to be governed by rules eminently fair. Are Americans less gifted than the Dutch and Swiss? That is not at all likely. The real truth seems to be, Americans are attempting too many things, and the Hollanders, the Swiss, and also the Germans are attempting much in one thing, and have the industry and singleness of purpose to do it well. Americans are busy making fortunes and spending them; Europeans have time for other things."

The Chicago press makes appreciative mention of "Reveries and Other Poems" by Gottfried Hult, issued by the Putnams. Professor Hult is the son of the Rev. A. Hult of the Augustana synod. After some years at Gustavus Adolphus college, St. Peter, Minn., he attended the University of Minnesota and graduated there. He now occupies the chair of Greek literature in the University of North Dakota. From his student days on he has been a singer of lullabies and now of graver themes. Richard Burton in The Bellman says: "He has made a finely sincere attempt to spiritualize modern doubts as he broods on the eternal mystery and his utterance is wide in sweep, boldly imaginative in expression and often musical in the extreme." He has fulfilled the promise of his earlier days and has the good opinion of Richard Watson Gilder. He is classed with Sidney Lanier, Sill and Francis Thompson. He is Tennysonian in his nice ear for the music of words and, we might say, Greek in his conception of nature and the universe. Is he not the first Scandinavian to venture into the realm of American literature?

The official figures, based on statistics, show that the population in Stockholm has been decreasing instead of gaining recently. During the last ten months of last year there were 2,497 persons who left the city. There were during this period 6,596 births and there were also 10,617 persons who moved into the city, but there were, on the other hand, 4,338 persons who died and the number of people who left the city were, all told, 15,272, showing that the actual decrease in population amounted to 2,497.

From Jan. 1 last year until Nov. 1 of the same year the Swedish government had an excellent income from the revenue on whisky, sugar, malt and railroads, amounting in round numbers to at least 110,098,557.07 crowns, whereas during the same period last year the total revenue was only 94,070,949.39 crowns.

NORWAY.

Every nation has its pastimes, but it is only in particular countries that some one sport becomes distinctly national in its character. In America baseball is the national game. In Scandinavia, especially Norway, ski running is a pursuit in which almost every one engages. At five years of age the little Norwegian is first put upon skis and long before he has attained his full growth he uses them as naturally as he wears his shoes. The use of the ski among the country people of Norway is so ancient as to have left no clear trace of its origin. It extends over so wide a region, from Norway to Finland, that it is not surprising to find the form of the wooden runner varying considerably in different localities. In N[illegible]naments, really jumping contests, take place early in February in different parts of the country successively, culminating in the great event at Holmenkollen, on the mountain overlooking Christiania. The competitors are all amateurs and the only prizes awarded are simple souvenirs. The Norwegian record is held by a jump of forty-two meters, or nearly 138 feet, down the slope. Measured back on a level to the so called "take off" the distance covered by a well trained ski runner in one of these high jumps is 125 feet, with a drop of about sixty-five feet. The annual Holmenkollen ski tournament will be held next month at Holmenkollen and there will be hundreds of visitors from foreign countries, who will come to see the remarkable ski jumping contests.

The 100th anniversary of Historian Munch was observed at the Christiania university Dec. 15 in the presence of a large number of students, professors and other distinguished men of letters from different cities and communities throughout the country. Professor Yngvar Nielsen delivered an excellent address, in which he dwelt at length upon the historical works that were presented the nation through the efforts of Munch. The speaker also stated that a suitable statue of the historian would be erected on the university campus at no distant date. The university male chorus was present and sang a number of songs appropriate for the occasion.

Religiously divided into about a dozen organizations the Scandinavians of Milwaukee have, through their representative citizens, become united into one social organization entitled "the Scandinavian club," of which the Norwegian consul, Olaf I. Rove, is president. There is a Swedish and a Danish vice president. About forty prominent physicians, business men, clergymen, etc., constitute the charter membership. A room in the center of the city has been fitted up in Viking style, where the flags of the three nations hang lovingly side by side in a unity which we hope may never be marred.

Bishop Bang will leave for Paris next spring for the purpose of establishing a Norwegian Lutheran congregation in that city. The Norwegians have, even since the dissolution of the union, been worshipping with the Swedish colonists in Paris and have practically since that time not had any Norwegian services. The Norwegians of Paris therefore look forward to the time when they will have a church and pastor of their own. The storthing will undoubtedly make a substantial donation for the new church building in Paris.

Christiania will, in the near future, have not less than three new public school buildings. The Bjolsen school is to be completely rebuilt at an expenditure of 200,000 crowns and there will be a new school erected on Fougstads street and another at Daelingen, the erection of each entailing an expenditure of at least 250,000 crowns each.

For the continued restoration of the Trondhjem cathedral the storthing will likely make an appropriation of 85,000 crowns for the year 1911. When the restoration of this famous cathedral shall have been completed it will entail the expenditure of several million crowns. The end of the work of restoration is not yet in sight.

Puccini's opera, "La Tosca," has been drawing large audiences at the Central theater recently. The leading roles are carried by Madame Skarseth and Hedenmark and Endregaard. Concertmeister Voss is leading the orchestra.

The storthing's budget for the year 1911 exceeds 4,000,000 crowns. The minister of finance still expresses the hope that the government will be able to meet the expenditures without levying any extra taxes.

Professor Birkeland wants a substantial appropriation from the storthing for the erection of a meteorological observatory on the Haaldeffjeldet near Kaafjord.

DENMARK.

That there is plenty of graft in Denmark, too, can best be evinced by the recent action of the Danish Petroleum company. Its capital is 4,000,000 crowns, but the dividends in capital stock this year amount to at least 6,500,000 crowns. In order to secure cheaper petroleum the tariff on it has been lowered by a special act of the folkething. It is now claimed that several of the leading stockholders have been lining their pockets with thousands of crowns and the innocent public has not been aware of what has been going on at all.

Professor Johannes Jorgensen has been appointed professor of political economy at Copenhagen university. He is only a young man, being thirty-seven years old, but is nevertheless regarded as one of the best authorities on the aforementioned subject in the country. This appointment has met general satisfaction all over the country and in young Professor Jorgensen the university has received an acquisition to its already splendid force of learned men that augurs well for the future.

Gunnar Kruger, whose death was announced in the Copenhagen papers some time ago, turned up the other day and treated his relatives to a surprise that they were not looking for. They in turn had commenced to speculate on how to divide his property to the best advantage, but this was soon put a stop to when Brother Kruger had time to prove that he was still in the land of the living.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

Cut off from escape by flames which barred the exit from the house three little children, Gladys Roth, three years old; Andrew Roth, Jr., two years old, and Evelyn Roth, one year old, were burned to death in a fire which destroyed the cottage of Andrew Roth at Minneapolis. Mrs. Roth, the twenty-three-year-old mother of the babies, is in the city hospital in a serious condition as the result of an heroic attempt to rescue the children from the flames.

Three young women missing, four persons severely burned and about a dozen girls more or less seriously burned, represent the known casualties attending an explosion and fire which destroyed McCrory's Five and Ten-Cent store at Connelsville, Pa. with a property loss of about $75,000.

Seventeen men were drowned in a wreck of three barges of the Reading railroad off Provincetown, Mass., according to officers of the three life saving crews that made a frantic effort to reach them. They declare there were seven men on one barge and five on each of the other two.

In a collision between train No. 49, the Boston and Buffalo special, and train No. 23 on the New York Central railroad at Batavia, N. Y., four persons were killed and eighteen seriously injured, some of them perhaps fatally.

Fire of unknown origin, which started in the annex of the Iowa Central roundhouse at Marshalltown, Ia., completely destroyed the twenty-two stall building and most of the locomotives in it. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

Entailing a loss of more than $1 000 Cincinnati sustained its second great fire within three weeks when the Chamber of Commerce building was destroyed. A dozen firemen were injured.

Four persons were killed and three perhaps fatally injured in the explosion of the gas plant in a hotel at Niobrara, Neb.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

An injunction restraining W. E. Johnson, special agent of the bureau of Indian affairs, from interfering with the liquor traffic under the provisions of the Indian cession treaty of 1855, was issued by Judge Willard of the United States circuit court at Minneapolis. The reasons given for the decision are sweeping in their character. If the decision holds there will be no more of the "federal Indian liquor lid" in Minnesota outside of the limits of the actual Indian reservations.

The efforts of the indicted Chicago meat packers to have criminal prosecution against them nullified on the ground that the government has elected to proceed by injunction and the only course open is to cite them for contempt of court, came to nothing when Judge Carpenter of the United States district court at Chicago denied the motion of the packers and ordered a stay of ten days in which to enter further motions before pleading to the indictments.

Splashed with the traditional bottle of champagne the battleship Arkansas, the largest warship ever constructed in this country, was launched from the yards of the New York Shipbuilding company at Camden, N. Chinaman Murdered.

The body of Sing Kee, a Chinese laundryman of Minneapolis, was found in the drying room of the laundry. He had been bound, gagged and choked to death with a garrote made of unwashed linen and it is believed that robbery was the sole incentive to the murder.

Mark Twain's Burlesque of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes.

IT SHOCKED THE IMMORTALS.

W. D. Howells' Description of the Dismal Effect of the Humorist's Attempt to Make Game of the Dignified Literary Trio at the Boston Dinner.

In his memories of Mark Twain in Harper's W. D. Howells tells of the dinner in Boston when Mark Twain, with fatal effect, made game of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes:

"He believed he had been particularly fortunate in his notion for the speech of that evening, and he had worked it out in joyous self reliance. It was the notion of three tramps, three deadbeats, visiting a California mining camp and imposing themselves upon the innocent miners as respectively Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Oliver Wendell Holmes. The humor of the conception must prosper or must fail according to the mood of the hearer, but Clemens felt sure of compelling this to sympathy, and he looked forward to an unparalleled triumph.

"But there were two things that he had not taken into account. One was the species of religious veneration in which these men were held by those nearest them. They were men of extraordinary dignity, of the thing called presence for want of some clearer word, so that no one could well approach them in a personally light or trifling spirit. I do not suppose that anybody more truly valued them or more piously loved them than Clemens himself, but the intoxication of his fancy carried him beyond the bounds of that regard and emboldened him to the other thing which he had not taken into account—namely, the immense hazard of working his fancy out before their faces and expecting them to enter into the delight of it. If neither Emerson nor Longfellow nor Holmes had been there the scheme might possibly have carried, but even this is doubtful.

"I was the hapless president, fulfilling the abhorred function of calling people to their feet and making them speak. When I came to Clemens I introduced him with the cordial admiration I had for him as one of my greatest contributors and dearest friends. Here, I said, in sum, was a humorist who never left you hanging your head for having enjoyed his joke, and then the amazing mistake, the bewildering blunder, the cruel catastrophe was upon us. I believe that after the scope of the burlesque made itself clear there was no one there, including the burlesquer himself, who was not smitten with a desolating dismay. There fell a silence, weighing many tons to the square inch, which deepened from moment to moment and was broken only by the hysterical and blood curdling laughter of a single guest, whose name shall not be handed down to infamy. Nobody knew whether to look at the speaker or down at his plate. I chose my plate as the least affliction, and so I do not know how Clemens looked, except when I stole a glance at him and saw him standing solitary amid his appalled and appalling listeners, with his joke dead on his hands. From a first glance at the great three whom his jest had made its theme, I was aware of Longfellow sitting upright and regarding the humorist with an air of pensive puzzle, of Holmes busily writing on his menu with a well feigned effect of preoccupation, and of Emerson holding his elbows and listening with a sort of Jovian oblivion of this nether world in that lapse of memory which saved him in those later years from so much bother. Clemens must have dragged his joke to the climax and left it there, but I cannot say this from any sense of the fact. Of what happened afterward at the table where the immense, the wholly innocent, the truly unimagined affront was offered, I have no longer the least remembrance. I next remember being in a room of the hotel where Clemens was not to sleep, but to toss in despair and Charles Dudley Warner's saying in the gloom, 'Well, Mark! You're a funny fellow.' It was as well as anything he could have said, but Clemens seemed unable to accept the tribute.

"I stayed the night with him, and the next morning after a haggard breakfast we drove about, and he made some purchases of bric-a-brac for his house in Hartford; with a soul as far away from bric-a-brac as ever the soul of man was. He went home by an early train, and he lost no time in writing back to the three divine personalities which he had so involuntarily [illegible]. They all wrote back to him, making it as light for him as they could. I have heard that Emerson was a good deal mystified and in [illegible] 'Who was [illegible] who appeared to think he had offered him some sort of [illegible]?' But I am not sure that [illegible]. What I am sure of [illegible] a few days after [illegible] stepped before a photograph of Clemens and said 'Ah, he is a [illegible] a thing more. Holmes [illegible] deep emotion, such as a [illegible] might well feel, that he [illegible] an instant in replying to Clemens' letter and assuring [illegible] been the least [illegible] him never to think of the matter again. 'He said that he was a fool, but he was God's fool.' Holmes [illegible] the letter with a true sense of the pathos and humor of the self abasement."

Sensitive to Art.

Said the art gallery guide, "Just watch the crowd awhile and see which of their antics impresses you most."

Presently the visitor said, "I think it is the queer attitudes so many of them strike."

"Exactly," said the guide. "They are imitating the poses of the figures in the portraits. Anybody who sits for a portrait is supposed to strike a graceful attitude. All these people who have never been painted realize the grace there is in the poise of the head, the turn of the wrist, the slope of the shoulders. They wish they could look like that, and unconsciously they try it. The men are as bad as the women. They straighten up; they droop; they tilt their heads; they arrange their hands and feet in imitation of the figures they admire most. Sometimes their attempts are very clever; again they are simply ridiculous."—New York Times.

The Waiting Championship.

An Atchison woman who looks for good in everything is glad she married. "It has taught me patience," she said. When a girl she flew into a temper if she had to wait five minutes for something she wanted, but now she waits and waits and waits and says nothing. She waited nine years for her new front porch, six years for her husband to take her to the theater and eleven years for him voluntarily, when there was no company around, to offer her a rocking chair. "This," she said recently to a friend who heard she was sitting up half the night waiting for her husband to come home, "is nothing. I can wait longer and say less about it than any woman who ever lived. I am glad I married; otherwise I could never claim the waiting championship belt."—Atchison Globe.

Work of the Beavers.

The formation of the plateau on which Dubois is built is a matter of great curiosity. Beavers are responsible for it. Long before the white men saw that section of Pennsylvania beavers built a huge dam in a well set valley. Year by year the stream washed rich mud into the dam, and when the body of water was destroyed 640 acres of land flat as a table top were left. On this stands Dubois.—Altoona Tribune.

His Hardships.

"I suppose," said the kind lady as she handed the husky hobo a generous wedge of apple pie, "that your lot is full of harships?"

"Dat's de proper word fer it, ma'am," replied the h. h. "In de winter w'en de farmers ain't doin' nothin' but eatin' apples an' drinkin' hard cider it's too cold fer me to be trampin' aroun', an' in de summer people's allers offer in' me work."—Chicago News.

Extravagant Economy.

Economy often consists in doing without something you want now in order to get something you don't want in the future.—Atlanta Journal. preferable because they kill the ant at once. Of poisons which have been used strychnia sulphate is the most effective and is made as follows; Dissolve an ounce of the poison in a quart of boiling water and add a quart of thick sugar sirup, mixing thoroughly. This amount is enough to poison thirty-five pounds of barley or wheat or thirty pounds of green alfalfa. If the latter is used more water is added. When the bait has been prepared it can be inserted into the gopher tunnels through holes made with a spade handle shod with a metal point and having a metal bar for the foot about fifteen inches from the point. For loose soils a pointed stick will serve the purpose. Where the soil is too hard for a prod a spade will be needed in digging to the tunnels. In studies which have been made by the biological survey of the natural enemies of the gopher a very high value is placed on the barn owl, the great blue heron, badgers, skunks, weasels and snakes, and of the last named enemies the Pacific bull snake is considered most valuable. All of these gopher enemies are stanch friends of the grain and fruit ranchman and should be accorded his protection at all times.

If the average country plunger on the board of trade—more exactly, the fellow who sends his money to city commission men for investment in wheat or corn or pork or what not—could see the degree of affluence in which these fellows live, who neither toil nor spin, he would be a whole lot slower than he usually is in playing a game in which he usually gets plucked before he gets through. It's a bit slower and laborious making coin by swilling pigs and milking cows, but it's safer and surer in the long run.

Many a farmer planning to embark in the dairy business asks himself the question, "What is the best breed for me to keep?" If he has no special individual preference it will probably be best for him to select a breed of which there are the most representatives in his locality. Splendid results have been had with all of the leading dairy breeds, which in the last analysis [illegible] that success in dairying depends [illegible] more upon the man and the care he gives his cows than upon the breed chosen.

Cement makes an excellent pen or stable floor, but a generous supply of bedding should be used to offset coldness and a tendency to dampness.

A bright farm housewife whom we read of the other day has hit upon the idea of using her vacuum cleaner for currying the Shetland ponies on the place.

The cedar or cypress hedge has none too much to commend it from the artistic point of view when carefully trimmed. When neglected it is a decidedly scraggly, useless proposition.

The federal government has taken a hand lately in a movement to stop the sale of impure food in some eastern cities. As a result bad eggs, known to the trade as "rots and spots," have tumbled in price from about $2 to 25 cents a case. It was found that these were used quite generally in the manufacture of confectionery and bakeshop stuff.

Arbitration as a means of settling neighborhood differences and disputes does not give to either party that "get even" type of satisfaction that one of them might feel in the event of a lawsuit, but there is no getting around the fact that it promotes neighborliness and good feeling in the long run and does not entail such a heavy toll in the matter of court and attorneys' fees.

There is just one kind of proposition that is more costly to finance than a red automobile, and that is an ill advised case in justice or district court where a greedy lawyer or two have got hold of the steering gear. It is a mighty well to do fellow that can afford this type of entertainment, and even such a one will do well to have all of his real estate listed in his wife's name.

There may be times when it seems worth while trying to save a few dollars a month in the hire of a man who is to do nothing but operate a manure spreader, but it is folly usually to attempt it in the case of the man who is to care for and milk the dairy cows, as the loss in milk and butter fat due to carelessness and rough treatment will usually offset many times the amount saved in the wages of the man.

Rarely if ever do you see a father, whether tiller of the soil, merchant or day laborer, who has taken time from his pressing duties to take an interest in his boy and share in his sports who is later called upon to "give the boy his time"—that is, virtually renounce the responsibilities of a father toward him. Seldom even in such cases is the fault entirely with the parent, but naturally as the elder he is fairly chargeable with the larger measure of responsibility, and time was probably when he failed in his duty to the boy along the lines suggested.

The proper place for little girls up to eighteen years of age who want to develop into pure, winsome and estimable women is at home with their folks when night comes and not on the streets, unless some specific errand calls them thither. Many a tragedy too pitiful for print, with heartbreak and heartache, would be spared if mothers would take this simple precaution with their daughters and were daughters on their part sensible enough to appreciate the wisdom of it. And the place for boys who want to grow into clean, manly men is also at home when night comes, and for the same reasons.

The writer inspected the contents of a box of Pacific coast fruit the other day that was sure an eye opener in view of the packing standards that are supposed to be in vogue with the most progressive western apple growers' associations. The fruit in question was odd sized, bruised, wormy and much of it positively rusty, fit only for hog feed. Of course it is the unusual scarcity of apples that made possible the transportation of this kind of fruit 2,600 miles, and yet we seriously question if the profit accruing to the boxer and shipper of this "truck" will not be more than offset by the ill repute which will be attached to Pacific coast fruits as a class as a result.

The machine cornhusker still seems to be in the experimental stage—that is, it has not developed as yet to a point where it will work with entire satisfaction under the varied weather conditions which are likely to exist at husking time. If the soil is dry, the corn sound and well matured, there is little more to be desired. On the other hand, if wet weather prevails at harvest time, the field is muddy, husks are damp and cob butts soft and spongy the machine husker comes a long way from being satisfactory, and it is usually retired for the more tedious hand method. As regards the relative cost of husking by the two methods the Iowa station has compiled some figures that are interesting. Figuring repairs and depreciation of a $225 machine at 12 per cent and interest on investment at 6 per cent, the cost of machine husking was $58.50 per year. The labor of two men and a boy was put at $5 per day, and at this figure the husking of a 100 acre field which yielded at the rate of sixty-five bushels per acre requiring eighteen days, [illegible] the total cost of machine husking $148.50. Husking this [illegible] bushels of corn at 3 cents per bushel would come to $195. An advantage of the machine husker, aside from greater economy, was that the job [illegible] in less time. A drawback noted was that it left the leaves and husks in bad condition for forage.

TAKES A BIG DROP

Price of Creamery Butter Lower at Present Than In Years Past.

Biggest Price Commanded In Competition For Prices Is 18½ Cents Per Pound.

The price of creamery butter has taken a big drop, which appears to have been quite unexpected.

The State Dairymen in convention at Litchfield, blame it on the cold storage people, claiming that they have suddenly dumped on the market large quantities of butter that had been in the storage for some time, with the effect of breaking the price. The best offer received at the auction sale of choice samples that were exhibited in the competition for prizes was eighteen and half cents per pound; a price unheard of for years. No one seems to think that the break in prices is permanent and we believe the situation will be normal again before long.

At the same time it is well for the creameries to consider seriously the remarks of a Federal Inspector who in an address to the convention told it flatly that the present situation was largely owing to the very poor quality of the product during the past few years. He declared that much of the creamery butter was unfit for use owing to the manner in which the cream was handled on the farms and in some cases at the creameries as well.

He stated that this condition accounted for the large increase in the sales of oleomargrine and that dairymen instead of seeking laws restraining the sale of this product, which by the way, has never been accused of being unclean had better meet the competition by improving the quality of their output.

We believe that the present trouble coming at this time will result in bettering conditions and in permanent good to the industry.

Elects Officers.

At the meeting of the stock-holders of the Red Lake—Eastern Marshall Farmers Telephone Co. held at the office of its Secretary, in Erie, last Saturday there was a full attendance. The old officers were re-elected for another year and John T. Lattimore was appointed assistant secretary during the temporary absence of Alex F. Lattimore. O. G. Lee was elected director in place of Andrew T. Nelson expired and A. B. Newton and P. Sund re-elected. After some discussion the Carmel branch was ordered turned over to the local company which organized it upon payment for the material invested by this company. On the proposition of W. A. Swanson of Rhoda, to build a branch line from Highlanding to Roland, Andrew W. Hanson, A. N. Seter and Peter C. Wold were appointed a committee to investigate and see if advisable. Several bills were allowed and considerable routine business done but in all their proceeding the spirit of conservatism was manifest owing to the difficulties that had to be overcome in placing the lines on a paying basis.

The report of the Treasurer showed the company to be in a very prosperous condition and the management seem to have the full confidence of all interested.—Erie Eleven Towns.

Settlers Want Judicial Ditch No. 12

At a hearing of the petition to establish Judicial Ditch No. 12 in Beltrami and Marshall counties, held before Judge Grindeland last Tuesday there was not a dissenting voice raised against establishing said ditch. The ditch will drain three towns in Beltrami county and empty into ditch No. 20 in town of Esplee, Marshall county. The viewers of the ditch are G. O. Cross, of Warren, John Simonson, of Excel, and Chris C. Hagen, of Bemidji.

Is is not often that a ditch is established with such a feeling of unanimity, I. E. Quist, of Anstad, who was one of those attending the hearing, said that all the settlers realize that without adequate drainage the land is valueless. One man even said that he would be willing to stand an assessment of $10 per acre if necessary so put the ditch through. It has been charged that the officials force ditches onto the settlers, but that is far from true in this case. —Warren Sheaf.

Supreme Court Makes The Writ Permanent

The Judges of the Unfair Court Must Not Hear The Case of the Contestant.

And With This The County Division Contest Is Put to Sleep for All Time.

The hope of a few people in Red Lake Falls that they would be able to maintain an action for some time that would cause the people of Pennington county annoyance has failed. The supreme court of the state having in a decision handed down on the 20th declared that they had no cause for action and that every step taken in connection with the organization of the new county had been according to law.

County Attorney Stanton presented the matter to the court in a masterly manner and deserves much credit for having the case disposed of so quickly.

The down river trouble makers will now have to be good as we advised them to be some time ago.

The beating all around has been a terrible one and illustrates the fact that when any badly of men temporarily clothed with power run counter to the wishes of the people, they are sure to be the losers in the end.

AUDITORIUM

"The Man On The Box".

The attraction at the Auditorium on January 31st will be the delightful comedy "The Man on the Box" dramatized from Harold McGrath's book, and one of the last seasons biggest successes in New York City. "The Man on the Box" fits Mr. Gus Arthurs, who heads the company, and is certain to bring him great artistic and pecuniary results. Comedy is his forte and he is happily equipped in that respect. The story of this play arouses the interest in the very beginning and accumulates in force to the end when the auditor leaves with a smile and a sense of genuine pleasure.

"Oak Farm".

"Oak Farm" a rural Comedy drama in three acts will be presented at the Auditorium on February 3rd by the Red Lake Falls Dramatic Club composed of a number of young people from the falls.

The play which has been presented at St. Hilaire and Red Lake Falls lately is said to have made a great hit with the theatre-goers and has been greeted by packed houses.

Six Year Term for Probate Judges.

The probate judges of Minnesota, who have been in session in St. Paul, will ask the legislature to make the term of a judge of probate six instead of two years. There is no reason apparent to a layman why the judge of a probate court should be obliged to make a campaign every two years in order to retain his office. The judges of the district court are elected for six-year terms and there seems no good excuse for not placing the judges of probate on the same basis, as regards tenure of office.

We are all Students Until We Die.

In yesterday's dispatch it states that men of middle age and men past sixty are in attendance at the State Agricultural college for the short course for farmers. Twenty years ago such an institution might have been greeted with laughter. But today it begins to percolate America that we are all students till we die.

Can't Drink and Hunt.

Representative Knute Knutson of Swift Falls, recently presented a bill to the state legislature regulating the carrying of fire arms which contains the following provision:

No person who has partaken of any intoxicating liquors shall, on the day he has so partaken of such intoxicating liquors, carry or otherwise use any long range rifle."

The bill is not entitled "A bill to abolish hunting."

Pension Bill Passed.

The house of representatives recently passed the Sulloway general pension bill, which grants pensions ranging from $12 to $36 a month to all soldiers who served ninety days in the United States army in the civil war, or sixty days in the Mexican war, and who have reached the age of 62 years. The bill adds about $15,000,000 a year to the pension roll.

Arctander Writes A Book.

The Law Notes of New York comments upon the latest literary effort of John W. Arctander, L. L. D. of the Minneapolis Bar Association, entitled "Guilty", a novel of crime which the aforesaid Notes states is somewhat "crudely and amatourishly written". The story deals with the trial of a woman for poisoning her husband and the subject is an interesting one, especially at this time when Mrs. Schenk is on trial for poisoning her husband and fainted away in the witness box yesterday.

Mr. Arctander is especially well known around Fosston, McIntosh, Winger and other portions of eastern Polk county, where many artistic locks of gold mine stock are cherished as a memento of his acquaintance. Mr. Arctander is also remembered for his West Hotel Revelation in Minneapolis and his book will without doubt sell well where his gold mine stock went like hot cakes.

N. C. Educational Association.

The annual meeting of the Northwest Central Education Association is to occur in Fergus Falls February 16 and 17. The meetings of this association in the past have been large and enthusiastic. A particularly strong program is being prepared. The program will be of interest not only to teachers, but to citizens in general. Entertainment will be furnished to lady teachers attending.

English in the public schools is the topic to be discussed at the Northwest-Central Educational Association, which meets in Fergus Falls, February 16th and 17th. A strong program is being prepared. Many well known specialists and teachers of reading, expression, and the interpretation of literature will take part in the program. Among this number are: Dr. E. H. Lewis, Chicago; E. W. Bohannon, Duluth; Geo. W Cooley, St. Paul; Alfred G. Arvold, Fargo; Stella Wood, Minneapolis; Mae Decker, Minneapolis; C. G. Schulz, St. Paul; Geo. B. Aiton, Minneapolis; S. A. Challman, Minneapolis; E. G. Quigley, Minneapolis. The program will be practical and helpful for the teacher, who is in the work whether it be in a rural, graded or high school. A special program for school officers under the direction of Miss Charlotte Knudson, superintendent of Otter Tail County, is one of the features. Entertainment (lodging and breakfast) will be furnished to the ladies. The progressive teacher cannot afford to miss this meeting.

ORGANIZE COM. CLUB

At a Meeting Last Friday Evening In Auditorium New Com. Club Organized.

Dr. Grundy Selected As Permanent President of New Organization.

Pursuant to the call issued last week by the city council persons interested in the organization of a commercial club, and they were many, met in the Auditorium last Friday evening and perfected the organization of a new commercial club.

This organization fills a long felt want and it has received all due encouragement and promises of liberal financial aid for its maintenance by some of our most prominent citizens who realize the necessity of such an organization in a live and rapidly growing city of this size.

Dr. Grundy was selected as the temporary and permanent president of the commercial club and H. E. Ives, the temporary secretary. The office of the permanent secretary was left open and will be filled at a later date.

Dan Shaw was appointed 1st vice president, Perl Mabey, second, and Math Barzen, third vice president.

The chairman appointed a committee on constitution and by laws as a permanent organization composed of Dan Shaw, O. N. Naplin and B. Dan Bjerkman.

The chairman was also instructed to appoint a financial committee composed of three members and a committee of three on the ratification of Pennington county.

The meeting was adjourned to February 3 at 8 P. M.

No Danger!

This talk of the saw-mill shutting down because the lumber company found it impracticable to bring some timber, they owned east of Cass Lake to this point is the silliest nonsense.

We would as soon believe in the veracity of the Editor of the Gazette or one of the gang as to believe the mill will close down permanently, while there are 400 million feet of pine at the headwaters of Red Lake River.

It is too bad our down river friends must be deprived of even this consolation.

FOUND DEAD ON TRAIN

What Is Undoubtedly Body of One Theo. Hemstraught Found Dead In Berth.

The City Authorities Making Determined Efforts to Unravel The Mystery.

The mystery connected with the finding of the dead man on the northbound Soo flyer, No. 109, last Thursday morning, January 19, still remains unsolved. The efforts of the city authorities and the railway companies in trying to locate the relatives and to solve the mysterious circumstances surrounding the dead man had up to the time of going to press last night proved fruitless.

The body which is now at the Torrison Bros. undertaking apartments awaiting further developments appears to be that of one Theodore Hemstraught, a young man of about 28 or 30 years of age. He is about 5 ft., 3 inches tall, has grey eyes and dark hair with a reddish cast.

He wore a dark greenish suit with stripes, and a dark summer coat and derby, all of clothing were too light for this climate at this time of the year and from this it is believed that he had come from a warmer climate recently.

The suit, by the trade mark, indicates that it had been purchased of the Nosix Co., custom tailors at Utica, N. Y. The name "Hemstraught" was inside of the coat pocket, and the laundry mark on the shirt and collar bore the initials, T. H. He had on his person a gold ring on which were inscribed the letters, "T. J. H." which bear conclusive evidence that the man's name is Hemstraught.

Coronor Patterson, of St. Hilaire, was summoned to view the remains and pronounced death due to acute alcoholism.

Four pint bottles of whiskey were found on his body, two of which were empty and one full. The liquor, it appears from the label, had been purchased at the Golden West Hotel Bar in Minneapolis. Some money, mostly bills, were found on his person, as were also a gold cigar clipper, a gold watch, ring, etc.

Had a well worn bill book, which contained the names and addresses of the following:

F. Dunham, 57 Central Ave., Oswego, N. Y.

F. M. Tector, Hosquim, Oregon.

F. Van Domark, 51 Fulton, Waverly, N. Y.

Two cards, Theodore Hemstraught.

These addresses were apparently written in Hemstraught's hand writing. There was also a slip of paper in the book on which was written Cannington, Ontario, 2120 from Regina, Sask., to Buffalo. This was apparently in R. H. Lowe's handwriting and was the number of the ticket he bought at Regina, and on which Hemstraught was traveling.

It has been the opinion that R. H. Lowe, the owner of the ticket who went from Regina, Sask., to Cannington, Ontario, to spend the holidays with his parents had met with foul play on his return trip somewhere between Cannington, Ont., and Minneapolis at the hands of Hemstraught, who presumably used Lowe's ticket to get out of the United States.

R. H. Lowe's brother was at home for the holidays and possibly accompanied him as far as Chicago. Mr. Lowe is a man 5 feet 11 or 6 feet tall, is of Canadian Scotch descent, dark complexioned, dark eyes and is 27 years of age. He has a brother C. Lowe at Niami, Manitoba and a brother in law C. C. Reynolds at Minneapolis.

It was thought at first that the body was that of R. H. Lowe, the owner of the ticket, but upon the arrival of Glen Lowe, of Morris, Sask., brother of R. H. Lowe, he declared the body not that of his brother and wholly unknown to him.

No new developments had arisen in the case last night as we were going to press, but a telegram received last Tuesday by the city authorities conveys the information that Lowe was supposed to have been accompanied by his brother and had gone on to Kansas, but this is not known for certain.

The baggage of the deceased has been sent for and was expected to arrive on the flyer last night which will undoubtedly throw some light on where he hails from.

Dredge Material Arriving Daily.

The Northwestern Drainage Co. of Grand Rapids, Wis., has about twenty-five men with teams hauling out dredge material for the floating dredge to be built two miles north of Carmel and for a walking dredge to be built at this place. At these three places and at Mud Lake is where the actual work of digging on Judicial ditch No. 11, will be commenced in the spring.

The time is drawing near when the settlers of this drainage district will see the commencement of one of the greatest improvements ever in the state of Minnesota.—Eagle

Mrs. G. Halvorson and Mrs. Leonard Peterson will entertain the ladies aid of the Presbyterian society at the home of the former tomorrow afternoon, January 27th. Everyone invited.

Considerable complaint has been heard on account of the action of some of our young boys who caused a lot of unnecessary trouble and made it quite disagreeable for those who were present at a dance the other evening. It is quite distressing to note the actions of some of the young galoots who run around town loose without a bell who by the way, are capable of causing a whole lot of misery and trouble for others.

No More Government Envelopes.

Postmaster General Hitchcock announced that after January the government will discontinue the printing of stamped envelopes and recommends that the same be done by the local newspapers and by special permit for the towns nearest the newspaper where a town has no paper of its own. No large town will be allowed to have a monopoly on the printing of the envelopes to the detriment of the smaller newspapers.

The scale of printing will be such that a reasonable profit can be made by the office printing them. The department will also soon make a ruling that no first-class mails will be allowed transmission through the mails until it has a return card written or printed thereon. The above means that the envelope printing business will take on a big boom soon, which is sure to continue.

The order relating to the printing of envelopes is a correction for an evil of long standing and against which the newspapers throughout the country have fought many years, for the reason that the price charged for the envelopes was far less than the stock could be purchased by printers and the rate charged was such that a profit on the printing could be made by the government. Hundreds of millions of stamped envelopes printed by the government are used annually throughout the country and the contemplated change will be greeted with pleasure by every printer and publisher who has felt the loss of this class of business.

MRS. WHITMAN DEAD.

Mrs. John N. Whitman Dies at Home of Her Daughter Last Friday.

The Remains Were Laid to Rest Last Tuesday in Greenwood Cemetery.

Mrs. John Whitman, a pioneer resident of this city died last Friday, from diabetes mellitis, from which she had been suffering for about four years.

Deceased was a pioneer resident of this city and leaves a large family of children to mourn her loss.

The funeral services were held last Tuesday afternoon in the M. E church, and the sermon was preached by Rev. Flesher of Bemidji. It had been the request of Mrs. Whitman before her death that Rev. Flesher should perform her last sad rites.

She leaves eight sons and daughters to mourn the loss of a kind good mother. They are: Emerson W, Whitman, Pelican Rapids Mrs. Carrie W. McCauley, Kenmare Mrs. O. S. Hughes, Portland, Oregon, Mrs. Theodore Farrington, Dallas, Oregon, Mrs. F H Whitney, St Cloud, Wm P Whitman, Medford, Oregon, John N Whitman and Mrs S Kenson, of this city.

School Notes.

The first of the six institutes for farmers was held at the high school gymnasium last Wednesday. The second meeting takes place on Wednesday, Feb. 1st, beginning at 10:30. It will be a dairy convention and will be conducted by C. O. Carlson of Erskine. State Dairy Commissioner Joel Winkjer will also be present and some of the local creamery men will aid in making the program interesting.

The departmental system of work now in operation in the grammar grades is proving satisfactory. Teachers [and pupils alike prefer it to the old style organization.

The electric fixtures are being installed in the Lincoln. The date of dedication will probably be announced next week, but the exact time will depend on the convenience of Governor Eberhardt and other prominent persons who are expected to attend.

The three months short course for large boys and girls is certainly practical and interesting. Students can enter this work at any time and many more should take advantage of its offerings. One boy, taken as a type of others in the class, in studying spelling, common English, the portions of arithmetic most needed in the ordinary affairs of life, elementary agriculture, and is making a set of heavy whiffletrees in the manual training department. He is also taking some work in simple accounting. Can anyone suggest anything more useful for a three months period of practical study?

Every teacher is endeavoring to secure better results in reading. It is not so much the quantity that is sought, as it is the quality of the work.

Inquiry of any student or teacher in the Lincoln develops the fact that this building could not be changed in any particular to make it more suitable for high school work.

By the time the School Notes have run the gamut of author and his typewriter, the typesetter, printer's devil and proofreader, they frequently present some startling examples of "How English is Spoke and Wrote". However, we live to learn.

Systematic effort is always made to induce the children to patronize the public library. The sight often presented there of over one hundred grade pupils receiving books in one evening acts as an inspiration to those most deeply interested in the future of the boys and girls. Habitual readers rarely fail to acquire strong mental and moral qualities.

Thief River Falls citizens ought to lay aside their ordinary duties for an hour or two next Wednesday and attend the dairymen's convention at the high school gym. Why not mingle for a short time with those substantial folks who so largely figure in the prosperity of this section?

Card of Thanks.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

Reports of the state drainage commission on work done in Minnesota from Aug. 1, 1898, to Aug. 1, 1910, have been placed in the hands of the legislature. The commission estimates Minnesota had originally 10,000,000 acres of swamp lands, too wet in their natural condition for agricultural purposes. This vast area, comprising about one-fifth of the land of the state, is fast being transformed from swamp lands to productive farms. Conservative estimates place the total area reclaimed during 1909 and 1910 at 1,500,000 acres.

The average cost of current government for the year in twenty-three cities in Minnesota having a population of 5,000 or more was $10.93 a person. In addition to this amount an average of $5.05 per capita was expended for permanent improvements, making the total cost of municipal government $15.98 a person. The chief item of public cost was for protection of life and property as exercised by the fire and police service and the municipal courts.

Representative Hammond of Minnesota was elected a member of the committee on ways and means at the party caucus held at Washington for the purpose of perfecting the organization of the house in the Sixty-second congress. This place will give Mr. Hammond a voice in the framing of the tariff bill which the Democrats will present to the new congress.

W. F. Schilling of Northfield, who has been at the head of the State Dairymen's association the past two years, was re-elected at the Litchfield convention. Other officers elected were: Vice president, Andrew French, Plainview; second vice president, Charles Nelson, Rosendale; secretary, F. D. Currie, Nicollet; treasurer, J. M. Jack, Stanton.

Representative Knute Knutson has presented a bill in the legislature regulating the carrying of firearms which contains the following provision: "No person who has partaken of any intoxicating liquors shall, on the day he has so partaken of such intoxicating liquors, carry or otherwise use any long range rifle."

The governor has announced the following reappointments: A. L. Sackett, St. Peter, and C. F. McDonald, St. Cloud, Soldiers' home board; G. H. McNair, Cloquet, highway commissioner.

The annual meeting of the Southern Minnesota Horticultural society, covering the counties of Fillmore, Mower, Steele and Freeborn, was held at Albert Lea last week.

In the last five years fire insurance rates in the state have decreased 2.1 per cent, making a saving of $681,000 to the people of Minnesota.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Falling from a scaffold into a vat of boiling water in the hog killing department of Swift & Co.'s packing plant Albert Leininger, city assessor of South St. Paul, had a miraculous escape from death. Fortunately he was not completely immersed, as he managed to alight on his feet, but his lower limbs were badly scalded and he was burned about the body in his attempt to extricate himself. It is feared both limbs will have to be amputated.

The two men killed by a Minneapolis and St. Louis freight train near St. Louis Park have been identified as Rudolph Kroc and James Havel, both of Hopkins. Kroc was married and had three children. Havel, who was single, boarded with him. Both men were employed by the Monitor plow works at St. Louis Park and were on their way to work when they were run down by a train in the darkness and fog.

Alex Tybora, aged eighteen, son of Frank Tybora, a Winona merchant, was run over and instantly killed by a freight train. He was looking for coal in the train with a flour sack and evidently became caught in the automatic hopper of a gondola coal car.

William B. H. Taggart, a freight brakeman, running out of Austin, was killed in the yards at Wells. From letters found on the body it appears that his mother and aunt are living at Shanandoah, Pa.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

John Goenen of Shakopee, eighty years old, who was visiting his son at St. Paul, was found dead in his bed. Mr. Goenen was one of the oldest settlers in Shakopee. For many years he drove the stage between St. Paul and Shakopee. He is said to be the first German who went to live in Shakopee, having operated the ferry across the Minnesota river when he had few except Indians for passengers.

Gertrude McGoroty, aged twenty-one, was found dead in bed at her home in St. Paul with the gas turned on. The girl's parents say they are sure her death was accidental, declaring that they know of no reason why she should have taken her life.

George Oliver, a pioneer of Lakeland, Washington county, is dead. He was seventy-five years of age and a member of Company B of the famous First Minnesota volunteer infantry.

Andrew Olson, former chairman of the board of county commissioners of Washington county, is dead at the age of seventy-two.

AUDITORIUM

"The Burgomaster" January 31.

Wm. P. Cullen has made a big revival of Pixley and Luder's famous musical comedy success, "The Burgomaster" and will present it at the Auditorium next Tuesday with a large cast headed by Gus. Weinburg in the role of Peter Stuyvesant, the old burgomaster of New Amsterdam. The company will number 50 people. The production is an especially handsome one. The costumes have been revised and are all new. Special attention has been paid by Mr. Cullen to the voices of the chorus as well as to the beauty of the feminine portion. "The Burgomaster" was the first of Pixley and Luder's pieces to gain popularity, others being "The Prince of Pilsen", "King Dodo", and the Grand Mogul". The music is of the singing and whistling variety, and it is said that more copies of the "Tale of the Kangaroo" and "I love you" have been sold than any other songs in musical comedies.

A musical treat is in store for those amusement lovers who see Wm. P. Cullen's great production of "The Burgomaster", at the Auditorium on next Tuesday, Gus. C. Weinburg heads the cast. The music of the play is especially catchy. Among the best song numbers are "I love You Dear" "The Tale of the Kangaroo", "Hypnotist", "The Gladiator" and the famous Indian Chorus. Mr. Weinburg is supported by a company of fifty people.

By far the best theatrical event of the season will be "The Burgomaster," which comes to the Auditorium next Tuesday, headed by that clever comedian, Gus. C. Weinburg the original Peter Stuyvesant, Mayor of New Amsterdam. It is a well known fact that the music of "The Burgomaster" is far superior to any of Pixley and Luder's other musical comedies. One million copies of the "Tale of the Kangaroo" was sold the first season it was produced.

Lovers of clean amateur drama will be given a chance to see a good play well played, when on Friday evening, Feb. 3rd, the Red Lake Falls Dramatic Club will present "Oak Farm" in the Auditorium in this city. "Oak Farm" is a stirring, 3act rural comedy drama, in which is portrayed a story of life on an eastern farm, a story which has a counterpart in many rural sections of the country today. The author of the play, Mr. Anthony E. Wills, has woven together a fabric made of threads of comedy and drama, so neatly interwoven that the transition from the humorous to the pathetic is so gradual, and yet so marked, that the play can well be pronounced a masterpiece.

The story deals with the mortgaging of the farm to send the son to college, the crookedness of the postmaster and town money lender, the failure of the parents to receive letters from the son, the final day of grace and the grand finale—the return of the prodigal son. The humor fits in everywhere. One minute and you are doubled up with laughter and your sides ache; the next minute tears flow and you wonder why you laughed.

Following is the castle of characters and a brief synopsis of the play:

A LIMITED PARCELS POST.

The demand on the part of the people of the country for what is known as a limited parcels post is increasing, and there seems to be little question that in the near future congress will pass such legislation as will put it into operation. These systems of package delivery by mail have been in vogue in some European countries for more than a hundred years, hence are not socialistic, utopian or untried. In practical operation they have proved eminently successful and above everything satisfactory and a great convenience to people living in country districts. The postmaster general has recommended a limited parcels post which would make low rates for the distribution of parcels from towns and cities over local rural routes. It is contended, and the point is well taken, that the average rural carrier handles less than forty pounds of mail matter daily when even with his light wagon he could easily take care of several times this amount, not only increasing greatly the revenues of the postoffice department, but ministering largely to the needs and convenience of the patrons along his route. The opponents of parcels posts in any form seem to be the country merchants, who fear still further inroads into their territory by the catalogue houses and the express companies, which are annually extracting millions of dollars from the shippers of the country in the shape of discriminatory and exorbitant rates. Inasmuch, however, as some country merchants are buying catalogue house stuff and putting it on their own shelves, the position which they take in the matter is hardly consistent. The live merchant does not greatly fear catalogue house competition, and the dead or moribund merchant who is already hanging on the ragged edge will drop out sooner or later anyway. This matter of home trading is a good deal of a fiction, and with no class is it a bigger joke than with merchants in their relation one to another. As the postal laws are now, with agreements at present in force with foreign countries, one can send a package to a relative in Europe as cheaply as he can to a friend in the next state or county. The inequality is manifest and one that bids fair to be righted.

ECONOMICAL BEEF FEEDING.

The Nebraska state experiment station at Lincoln published the middle of December a bulletin on "Economical Beef Production," which contains a number of suggestions which should be valuable to feeders of beef cattle. As a result of a number of carefully conducted feeding tests it was found that old process linseed meal coarsely ground had a slightly higher feeding value than cottonseed meal, while either of these feeds was considerably better than wheat bran as a protein concentrate. One experiment showed that cold pressed cottonseed cake fed with corn and corn stover gave larger daily gains than any other combination of foods used. The results in three experiments made showed that beef could be produced more cheaply by the use of alfalfa in connection with corn than by the use of any of the three concentrates—linseed meal, cottonseed meal or bran—when the roughage consisted of prairie hay. The conclusions derived from some other feeding tests showed that with corn at from 35 to 50 cents per bushel and alfalfa hay at $7 per ton or lower less than a full feed of corn—from fourteen to eighteen pounds—was a more economical ration than when a full feed was used and that if corn was worth from 50 to 60 cents per bushel it was more economical to reduce the corn ration to a half feed, or from ten to twelve pounds. A comparison of the quarters after the animals were slaughtered showed that the groups fed on alfalfa gave a better quality of meat, as shown in the color, marbling, etc.

A DEFICIENT DIET.

Investigations into instances of pig eating sows seem to show that this tendency is aggravated if not in every case caused by the sow's not having a balanced diet during the few weeks prior to the birth of her litter. A largely fat forming ration, such as corn, fails to furnish the mother with the elements she needs in providing her unborn young with flesh and bone forming material, and the morbid appetite she sometimes shows in her attempts to devour them as soon as born is quite often evidence of the lack referred to. The difficulty may be overcome by reducing the corn ration and substituting for a part of it in the neighborhood of half a pound per day of oil meal or tankage. This ration may be still further improved by adding an allowance of steamed clover or alfalfa hay. The bone forming element—potash—may be supplied in cob charcoal and wood ashes.

Have you thought to empty the spray tank and drain the spray pump carefully? If not you have probably got some trouble ahead.

A man or woman cannot work advantageously on poor and scant fare. Neither will horses, hens or dairy cows give satisfactory returns under the same conditions.

We have seen people of normal size and possessed of what would be considered a fair amount of courage who just didn't have the nerve to set one of those little "devil" mouse traps.

Buckwheat cakes, a favorite dish with many during the winter months, are both more palatable as well as more wholesome if the batter is made of buckwheat and wheat flour, half and half.

Disease is often very closely associated with discomfort and dampness in the case of both animals and poultry; hence care should be taken that these unfavorable conditions are so far as possible removed.

There is no ration for furnishing protein for growing pigs which is better than skimmilk, and the farmer who is long headed will see to it that there is as much of it as possible produced on the place.

A dairyman may make a margin of profit on his cows if he does not take a good general farm or dairy paper, but his chances for doing so are much improved if he has at hand in such a publication the best and latest information on the subject.

A chemist of the University of Minnesota has discovered a germicide to which he has given the name benetol. The new chemical is nonpoisonous to animals and human beings, yet is said to be five times as powerful a germ destroyer as carbolic acid.

There is a big temptation to keep the horses in the stable just because the weather seems a trifle colder than usual. Where there are a paddock and a shelter from the wind it is well to turn them out for exercise even when the weather is cold. The fresh air and exercise they get will more than offset any possible disadvantage.

Notwithstanding the fact that chicken lice are less active in cold weather than warm it is a pretty good idea to see that the hens are provided with a bath of dust and wood ashes, with a handful of powdered sulphur thrown in. It won't take them long to find out what this combination is good for if you put it within their reach.

There are a good many fellows who would not knowingly take property belonging to another who yet show a detestable slackness or penuriousness in hanging on to money which other folks have earned by working for them from whom it is as difficult to extract it as is blood from a turnip. As soon as money is fairly earned it belongs at once to the man who has earned it, not the man from whom it has been earned.

It is a pretty risky proposition for a girl to marry a man to reform him from the booze habit or to get him to turn over a new leaf when he's just naturally shiftless and lazy. Ten chances to one, the girl who marries the first chap will bear heartaches of a drunkard's wife, while the girl who marries the other type can safely count on building the fires in the morning, bringing in her own water, chopping a good deal of the wood and trotting to the corncrib for cobs and kindling.

The opening of an alfalfa meal mill at Rifle, Colo., was celebrated in fit yet decidedly unique fashion. A banquet was served, and every article on the bill of fare was made of or served with alfalfa. The turkey was stuffed with alfalfa, the biscuits were made of it, mashed alfalfa took the place of potatoes, and leaves of it were served instead of spinach. Salad made of alfalfa was served, and the beverages were alfalfa tea and cider. Toothpicks made of alfalfa straw were distributed. The chief toast of the evening was on "Alfalfa and Apple."

Within the past eighteen months a machine has been perfected which seems to be very effective in the picking of cotton, a process which for generations past has been done by exceedingly slow and expensive hand labor. With the new machine one person can harvest about as many acres of cotton as he can cultivate during the growing season. The machine will pick four acres a day at a cost of about $6 per day, or one-fourth what the picking would cost by hand. The machine is so arranged that it will pick the ripe cotton, but will not injure the immature bolls.

The system of one-year rentals and the various conditions developing from it are responsible for more agricultural depravity and cussedness than almost any other phase of farm tenure or management. Just so long as a tenant knows he quite likely will not reap next season some of the benefit of fertilizing or improvements which he puts on a place this year the whole situation not only encourages him, but makes it necessary for him to play to a finish the "skin game," which is prostituting and playing hob with tens of thousands of farms all over the land. It is likely that the fault is primarily with the owner of the land, who usually says whether the lease shall be for one, three or five years. If it is stinginess that makes him cling to the one year lease system he is surely getting his punishment as he goes along, or his land is.

The following rare bit of humor is taken from the "ginger jar" of a well known eastern agricultural publication: "One may retail apples, but it is impossible to retail a dog." It is apparent from this spicy morsel that the supply of ginger needed replenishing.

There is no liquid that will absorb odors more quickly or completely than milk. On this account it is well to keep the stable sweet and clean, free from manure odors, the smells of roots or silage at milking time as well as free from dust, which will get into the milk if it is stirred up.

The trap nest enables the poultry keeper to learn just what each member of the flock is doing; hence the point in question is not whether it will pay to bother with them, but whether one can afford to continue stuffing high priced food into hens which do not pay for their winter keep.

A reader of an eastern farm journal who has tried it recommends the following mixture as excellent as a rust-proof coating for plows: Melt three pounds of beef suet and add one pound of white lead; apply when warm with an old paint brush. This combination is good to apply on any metal tool to prevent rusting.

The trouble with most prohibitive or restrictive laws as affecting the conduct of people is that their enactment does not change desire or will, but merely represses it. It is on this account that those agitations are most effective which are largely educational and furnish new interests and new aims—that is, furnish new channels for the operation of the energy and will.

An observation made by a syndicate writer the other day was to the effect that weeds require poor land to do well. Probably what the writer meant was that weeds would flourish where some grasses and cultivated plants would not; yet, other conditions being equal, the richer the land the more rank weeds will grow, as they take from the soil in the main the same elements as do other crops.

It takes something more than a pedigree to furnish assurance that a given animal is worth anything for breeding purposes. In the same way a boy can come from a pretty good family, yet be an all round scrub and no account. Many an animal sold at stock sales at a price a trifle above an everyday commercial basis should be sent to the block instead of being intrusted with the highly important duty of becoming the sire of future breeding animals.

The poinsettia, which is coming to be a very popular early winter house plant, has several very interesting characteristics. One of these is that it sheds its green leaves some time before it does the red bracts encircling the blossom cluster. Another is that each blossom is equipped with a little cuplike projection containing about a drop of clear sirupy liquid, which is evidently intended as a bait to draw bees and other insects to aid in a more complete pollenization of the flower. It is well worth securing one of the plants, not only because of its showy green leaves and beautiful red crown, but for the peculiarities above noted. The plant is subtropical and will flourish best if kept where the temperature is quite warm.

Since the federal pure food law went into effect a good many "sugar bushes" over the country seem to have gone out of commission, judging from the very limited supply of maple sirup which is able to bear the legend "pure." Yet if one cannot get the real article a very wholesome substitute can be made by the use of corncobs, which will impart both flavor and color. White cobs clean and freshly shelled are the best for the purpose. They should be put in a kettle and boiled for about an hour, or until the coloring matter shows clearly in the water. They should then be removed, the water carefully strained to remove particles of cob and sediment and enough coffee or light brown sugar added to give the sirup the desired thickness after a few minutes' boiling. If the job is carefully done not only will this cob sirup have a delicate flavor closely resembling maple sirup, but the color also will be a close counterfeit.

A lady reader of these notes living near Massillon, O., writes inquiring if there is any truth in the articles which have been published lately as to injurious effects from eating food cooked in aluminium vessels. While we have heard statements to this effect and articles charging such to be the case have been published, inquiry of medical men does not show that the claim that stomach trouble is due to the eating of foods cooked in aluminium vessels has been conclusively proved. We would suggest to our correspondent, however, if her family use aluminium utensils and some of them have stomach trouble seemingly as a result, that it might be a good idea to go back to iron and granite ware for a time and see if the disorders referred to disappear. Should they do so there would be considerable reason for supposing that the use of the aluminium vessels was the cause. If any of our readers can furnish us definite proof on the point under discussion we would be glad to present their experience and findings in these columns.

F. E. Trigg

A Famous Parlor Maid.

Sydney Smith, the famous author and wit, in describing his early married life in a Yorkshire parsonage told how he made a butler out of a village girl:

"A manservant was too expensive, so I caught up a little garden girl made like a milestone, christened her Bunch, put a napkin in her hand and made her my butler. The girls taught her to read, Mrs. Sydney to wait, and I undertook her morals. Bunch became the best butler in the county."

But Bunch was not merely butler—she was valet too. A visitor thus describes her:

"Coming down one morning, I found Bunch pacing up and down the passage before her master's door in a state of great perturbation.

"'What is the matter, Bunch?'

"'Oh, ma'am, I can't get no peace of mind till I've got master shaved, and he's so late this morning!'

"This 'getting master shaved' consisted in making ready for him with a large painter's brush a thick lather in a huge wooden bowl as big as Mambrino's helmet, which she always considered as the most important avocation of the morning."

When the Danes Were Skinned.

In former times the Danes used to sail up the mouths of the English rivers to pillage the churches. When they were caught they were skinned and their skins nailed to the door of the church they attacked. In course of time all the exposed portions would peel off, but that covered by the nail would be protected and thus bear testimony to the cruelty of the ancient Englishmen. In the London College of Surgeons may be seen three specimens of human skin bearing labels such as this: "Portion of human skin said to be that of a Dane from the door of a church at Hadstock, in Essex." A second specimen is from Copford, in Essex, and a third from the north door of Worcester cathedral. Such fragments of sacrilegious Danish hide have been found on doors in Westminster abbey.

Were Kind to Him.

A West Philadelphia man who was severely injured some months ago when his horse took fright at an automobile and bolted, upsetting the carriage, has only recently been released from the hospital. He is well now and in the best of spirits notwithstanding the fact that severe operations were necessary in order to save his life.

A few days after he left the hospital a friend asked him if he had been kindly treated.

"Oh, yes!" he said. "Oh, yes, indeed! Considering the fact that they amputated both my feet, removed my collar bone, cut off my left thumb, trepanned my brain, took out a piece of my underjaw and sawed my left hip bone in two, I got along very nicely. They were most kind to what was left of me."—Philadelphia Press.

Beaconsfield the Dandy.

The dandyism Benjamin Disraeli affected in his dress is the subject of many pen pictures in Monypenny's "Life of Beaconsfield." At the age of nineteen he is described as wearing a black velvet suit with ruffles and black stockings with red clocks. A later portrait, in 1830, comes from a friend's diary, which has the following entry:

"March 29.—B. D. to dine with me. He came up Regent street when it was crowded in his blue surtout, a pair of military light blue trousers, black stockings with red stripes and shoes. 'The people,' he said, 'quite made way for me as I passed. It was like the opening of the Red sea, which I now perfectly believe from experience. Even well dressed people stopped to look at me.'"

Haroun-al-Raschid to Charlemagne.

The only sovereign of the time who could compare with Charlemagne was the famous Haroun-al-Raschid who as the head of the Moslem world sent the keys of Jerusalem to the head of the Christian world, besides a striking clock, an ape and an elephant—things which impressed the imagination of those times as typifying that Charlemagne had been invested with the sovranty of Jerusalem and the lordship of the world.—T. A. Cook in "Old Provence."

Where Once a Home Stood.

And what is more melancholy than the old apple trees that linger about the spot where once stood a homestead, but where there is now only a ruined chimney rising out of a grassy and weed grown cellar? They offer their fruit to the wayfarer—apples that are bitter-sweet with the moral of time's vicissitude.—Hawthorne.

Charity.

When thy brother has lost all that he ever had and lies languishing, and even gasping under the utmost extremities of poverty and distress, dost thou think to lick him whole again only with thy tongue?—South.

He Was Generous.

Pallid Clerk—I'm not feeling very well, sir; do you mind if I take things a little easy today?

Grouchy Employer—Not so long as they're not my things.—Lippincott's.

Convincing Evidence.

Sportsman (having emptied both barrels at a rabbit)—There, Jacob! I'm sure I hit that one!

Jacob—Well, 'e certainly did seem to go faster after you shot at 'im, sir.—London Punch.

FOR MINNESOTA

The northern counties of the state are the leaders in the movement for the development of the state and the conservation of the natural resources.

Nature has been very kind to Minnesota. It has given us not only great fertility of soil, well timbered, but she has placed in the northeast sections immense quantities of iron; has great ledges of granite at St. Cloud and Ortonville; fine building stone at Sandstone, Mankato, Winona, Kasota and other points. It has given every section good clay for brick making. The state is rich in building material of the most enduring quality, combining beauty with utility.

The state has spent many hundreds of thousands of dollars in advertising the resources of the state, and yet when it comes to building our own state and institution buildings, we permit the whim of an architect to discard our own material for those of other states, in most cases not as good as our own.

The officials of the state should have patriotism enough to use Minnesota material for Minnesota buildings, when the money of Minnesota taxpayers pays the bills.

The university is preparing to spend some millions of Minnesota coin in building a series of buildings, and the architect, in preparing the plans, specifies Wisconsin stone and Illinois brick, absolutely ignoring Minnesota stone, of which there is a great variety, and many kinds of brick. This comes pretty close to spelling treason.

Senator J. D. Sullivan, of St. Cloud, has introduced a bill to remedy this evil, making it mandatory on the state officials to build public buildings of Minnesota material. This is senate file 22. We trust the members from this district will give the bill their hearty support. In fact the senators and representatives from northern Minnesota who would fail to vote for this or a similar bill would be guilty of inconsistency, and make our efforts for state development a byword and mockery.

Minnesota material for Minnesota buildings is the sensible kind of conservation.

OPPORTUNITIES IN MINNESOTA.

At the Columbia exposition held in Chicago in 1893, Minnesota took first prize for having the best soil for agricultural purposes of any state in the union. The fact that the farm values in Minnesota have nearly doubled in the last ten years is proof that this decision was not erroneous.

Government crop reports for the last year show that Minnesota leads all the other states in wheat. Minnesota holds the grand sweepstakes premium for the best oats grown in the world, won at the National Corn show at Omaha.

While, up to a few years ago, it was supposed that Minnesota could never be a great corn growing state, our yield last year averaged better than those of Iowa, Wisconsin, Nebraska and South Dakota, and was equal to that of Illinois. Our state leads in barley production, and is third in producing rye and flax.

Our pasturage crops and native grasses are unexcelled, as is proved by our great success in dairying and cattle raising. That the hay crop in some portions of the state is the most profitable that can be raised is saying much. Clover grows almost like a weed and is sold very largely to other states for seed. We won the prize for the best peck of clover seed in the competition open to the world at the National Corn show in 1909. One little town in the northern part of the state sold clover for seed to the amount of $25,000 in one season. And still early settlers thought clover could not be grown well in Minnesota.

In vegetables Minnesota leads the world. The proof of the assertion can be left to the judgment of any woman who tends to her own marketing. Not only do vegetables grow prodigiously here in nearly all varieties, but they have a flavor that makes them superior to the vegetables of other states. Our great market affords many comparisons. Just make them and see.

Minnesota's yield of potatoes in 1909 of 115 bushels to the acre was the highest of and state, central or western. This was the average yield, but yields as high as 465 bushels to the acre have been reported in the state. Our potatoes are sought for seed all over the country. Whenever you hear of a state raising good potatoes, like Montana for instance, the chance is almost a certainty that they were raised from Minnesota seed. Authorities tell us that Minnesota has about the only seed potato district in the United States that is free from wilt.

Minnesota onions, cabbages, squashes, asparagus, rhubarb and tomatoes are second to none in the world. They should have as much of a reputation as Minnesota flour and Minnesota wheat, and will have some day. And some day, too, we are going to beat Michigan raising beets.

Ontario alone can tie us in such other root crops as mangles, carrots, rutabagas, etc., of which our farmers can raise from fifteen to twenty tons to the acre. The same is true of forage crops, such as fodder corn, sorghum, which yields ten to twenty tons of roughage to the acre: white millet and field peas, which can be gathered as high as 100,000 pounds to the acre.

Minnesota butter sells in New York City at from two to three cents a pound more than the butter from other states, because it is better than all others. We have taken six out of eight of the championship banners offered by the National Buttermaker's association.

Our dairy products aggregate $50,000.00 a year. In the last twenty years, the average proportion of butter fat has been increased 50 per cent per cow, and experts say it can be much further increased. There are 40 acre farms in Minnesota, on which a small herd of dairy cows, a few pigs to utilize the skim milk, and a flock of chickens, gave a good living for a family and some net returns as great as from a grain farm several times that size. Improved land where farmers can do this sells at from $50 to $100 an acre, wild land at $10 to $20 an acre. Still for many years, dairying as a paying industry was entirely overlooked.—Minneapolis Journal.

We notice that at the last meeting of the Red Lake County Board the following bills were allowed. For lithographing 63 ditch bonds $126.00 and John Duffy received $28 34 for carrying these bonds to Minneapolis.

Lack of sufficient command of the English language and the law regarding what may be printed prevents us from characterizing this deal as it deserves.

No member of that board of commissioners was directly interested because this deal was not at the expense of the county, but is directly charged against farmers who are improving their lands and the country by building ditches. These farmers had no voice, no chance to enter a protest.

The transaction is so barefaced and rotten that we do not believe all of the commissioners present understood it.

It is such jobs as this which for years have been put through by the gang that were the real cause of division and this one but confirms the wisdom of division.

The Gazette of last week professes to be much concerned over a bill that has been introduced in the legislature that will affect the affairs of Pennington county. It need not worry on our account. The object of the bill is to separate the gang from the affairs of Pennington county as soon as possible, and that same issue of the Gazette gave more than one reason why this is desirable.

Receives Gold Medal.

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the St. Hilaire Co operative Creamery held at St. Hilaire Monday, Chas. Gustafson was awarded a gold medal for the long and faithful service he has rendered while connected with that institution for many years past.

Mr. Gustafson has been a member of this creamery association since its organization some ten years ago and has been active in prompting the best interests of that institution. It goes without saying that it would be hard for the patrons of that creamery to find a person, who is more deserving of this honor than Mr. Gustafson.

DAIRYMEN'S CONVENTION

On Wednesday February 1st at the High School Gymnasium.

This Is One of Six Similar Conventions for this Part of Country.

On Wednesday Feb 1st at 10:30 at the high school gymnasium there will be held a dairymen's convention, this being one of the six farmer's institutes planned for this section of country by the college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park. C. O. Carlson of Erskine, the well known dairyman, will have direction of the meeting and State Dairy Commissioner J. Winkler will also be present. Some of the local creamery men have promised to assist with the program. This will make a full day of most valuable and interesting instruction for those persons engaged in the dairy industry. The whole course is free and no one can afford to miss this convention.

At the same time a corn growers association for Upper Minnesota will be organized. There is such an organization in southern Minnesota and it has proved wonderfully successfully and the farmers claim it is a convenient agent in aiding in corn cultivation and improvement. Later a seed corn contest will be held here, and prizes offered. This might take place in March or even earlier.

Every person ought to make it his business to get some one to attend the dairy convention next Wednesday and plan to be on hand the very first minute when the session opens.

Notice

Any one having a claim of any nature against the County Fair Society will please present it before Feb. 1st.

W. H. Akre, Secretary.

Farmers' Course Very Popular.

The farmers' short course being presented every Wednesday in the agricultural department of the high school was opened this week under most auspicious conditions. This work partakes of the nature of extension effort on the part of the college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park and is of great interest and value to the farmers. The next meeting will be a dairy convention and several well-known dairymen will take part in the meeting.

A Book Bindery in T. R. F.

I wish to announce that I have established a bookbindery in T. R. F. and I am ready to do any work you want done in that line.

During my stay here I have heard much talk from people who have books at home that are useless and worthless too on account of broken binding. Such books that they want in their libraries if they knew where to get them rebound. It makes no difference how old and worn out your books may be, let me show you what can be done to them. Many people are saving magazines and papers that contains good reading matter have them bound into beautiful books and place them in your library.

My bindery is at present in my home, 704 Main ave. North where you can find me by calling in person or phone 295 and I will be pleased to call on you for your work. Respectfully yours for business.

Lewis A. Lassesson.

Announcements by the County Superintendent of Schools, Pennington County.

Teachers' examinations that ordinarily would have been held in February have been postponed by order of the state superintendent, and will be held May 4, 5 and 6th.

Teachers holding certificates that expire March 1st, 1911, if they are now engaged in teaching in the county, should write the undersigned County Superintendent at his office in the Auditorium, Thief River Falls, at once so that their certificates may be properly extended to the time of a later examination.

ALL teachers now teaching in the new county of Pennington must file their certificates with the County Superintendent in order to be valid. Please see to this matter at once.

Teachers of schools in the county that are entitled to take state High School examinations, should report at once the number of pupils in their respective schools expecting to take said examinations, in order to provide for the necessary questions. The schools in our County entitled to these examinations are districts No. 25, 29, 37, 54 and No. 154, or any other rural school that may have scholars sufficiently advanced to avail themselves of said examinations.

I will be, until further notice, at my office in the Auditorium at Thief River Falls, on the second and fourth Saturdays of each month. I solicit your inquiries as regards school matters, and will be glad to answer same in person or by correspondence.

Respectfully submitted,
E. A. Mostue,
Co Supt., Pennington Co,

Miss Gertrude Curran, whose marriage takes place January 31st, was given a parcel shower last Friday evening by her many friends at the home of Mrs. John McKinney, a most enjoyable time was had by all present.

E. L. Quist left the latter part of last week for St. Paul where on Monday he was in attendance at the state convention of Register of Deeds. He left for Madison, Wis., where he is spending a few days on business. He will return the latter part of this week.

That much-dreaded but ever prevailing epidemic, "la grippe" has been holding a number of the denizens in its grasp during the past week or so, and if it has missed you so far it will probably not over-look you in the final sum-up. The epidemic has been wide spread, and as a result pretty nearly everyone has a tale to tell you of how rotten they feel.

The Palace Cafe this week has enjoyed a thorough renovation inside which adds materially to its appearance and is as spick and span as fresh paint can make it. Mr. Corbeil believes in giving his patrons the best there is to be gotten and is not only contented to satisfy their "in'erds" with the best of victuals there is but to make the surroundings as agreeable as possible.

Mr. T. A. Fosseum, the Silver Creek saw-mill man, arrived from his Thief River home last Friday to resume work at his logging and milling operations. Mr. Fosseum intends putting in a large stock of logs this winter and as he will install a planer by the opening of the sawing season, he will be in an excellent position to supply the heavy local trade in the building line which will of necessity occur the coming summer.—Northern News.

"The Man On The Box".

Genuine and wholesome comedy such as has been seldom offered since the days of the Augustin Daly companies will be the vogue at the Auditorium on February 8th, when the most conspicuous comedy success of the last twenty years in New York City, "The Man on the Box" dramatized by Grace Livingston Furniss from Harold McGrath's successful book of the same name will be presented.

The story of the play is founded on a joke and is full of genuine comedy and heart interest. It relates that Lieutenant Worburton has seen a young lady on the steamer while returning from Europe, who has won his heart, but to whom he was unable to be introduced. At home in Washington his sister urges him to accompany her to the embassy ball, but he declines. He conceives the idea for a practical joke on his sister, and arranges with the family coachman to take his place on the return from the function with the intention of driving at a reckless speed, making his sister believe that the horses are running away and then finally stopping them and lifting his sister out of the carriage and while in the coachman's livery implanting a hearty kiss upon her cheek. He carries out the program until the carriage calls are made, when he forgets the proper number and delivers the kiss as he had planned, before he realizes the mistake. The consequence is a police cell for the night, with the charges of reckless driving and abduction to face in the morning. With this foundation a capital comedy has been written that is worth going miles to see.

Push Buttons and Door Bells.

The old timers recall readily between shudders the time years ago when making a friendly call they were compelled to stand outside for hours exposed to the 45 below zero weather wearing out their knuckles on a hardwood door just because the family happened to be in some remote corner of the house and did not hear their patter on account of the uproarious wind outside, and as an aftermath of their sad experience were compelled to limp around for weeks afterward with the chillblaines and chronic rheumatism. These days are over, however, and with the trend of time there has been many improvements over the old costumes which to the present generation seems old-foggish, and this is one of them. The door bell and push button has been substituted as a remedy for all this needless suffering with much success, and if there is anybody that has been negligent about having such an apparatus installed in their household this is the proper time to do so.

In view of the ever increasing demand for this everyday useful article Messrs. Pat Mahon and Ole Legvold have formed a partnership and have taken unto themselves a choice collection of the finest door bells and push buttons on the market and with their unquestionable skill as electricians can install these on short notice at a very nominal cost. These gentlemen have the utmost confidence that their venture will prove successful and considering as how, they think, this is the age of push buttons and door bells, anyway, they will be kept awake nights to fill the rapidly increasing orders.

Anybody who should desire to have work of this kind done should at once call on Drs. Mahon and Legvold and they will receive strictly first class work or money refunded.

Enough "Buzz Wagons"

We are told that about fifteen traveling salesmen making this city their headquarters are contemplating the purchase of one automobile each for this coming summer. These, in addition to the many now in evidence here, will make this city well represented by the "buzz wagons".

Was a Fine Attraction.

Shakespere's comedy the "Twelfth Night" was presented last Monday night at the Auditorium theatre to a fair sized audience and has been pronounced by a good many authoritive critics as one of the best shows showing outside of the larger cities. The company was composed of a splendid cast of characters and all did remarkably well in playing the heavy Shakesperean roles. The star feature of the performance was the acting of Yule as Sir Toby Belch. In carrying out the idea of Shakespere's ideal and kindhearted Sir Toby and his love for drink Mr. Yule's acting could hardly be improved upon.

The management of the Auditorium can be congratulated upon securing such clean attractions, altho of course, these attractions are secured at a heavy expense to the management and necessarily must and ought to receive a liberal patronage in order to merit the continuation of these exceptionally fine shows.

Minnesota Editorial Association.

The Forty-fifth Annual Meeting of Minnesota Editorial Association is to be held in St. Paul, Thursday and Friday, Feb. 16 and 17, 1911.

The President of the Association is preparing an attractive program of papers and addresses, which will largely deal with the business interests of the association, and the Ben Franklin system of cost for both job work and advertising will be discussed.

The social features of the convention will be a welcome by the Governor and Mayor, and response by President. Thursday evening a Theatre program for ladies and gentlemen; later a smoke social for men on the Roof Garden of The St. Paul.

The new and elegant hotel, "The St. Paul" will be the headquarters of the association during the convention and business sessions will be held in the city council chambers, beginning promptly at 10:30 Thursday forenoon.

A HELP IN THE HOUSE.

Many a hardworking housewife could ease her labors greatly, as well as save the cost of ice and the fuel used in melting it, did she understand a little more about the cleansing of hard water. It is true that the job can be done after a fashion with washing powders, but much more satisfactory results are had by using one of the several brands of pure concentrated lye. Well water varies in hardness—that is, in the amount of lime it contains—from nearly soft to very hard, and the only way to find out how hard it is and how much lye will be required to cleanse or soften a given amount of it is by doing a little experimenting. The way the water acts with soap gives a good general idea. A level spoonful of powdered lye dissolved in a little warm water and stirred in will cleanse six pails of quite hard water. Should the water be softer a half level tablespoonful of lye may be tried on the same amount of water. If after the lime precipitate has thoroughly settled an application of soap to a little of the cleansed water imparts a milky color, this is evidence that not quite enough lye has been added. When the amount of lye required for cleansing a given amount of water has been determined, future testing of the water will not be necessary, as the water will usually continue quite uniform in the amount of lime it contains. The water will cleanse the more rapidly if it is warmed slightly.

A SENSIBLE SUGGESTION.

Farm, Stock and Home makes a suggestion in a recent issue that has much to commend it to taxpayers and legislators in a number of states. The suggestion had in view taking money received from the sale of state lands and reinvesting it in the developing of these lands, particularly along the line of clearing and making ready for tillage a certain portion of every tract sold and also the building of roads to lands opened up so as to make them accessible to market and in the end when the work was done adding the cost of the improvements to the value of the land in distributed payments and in the case of the roads bonding the township for a period of years to meet the last of the improvements. It was pointed out that one of the chief advantages in this plan would be due to the fact that the real settler, instead of having to borrow private capital at 8 or 10 per cent, could in the manner outlined have the use of state funds at not more than 4 per cent, while the fact that a good share of the tedious work of grubbing the land which would be done in advance would tend to encourage settlement. Captious critics may say that such a plan smacks of paternalism or possibly socialism, but it is sound and sensible notwithstanding, as it has in view giving aid to a large number who need aid.

BENEFITS OF FALL PLOWING.

While spring plowing may be preferable to fall plowing in some sections where small grain follows a tilled crop, the benefits of fall plowing are such that it should be followed in far larger measure than at present. One of the chief of these is the disintegrating and mellowing action of the frost, rain and snow during the winter months—a benefit, by the way, that is too often overlooked. A second advantage of fall plowing not rightly valued by those unacquainted with the habits of many insect pests is that during the fall and winter months the worst foes of the farm crops—the cutworms, white grubs, wireworms, corn root worms, corn ear worms and corn root lice—are in the dormant or pupal stage, and plowing the ground after they are nicely housed against the cold weather not only covers many of them so deep that they never come to light, but exposes others so that they fall victims to their bird enemies or die from exposure to the cold. Moreover, if the land is fall plowed it is possible to work it with the disk much earlier the next spring, which will sprout and kill myriads of weeds.

MONEY IN POPCORN.

As a general thing popcorn yields a little more than half as many bushels as ordinary dent corn and does not bring quite twice as much per pound. A farmer who lives in the popcorn belt in the Mississippi valley, whose yield of popcorn for 1910 we saw reported the other day, harvested an average of 4,000 pounds per acre and received $1.20 per hundredweight, an average return of $48. If it cost him $12 an acre to produce it, and the crop gave him a net return of $36 per acre, which is a very satisfactory revenue. An advantage which growing popcorn has over raising the common varieties of field corn is that the former may be planted a trifle later if necessary and ripen a couple of weeks earlier in the fall, thus escaping damage from frost.

The plump, blocky, sleek coated Doddy or Angus of today seems to be a descendant of the large horned cattle of Scotland and the Norse hornless, while more remotely they trace their lineage to the black Celtic, the brown Belgian or Swiss and the white cattle of the Romans.

If the amount of dairying done on the place is sufficient to justify the purchase of a separator it would seem to have reached an importance which would likewise make advisable the erection of a convenient house where the supply of cream and the separator may be kept. It is sure that the cow stable is no place for it; neither is the corncrib nor kitchen.

While the old fashioned practice of distributing manure by placing it in piles in the field when thrown from the wagon is fast going out of vogue, yet it is still practiced in some localities. It has much to condemn it from the standpoint of a loss of time, and still more because the fertilizing elements leached out by rain and melting snow are very unevenly distributed and a good share virtually wasted. The manure spreader overcomes this difficulty nicely, doing more effective work than is possible by the most effective hand distribution.

The season of the farm institutes is on, and the success of the meetings is quite likely to depend upon the degree of interest manifested by the rank and file in the program of topics arranged. If one isn't acquainted with the best ways of doing things on the farm—those that tend to reduce labor and give cash results—it is his duty to attend the institute session for his own sake. On the other hand, if one is thoroughly posted and can learn nothing from other farmers who may be in attendance he clearly has a duty to perform in telling others of his successful methods, in which case he performs a real service to his fellows.

It is quite possible that the runty pig or pigs are afflicted with worms, in which case it is just a matter of time until they kick the bucket. We saw one of these runts not long since preserved in alcohol, and the sight made it possible to realize why a pig afflicted with worms gets discouraged. The intestines of the specimen in question were literally a solid mass of long stringy white worms, which not only swarmed in the organs mentioned, but had perforated the stomach, the liver and kidneys. A pig in this shape simply starves to death, saying nothing of great distress and pain it suffers while slowly dying. If pigs begin to appear scrubby, look out for worms and give them doses of some reliable vermicide. Better than this is to keep before the pigs at all times a ration of cob charcoal, salt and sulphur, which will prevent the worms from getting a foothold.

If you owe the local paper or some other publication a subscription account it is a pretty good idea to pay it. You may not have definitely ordered the paper, but the law in this connection is that, no matter how the subscription started, you are responsible for payment if you have taken such paper from the postoffice and read it. A subscriber of a paper not far away owed $8 on subscription. He refused payment, and a suit was instituted. At the conclusion of the hearing of the case the editor, the plaintiff in question, was given his claim, while the costs of the action, amounting to about $20, were assessed on and had to be paid by the delinquent subscriber. In this connection it may be in place to say that the way to stop a paper is to pay it up to date and then have the postmaster in the town where the paper is delivered give the publisher the two or three necessary notices, and after this has been done a subscription account is not collectible, no matter how long it runs.

The other day the writer had opportunity to glean a few facts from a northern corn belt farmer, who the past season had forty acres in beets and who realizes the amount of attention which a beet patch of the size requires. It is but fair to say that he had his nerve with him when he tackled so large a proposition. We found that of this tract some land was too low and wet to give satisfactory results, while the highest land in the forty acres was so light and dry that a very poor stand of beets was the result. In spite of these drawbacks he found on "sugaring" off after the last ton of beets was aboard the cars that he had netted $900 on the year's crop or a net return per acre of $22.50. While hard to determine in terms of dollars and cents, it is fair to say that the excellent tilth in which the field was left as a result of growing the beets was of considerable value, while it should also be added that the beet tops which were fed the dairy cows caused them to nearly double in their flow of milk after the topping season started. Next season this same man will select his beet land more carefully, will either tile or cut out the low acres and not plant seed on land which is too dry, and he thinks by following this plan that he can raise as many beets and make just as much money off about twenty acres. Some points in this farmer's experience may well be taken into account by those planning to grow beets next season for the first time.

Kick the Printer

BULLETIN
LATEST NEWS
"BOOM"

In the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., there has been for many years a conspicuous signboard outside an office which reads, "KICK THE PRINTER."

Bibulous persons sometimes go inside to carry out the apparent request, but they discover that the printer is a gentleman by the name of Kick.

In every town there are persons who, if they do not actually feel like kicking the printer—the newspaper man—at any rate do a lot of kicking at the way he conducts his paper.

Please DON'T kick the printer; he is doing the best he can.

And what he does for the town and community, despite his occasional mistakes, may be a great deal more than the kickers themselves are doing. Did THAT ever occur to you?

We are all neighbors in this town. What helps one helps the others. What hurts one hurts the others. Every community is a mutual benefit association, whether organized or just running wild. The printer is a charter member.

If you had no printer—no newspaper—how would you like that? Do you know what happens to towns that don't support a newspaper? Nothing happens. Nothing ever happens in a town like that. As soon as things begin to happen in a town the newspaper comes along and tells about them.

The newspaper boosts the town. It records progress and offers suggestions, by the editor or the readers, as to further progress. Every copy of every issue advertises the town. This is all free advertisement. It costs the town nothing. It costs the people nothing. It is a part of the business.

In view of this fact, which nobody can dispute, it is much better to pat the printer on the shoulder now and then or to speak kindly of him than to kick him.

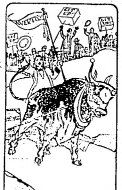
NO; DON'T KICK THE PRINTER.

A Fable For Critics

Once there was an Ox. He was a fine, hefty Ox. He could pull a big load. He never balked, but always liked to go straight ahead.

But the Ox had enemies.

There was the Flea and his whole big Family. "We don't care whether this Ox travels or not," said the Flea and his Folks. "All we want is some of his blood." Whereupon the Fleas eternally pestered the Ox and gave him That Tired Feeling.



Then there was the Tom Cat and his brothers—the Doubting Thomases. "We don't know whether this Ox is going the right way or not," said the Thomases. "Anyhow, we'll scratch his back for him." Whereupon the Felines jumped on the back of the Ox and scratched him for fair, which made the Ox exceedingly sorrowful.

Then there was the Fiste Pup and his Fellow Fistes—a whole litter of Fistes. "We don't care how slow the Ox goes," said the Fistes; "the slower the merrier for us. All we want is to lag behind him and bite his Tail." Whereupon the Fistes snapped continually at the Tail of the Ox, which gave the Ox a mighty mournfulness.

Finally, the Ox, pestered constantly with the Fleas and the Felines and the Fistes, got to looking sickly. He stopped and lay down on his job, and there was no more going forward for him.

KEY TO THE SITUATION: The town is the Ox. The Fleas and the Felines and the Fistes are those citizens who criticise every progressive movement and do everything they can in their petty ways to make the Ox quit pulling in the right direction.

MORAL: Give the Ox a chance to pull. Everybody holler, "Git up!"

Plans Under Way for Establishment of New Transatlantic Steamship Line. Norwegian Storthing Asked to Assist in Erection of Meteorological Observatory—Copenhagen Newspaper Makes Attack on Prince Harald.

SWEDEN.

According to the Stockholm's Dagblad plans are now under way for the establishment of a Swedish steamship line. The two men who have been taking the initiative in this movement are A. Almquist of Gothenborg, who is a prominent merchant in that city, and J. J. O. Bleker of The Hague. Mr. Almquist, upon being interviewed anent the project, states as his belief that it will be impossible for the new company to secure harbor and dock facilities in New York, so that the new line will undoubtedly have its terminus at Montauk Point, L. I. Mr. Almquist claims further that it would cost at least from $2,000 to $4,000 per square foot to get into New York harbor and that owing to the vast amount of shipping which comes in and out of the harbor it would be far more desirable and practicable to use Montauk Point as a landing place. From Montauk Point to New York city there are good railway connections and passengers who would patronize the new line could save several hours' time by going from Montauk Point direct to New York. As it is several hours will transpire before passengers can land. It is also estimated by the managers of the proposed steamship line that they will save lots of coal by landing at Montauk Point. The establishment of the new steamship line will assume national proportions in Sweden. Not only will some of the wealthiest men in the country subscribe for stock in the new company and invest their money in it, but the company will also be in a position to secure the small business man. The proposed capital stock will be 15,000,000 crowns, of which 10,000,000 will be subscribed in Sweden and the remaining 5,000,000 by wealthy Swedish-Americans residing at Montauk, L. I. There is much enthusiasm evinced by leading men all over Sweden for the new project.

Dowager Queen Sofia remembered everyone of her old friends and servants at Drottningholm's palace on Christmas eve. There were fifty servants and friends in all who were remembered. The aged queen makes it a point to inquire into economic conditions of all her servants and if she learns that they are in need of anything they can feel certain that they will be remembered. The good old queen also donated a large consignment of clothes for the orphans at the Samariten orphanage and gave gifts to all the children at the Elsa Borg Orphans' home. She is the greatest benefactor that the poor people of Stockholm have ever had in a royal person.

King Gustaf, while hunting recently, was thrown from his horse and sustained, it is believed, internal injuries in the region of the heart. His physicians state that it may be possible for the monarch to undergo an operation. His condition was somewhat improved when the last messages arrived. The king has not been very strong recently and his mishap has somewhat complicated the situation.

Not less than 100,000 so called children's Christmas flags were sold in Stockholm during the holidays, netting a sum of 9,000 crowns, which will be set aside for the poor children of the city. There was such demand for these flags that there were not enough to go around. It is believed that another Christmas at least 150,000 of them can be sold.

The Swedish Musical society gave a charity concert in the Svea Salen recently for the benefit of the poor, which netted several hundred crowns. There was a large and appreciative audience present and some of the best musical talent of the city contributed to the success of the programme.

Judging from the scores of people who are looking for one job it is evident that work is unusually scarce in Stockholm at present. At a slaughtering establishment a few days ago the first machinist's place was vacant. There were 109 applicants for the position.

Paul Heyse and Professors Kossel and Wallach, German Nobel prize winners, have each donated 5,000 crowns to the various orphans' homes in Stockholm.

Frans Axel Wallin, who has for a great many years been employed on a leading daily in Gothenburg, died a few days ago, aged eighty-six years.

While there is a scarcity of places for common and skilled labor there is plenty of room for teachers throughout the country at the present time.

It is estimated that over 3,000 Swedish-Americans paid a visit to their relatives and friends in Sweden during the recent holidays.

NORWAY.

E. H. Hobe, Norwegian consul at St. Paul, left last week for Christiania to attend a meeting of the Norwegian Steamship company to be held Feb. 15. Mr. Hobe, who is one of the directors of the company, which organized and incorporated last fall, received a cablegram a week ago asking him to be present. He will be away for two months. The Norwegian-American steamship line was brought into life by a great number of Norwegians living in the United States. The company expects to buy three modern passenger steamers, constructed to cross the ocean in ten days, and seven freight steamers. The capital stock, while not completely raised as yet, is expected to be 10,000,000 crowns. Bergen, Norway, and New York will be the terminals of the prospective line.

The well known scientist, Professor Birkeland, wants the storthing to appropriate the sum of 30,000 crowns for the erection of a magnetic-meteorological observatory on the Haddeffjeldet near Kaafiord, in Finmarken. The professor strongly maintains that the erection of such an observatory would prove a gold mine for the scientific professions and that it would be of immense value to the fishing industry of the country. The storthing may not regard it unfavorably and Professor Birkeland may get his wishes gratified. A number of his contemporaries claim, however, that 30,000 crowns will be not nearly enough and that he will need at least 100,000 crowns in order to complete and give such a building its necessary equipments.

The committee appointed some time ago by the city council in Christiania to look into the possibilities of erecting a new postoffice building and a new telegraph and telephone building has sent in its report and estimates that it would entail an expenditure of at least 2,599,000 crowns to erect the two buildings. It may be possible, too, that the storthing will be asked to make an appropriation for this purpose. If this is done it is tolerably certain that they will go ahead with the erection of the two buildings at once.

Among the women who voted at the last municipal election in Christiania was Miss Brager Arendal, who is 100 years old. The old lady is very much interested in politics and split the ticket in many places. She voted entirely in accordance with her own convictions and thus set an admirable example.

From January to September 16,026 Norwegians emigrated from the different harbors in Norway and 3,462 Swedes passed through the same harbors during the same time.

The Socialists in Norway show a gain of 125 since the recent elections. That is, they will be holding 125 offices. They regard this as a singular victory.

DENMARK.

Rev. Mathiessen, editor of the Christian Daily, which is published in Copenhagen, and a promoter whose name is Eiler Schiøler, have been arrested and sentenced to four months' imprisonment for casting aspersions to the effect that Prince Harald has been leading such a dissolute and scandalous life, particularly so far as the prince's personal habits are concerned, as to endanger the moral reputation of the entire Danish royal family. Besides Rev. Mathiessen had been making accusations openly in his paper against Prince Harald's character which were of the gravest nature. The two men who were placed under arrest have already commenced to serve their terms in prison. Rev. Mathiessen, among other things, demanded in his paper that Minister of Justice Zahle should conduct a criminal investigation, which—so the story goes—would seriously have involved the prince. The delicate matter has created no end of gossip in the Danish capital, where the prince is very popular.

Former Minister of Justice P. A. Alberti, who some time ago was sentenced to eight years' servitude for having conducted a gigantic defrauding scheme, which scandalized the whole country, arrived at the jail in Horsens Dec. 20. A large number of people had gathered at the harbor to get a glimpse of one of the world's greatest swindlers. Photographers who had located themselves in a favorable position on the dock were shown away by the police and amidst the greatest silence Alberti was hurried away to jail in an automobile.

An alarming outbreak of foot and mouth disease is reported from various parts of the country and the authorities have issued orders for the slaughter of stock in the affected areas. The war office has called out the various cavalry regiments in order that they may assist the local authorities in drawing cordons around the affected districts. Professor Bang, the chief government veterinary officer, believes that the infection has been brought by gulls from Germany, where it is reported the disease is present on no fewer than 3,500 farms.

The Randers slaughtering establishment was totally destroyed by fire recently, entailing a loss estimated at 250,000 crowns. The establishment was owned by Consul Newgaard. It was an exceedingly valuable plant and has for years been considered a great money producer. About 2,000 head of hogs perished in the fire.

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

FOUR MEET DEATH IN FIRE

Father and Three Children Perish When Freeborn County Farmhouse Is Destroyed.

N. C. Jensen and three children were burned to death in a fire which destroyed the Jensen residence at Riceland, Freeborn county. Mrs. Jensen, carrying a baby in her arms, escaped the flames, as did Esther and Albert Jensen, the former, however, being severely burned. The three children who perished slept in one bed and must have died where they slept. The house is a total loss.

The fire is believed to have been started by the use of gasoline instead of kerosene. Jensen arose early in the morning to start the fire in the kitchen stove. He was not seen afterward. The mother discovered the fire when the house was in flames. She cried to the children to escape and took the baby in her arms and leaped through a window. Esther, eleven years old, and Albert, nine, followed the mother. The frantic woman attempted to return for the three younger children, two, four and six years old, but she was met by a wall of flame and gave up the attempt in despair.

With no clothing or shoes and in the extreme cold the woman set out for a neighbor's for assistance. Wrapping sacks about her feet she set bravely out and in spite of the cold carried the child safely to a neighbor's home, one mile away, and aroused the members of the family who returned with her to the fire. All efforts to rescue the other children were fruitless.

Esther Jensen piloted her younger brother to the neighbor's home, where she was given good care. Later she was taken to a hospital in Albert Lea. She is severely burned and may not recover. Albert escaped without injury. The mother is suffering more from exposure and shock than from the burns she received.

BOY CONVICTED OF MURDER

Duluth Youth Found Guilty in Second Degree.

The jury in the case of Charles Melodrowsky, the sixteen-year-old "boy bandit" on trial at Duluth for killing Policeman Harry A. Chesmore Jan. 6, returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. Second degree murder in Minnesota carries a life sentence only.

Melodrowsky, with his companion, Algot Johnson, about the same age, held up the night clerk and the porter at a Duluth hotel on the morning of Jan. 6, robbing the cash register of about $75.

An hour later they were arrested by Chesmore and were being taken to police headquarters when the murder took place. They were later apprehended at a lumber camp. They confessed to the chief of police.

TWENTY LIVES ENDANGERED

Lodgers in St. Paul Hotel Have Narrow Escapes.

Fire endangered the lives of twenty people in the Hart hotel at St. Paul.

Ora Campeau and Della Campeau, waitresses, were taken down a ladder by firemen from a window ledge on the second floor.

A number of other lodgers jumped from windows of the hotel to the roof of Englin's saloon. They shivered in the cold until firemen took them from this one-story roof by way of ladders to the street.

Lodgers awakened before the hotel became filled with smoke escaped by way of the rear stairs and the front exit.

Proposes Merger of Boards.

Conforming to the recommendations in Governor Eberhart's message that unnecessary and inactive state boards and commissions be abolished Senator Works introduced a bill which creates a board of public lands and transfers to it the powers and duties of the state forestry board, the forestry commission, the board of immigration and the state timber board. Should this bill be enacted into a law, a dozen state appointees will lose their places.

Two Men Mangled by Train.

Fearfully mangled by the pilot of a locomotive the body of a man identified as Albert Hauser was found lying on the Omaha railroad tracks under the high bridge at St. Paul. Not more than 100 feet away another man, whose name is John Saul, was picked up seriously injured, apparently in the same accident. How it occurred the police have not yet been able to ascertain.

Accused Minister Acquitted.

Rev. David C. Lehahn of St. Paul, formerly the president, traveling agent and spiritual adviser for the St. Paul German Hospital association, accused of having misappropriated $795 from the free patient fund, was discharged following a hearing in police court before Judge Hugo Hanft.

MONEY FOR THE UNIVERSITY

Minnesota Board of Regents Asks for $4,500,000.

Appropriations approximating nearly $4,500,000 are asked for in the biennial report of the board of regents of the Minnesota state university as prepared by President Cyrus Northrop, John Lind, president of the board of regents, and Joseph D. Bren, treasurer of the university, compiled by E. B. Johnson for submission to the state legislature.

The regents ask directly for $1,221,200 for the department of agriculture of the university, and recommend for immediate use the appropriation of $1,402,200 for the erection and equipment of buildings.

A half mill tax to supplant the present .23 mill tax also is recommended, as well as the appropriation of $130,000 to make up the present deficit of the university.

GOES TO SUPREME COURT

Government Will Appeal Judge Willard's "Lid" Decision.

An appeal will be taken by the government from the decision of United States District Judge Willard in the Bemidji liquor case. This announcement was made by a member of the Minnesota delegation who has been following the liquor situation closely.

It also is understood President Taft will issue an order before the end of the week annulling all the Indian treaties, so far as the liquor provisions are concerned, save that of 1855, which is involved in the Bemidji case. The treaty of 1855 cannot be annulled save by action of congress. No action of that character will be necessary if Judge Willard's decision is upheld by the supreme court.

MANY DEMOCRATS VOTE FOR CLAPP

Re-Elected United States Senator From Minnesota.

Moses E. Clapp was re-elected United States senator from this state by a vote of 162 of the 183 members of the Minnesota legislature. He received the votes of all the Republican members present and a majority of the votes of the members of other party affiliations.

The Democrats divided their vote, about half of them voting for Clapp. Four senators and nine house members voted for R. T. O'Connor of St. Paul and three senators voted for W. S. Hammond of St. James. The Prohibitionists all voted for Clapp and the lone Socialist member of the house, N. S. Hillman of Two Harbors, cast his vote for Thomas Van Lear, the Socialist who made such a phenomenal run for mayor of Minneapolis last fall.

GAS KILLS FATHER AND SON

Coal Stove Is Blamed for Two Deaths at Litchfield, Minn.

Adolph Carlson, fifty years of age, a painter, and his son Ernest, twelve years of age, were found dead in their home at Litchfield. They evidently had been asphyxiated by gas from a coal stove. Mrs. Carlson was absent on a visit. It is believed the father and son met death two days before their bodies were found.

Would Narrow Country Roads.

About $5,000,000 worth of land is to be restored to the farmers of Minnesota under a bill which was introduced in the house of representatives by J. R. Keefe of North Redwood. Mr. Keefe's plan is to cut the public highways from four rods to three rods, thus giving back to the land owners the extra rod. It is his contention that this rod is not needed in the highway and that all the room required would be provided by the three-rod road.

St. Paul Manufacturer Dead.

Richards Gordon, eighty-two years old, president of Gordon & Ferguson, wholesale furriers and hat manufacturers of St. Paul, died in New Rochelle, N. Y., of old age. His only daughter, Mrs. Catherine Gordon French, the novelist, was at his bedside. Since last May Mr. Gordon has been traveling in California and other states for his health and his daughter has been his constant companion.

Students Welcome New President.

A rousing and hearty reception was accorded Dr. George Edgar Vincent, president elect of the Minnesota state university, when, in the chapel, crowded as it has not been before since the time when the students were addressed by William J. Bryan in the spring of 1907, the new president spoke to the students in eulogy of Dr. Northrop, outlining his own general plans and policies.

Will Investigate Charges.

Charges of gross mismanagement of affairs by the Minnesota state drainage commission, contained in a report to the governor by Anton Schaefer, the retiring public examiner, are to be investigated by the senate committee on public accounts and expenses. This announcement was made following a meeting of the committee after senate adjournment.

SPEAKER NAMES COMMITTEES

Conservatives Get the Best Places in Minnesota House.

The speaker's friends got the best committee assignments in the list announced by Speaker Dunn in the house, just as the lieutenant governor's friends got the best places in the list announced by Mr. Gordon in the senate last week. But the result of following this old rule is that conditions are reversed in the two houses, for in the senate the radicals got the best of it and in the house the best places go to the so called conservatives.

The speaker kept his promise to appoint a county option man at the head of the temperance committee and selected F. L. Palmer of Minneapolis for the place. Palmer, although not a radical county optionist, is known to be committed to this cause.

C. A. Congdon of Duluth heads the committee on reapportionment; R. C. Dunn, taxes and tax laws; L. C. Spooner, appropriations, and W. D. Washburn, railroads. Thomas Kneeland of Minneapolis heads the committee on judiciary and has with him sixteen other attorneys.

TWO CHILDREN CREMATED

Minnesota Man Builds Fire in Kitchen Stove With Fatal Results.

According to information received by Everett Stiles of Fergus Falls, the home of his brother-in-law, E. L. Botts of Frazee, was destroyed by fire which originated from the kitchen stove and two of the Botts children were cremated before their parents' eyes.

Botts went into the kitchen after arising and, building the fire, started for the barn to do the morning chores. He returned in ten minutes to find his home in flames and barely had time to save his wife from the fiery furnace. The children, Estel, a boy aged five, and Charles, a baby, were burned to death while their parents looked on in hopeless agony. A daughter escaped from the burning structure.

CAT GIVES THE ALARM

Saves Mora (Minn.) Man From Perishing in Fire.

F. A. McPherson of the Mora Drug company, who has living apartments over his drug store, was suddenly awakened from his slumber by his faithful house cat jumping onto his bed and scratching his face.

Upon awaking Mr. McPherson found himself nearly overcome by suffocation, the room and building was dense with smoke and only by a miracle was he able to grope his way to an outside stairway and, slightly clad, with the mercury registering 20 below zero, he ran a block to give the alarm of fire.

The stock of drugs and merchandise, although not burned, are worthless from smoke and heat.

FELL ASLEEP ON THE TRACK

Joseph Hammershake Killed by a Passenger Train Near Tracy.

Joseph Hammershake was killed by a passenger train five miles west of Tracy. He had spent the afternoon in the city with a companion. About midnight the two started to walk on the railway track to Garvin, where they had been working during the fall. When within a few miles of there, Hammershake refused to proceed further and his companion left him and went alone the rest of the way. The man evidently fell asleep on the track and was struck soon afterwards by a train and killed. The body was found by section men.

FATAL END TO FAMILY ROW

Boy Shoots and Kills Intoxicated Stepfather.

Because he came home in an intoxicated condition and endeavored to put his wife out of his home, William H. Elias, aged sixty, a resident of Stillwater for thirty years, is dead from a bullet wound and his stepson, George Sears, aged seventeen, is in jail. He alleges that the shooting was accidental, but admits that he pointed his father's 32-caliber revolver at his parent when the latter, returning home in an intoxicated condition, endeavored to put Mrs. Elias out of the house.

Leaps From Minneapolis Bridge.

Losing his balance and once falling back on the roadway of the steel arch bridge at Minneapolis Alfred Marshold, thirty-nine years of age, single, an employe of the Bureau of Engraving, deliberately climbed again upon the railing and plunged headforemost to the river ice. He was unconscious when picked up and died before he could be taken ashore.

Laborer Burned to Death.

An overheated stove in a boxcar on the tracks at Montevideo caused a fire in which two cars were totally destroyed. The cars were used for the Bulgarian laborers who were working for the railroad company there. One of the men went back into the car possibly to get some of his property, and was overcome by the heat and was burned to death.

FUN THAT FAILED.

Mark Twain's Burlesque of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes.

IT SHOCKED THE IMMORTALS.

W. D. Howells' Description of the Dismal Effect of the Humorist's Attempt to Make Game of the Dignified Literary Trio at the Boston Dinner.

In his memories of Mark Twain in Harper's W. D. Howells tells of the dinner in Boston when Mark Twain, with fatal effect, made game of Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes:

"He believed he had been particularly fortunate in his notion for the speech of that evening, and he had worked it out in joyous self reliance. It was the notion of three tramps, three deadbeats, visiting a California mining camp and imposing themselves upon the innocent miners as respectively Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Oliver Wendell Holmes. The humor of the conception must prosper or must fail according to the mood of the hearer, but Clemens felt sure of compelling this to sympathy, and he looked forward to an unparalleled triumph.

"But there were two things that he had not taken into account. One was the species of religious veneration in which these men were held by those nearest them. They were men of extraordinary dignity, of the thing called presence for want of some clearer word, so that no one could well approach them in a personally light or trifling spirit. I do not suppose that anybody more truly valued them or more piously loved them than Clemens himself, but the intoxication of his fancy carried him beyond the bounds of that regard and emboldened him to the other thing which he had not taken into account—namely, the immense hazard of working his fancy out before their faces and expecting them to enter into the delight of it. If neither Emerson nor Longfellow nor Holmes had been there the scheme might possibly have carried, but even this is doubtful.

"I stayed the night with him, and the next morning after a haggard breakfast we drove about, and he made some purchases of bric-a-brac for his house in Hartford, with a soul as far away from bric-a-brac as ever the soul of man was. He went home by an early train, and he lost no time in writing back to the three divine personalities which he had so involuntarily seemed to flout. They all wrote back to him, making it as light for him as they could. I have heard that Emerson was a good deal mystified, and in his sublime forgetfulness asked, 'Who was this gentleman who appeared to think he had offered him some sort of annoyance?' But I am not sure that this is accurate. What I am sure of is that Longfellow a few days after in my study stopped before a photograph of Clemens and said, 'Ah, he is a wag!' and nothing more. Holmes told me, with deep emotion, such as a brother humorist might well feel, that he had not lost an instant in replying to Clemens' letter and assuring him that there had not been the least offense and entreating him never to think of the matter again. 'He said that he was a fool, but he was God's fool.' Holmes quoted from the letter with a true sense of the pathos and humor of the self abasement."

A HELP IN THE HOUSE.

Many a hardworking housewife could ease her labors greatly, as well as save the cost of ice and the fuel used in melting it, did she understand a little more about the cleansing of hard water. It is true that the job can be done after a fashion with washing powders, but much more satisfactory results are had by using one of the several brands of pure concentrated lye. Well water varies in hardness—that is, in the amount of lime it contains—from nearly soft to very hard, and the only way to find out how hard it is and how much lye will be required to cleanse or soften a given amount of it is by doing a little experimenting. The way the water acts with soap gives a good general idea. A level spoonful of powdered lye dissolved in a little warm water and stirred in will cleanse six pails of quite hard water. Should the water be softer a half level tablespoonful of lye may be tried on the same amount of water. If after the lime precipitate has thoroughly settled an application of soap to a little of the cleansed water imparts a milky color, this is evidence that not quite enough lye has been added. When the amount of lye required for cleansing a given amount of water has been determined, future testing of the water will not be necessary, as the water will usually continue quite uniform in the amount of lime it contains. The water will cleanse the more rapidly if it is warmed slightly.

A SENSIBLE SUGGESTION.

Farm, Stock and Home makes a suggestion in a recent issue that has much to commend it to taxpayers and legislators in a number of states. The suggestion had in view taking money received from the sale of state lands and reinvesting it in the developing of these lands, particularly along the line of clearing and making ready for tillage a certain portion of every tract sold and also the building of roads to lands opened up so as to make them accessible to market and in the end when the work was done adding the cost of the improvements to the value of the land in distributed payments and in the case of the roads bonding the township for a period of years to meet the last of the improvements. It was pointed out that one of the chief advantages in this plan would be due to the fact that the real settler, instead of having to borrow private capital at 8 or 10 per cent, could in the manner outlined have the use of state funds at not more than 4 per cent, while the fact that a good share of the tedious work of grubbing the land which would be done in advance would tend to encourage settlement. Captious critics may say that such a plan smacks of paternalism or possibly socialism, but it is sound and sensible notwithstanding, as it has in view giving aid to a large number who need aid.

BENEFITS OF FALL PLOWING.

While spring plowing may be preferable to fall plowing in some sections where small grain follows a tilled crop, the benefits of fall plowing are such that it should be followed in far larger measure than at present. One of the chief of these is the disintegrating and mellowing action of the frost, rain and snow during the winter months—a benefit, by the way, that is too often overlooked. A second advantage of fall plowing not rightly valued by those unacquainted with the habits of many insect pests is that during the fall and winter months the worst foes of the farm crops—the cutworms, white grubs, wireworms, corn root worms, corn ear worms and corn root lice—are in the dormant or pupal stage, and plowing the ground after they are nicely housed against the cold weather not only covers many of them so deep that they never come to light, but exposes others so that they fall victims to their bird enemies or die from exposure to the cold. Moreover, if the land is fall plowed it is possible to work it with the disk much earlier the next spring, which will sprout and kill myriads of weeds.

MONEY IN POPCORN.

As a general thing popcorn yields a little more than half as many bushels as ordinary dent corn and does not bring quite twice as much per pound. A farmer who lives in the popcorn belt in the Mississippi valley, whose yield of popcorn for 1910 we saw reported the other day, harvested an average of 4,000 pounds per acre and received $1.20 per hundredweight, an average return of $48. If it cost him $12 an acre to produce it, and the crop gave him a net return of $36 per acre, which is a very satisfactory revenue. An advantage which growing popcorn has over raising the common varieties of field corn is that the former may be planted a trifle later if necessary and ripen a couple of weeks earlier in the fall, thus escaping damage from frost.

Some one has hit upon the simple plan of tacking pieces of an old rubber boot to the bottoms of the stepladder legs to keep from sliding in slippery places.

While it is better to have quietness prevail in the dairy barn, whistling or singing does not seem to disturb the cows, whereas a curse or rough word will arouse them greatly.

If corn forms a part of the winter poultry ration it is a good idea to feed it the last thing before the fowls go to roost, heated or parched a little so that it will be warm when eaten.

The writer has been having a grippy cold of late, which leads him to express the hope that dumb animals are not afflicted in the same way. We are mighty sorry for them if they are.

It is the experience of a good many that colds are more often contracted through the wearing of too thick underclothing and cooling suddenly while in a perspiration than from wearing undergarments that are too thin.

There is really no economy in feeding a ration that is spoiled, musty or filthy to any of the farm fowls or animals. It may seem the part of thrift at the time, but in the end the practice is pretty sure to result in more harm than good.

Many a sprained wrist, dislocated hip or broken limb might be averted were the precaution taken to scatter a few ashes on the slippery portions of the steps and walks at the back of the house. Now and then the front steps need an application too.

Some time ago the director of the poultry department at Cornell university found he could cure hens of the egg eating habit by feeding them three ounces of beef suet after the first offense and eight ounces after the second. The treatment is said to have been entirely effective.

A pretty good resolution to carry out in this new year is to walk on the sunshiny side of the road. If there is no sunshine on either side it will be a thoughtful thing to scatter a bit in the shape of a cheery word or friendly act. There is enough shadow at best without staying in it needlessly or doing anything that will tend to increase its volume.

If the strawberry bed has not yet been covered and shredded corn fodder can be had there is no better material which can be used. An advantage which it possesses over straw or most other litter is that it is free from weed seeds. The plants are usually injured, if at all, in the thawing and freezing weather of the late winter, so the covering should not be put on soon.

That a good deal of York state land comes a long way from being petered out and useless is plainly shown in a little item which we saw in the Danville (N. Y.) Breeze not long since. It told of a farmer near that place who the past season raised forty acres of red kidney beans, which grossed him a trifle more than $100 per acre. Being a leguminous crop, these beans did not rob the soil, as would have been the case with grain, potatoes, cabbage or onions.

Where it is available and will not melt off before spring snow makes an excellent banking or covering material. This was proved to the writer's entire satisfaction some three years ago when a pile of snow drifted deep on a bed of tender tea roses. It remained until spring, when an inspection showed that the majority had survived the winter, and this notwithstanding the fact that the winter temperatures in which the writer then lived often reached 20 and 30 degrees below zero.

All too rarely does the hog raiser appreciate the full benefit of using brood sows up to the age of six or seven years provided they are producers of good sized litters of healthy pigs. It is little wonder that pigs lack in vitality when they are the offspring of generation after generation of sows that are less than a year old at the time of farrowing. The advantage of the mature sow over the immature is that she has a larger per cent of her sum total vitality and nourishment to give to her young both before and after farrowing.

While a horse will not long remember a blow on the rump, it takes a long time for him to forget a blow on the head. An intelligent, high lifed animal which the writer bought last spring had been handled in the latter fashion evidently, and it was only after months of gentle handling that he would not lift his head with a start when we went into the stall. The fellow who hit this horse with a club or whip, or what not, did in a couple of seconds what it took more than twice as many months to undo. In fact, the harm he did will probably never be fully done away.

Proper cooking will not make a roast from a sixteen year old farrow cow as toothsome as a cut from a two year old Angus steer, but it is an important factor in the preparation of meats for the table whether [illegible] good. [illegible] cuts thoroughly done and [illegible] just right for those who like rarer cuts.

As a rule it is not a commendable policy to select breeding fowls or animals from among those which have been sold as culls at prevailing market prices. Occasionally an individual of some merit may be secured, but the risk is too great to make the experiment worth while.

As a general thing the farmers who are induced to go into the business of growing sugar beets fall short from six to ten tons per acre of getting the yield which the promoters of the sugar factory led them to expect. The land is either too thin, too dry, too wet or too low and never just right.

We ran across a fellow the other day who had become involved in several troubles with his neighbors and would have moved out of the neighborhood had not the fellow he hated the worst been the one who was most anxious to buy his place. This was too much for his Yankee makeup, and he still sticks it out.

A lady friend who has a crimson rambler of remarkable size and thrift has done nothing more along the line of covering it during the past few winters than to place over it an old cellar door. This kept it from thawing and freezing, which is the important thing to guard against in winter covering of outside plants and shrubs.

In buying land anywhere it is a sensible plan to get an opinion as to the worth of it from some person who is not financially interested in the sale of it or who does not own a piece of land in the same neighborhood that he is anxious to find a buyer for. So simple a precaution as this in the matter of land buying would save many a purchaser bitter disappointment and financial loss.

Timothy hay is pretty expensive bedding when it will sell at from $14 to $20 per ton, and yet there is a lot of it being used in this way because of too generous feeding when oat straw would answer just as well and cost but one-fourth as much. The waste in this one item where eight or ten horses are kept would offset the wage of a hired man at $24 per month. It's a leak that ought to be plugged up.

While the manure from an average dairy cow is worth from $18 to $32 a year, provided the manure is used so as to realize its maximum value, this fact should not encourage any dairyman in the keeping of animals which are little more than manure depositors. Better by all odds get cows which will make just as much fertilizer and at the same time give a return in milk and cream which will leave a good margin of profit on hand after their feed bill has been paid.

While the curfew law has much to commend it from the standpoint of practical results, it is a woefully inadequate community substitute for individual parental interest, solicitude and responsibility. Parents who care a continental for their children—boys or girls—will keep them from gadding the streets at night, and they will not need a town bell or gong to remind them of their duty. Parents who haven't cared a continental would better turn over a new leaf and try to give their homes sufficient interest so that their children will prefer to stay at home rather than spend their time elsewhere.

As the silo comes more and more into use in the corn belt primarily for the purpose of providing a succulent ration for the dairy cows an increased interest is being taken in the use of silage as a fattening ration for feeding animals, particularly beeves. If good clover or alfalfa hay is available it will serve to balance the silage and corn which are fed. If not to be had the protein element should be provided in the shape of oil or cottonseed meal, which should be gradually increased in amount until a mature animal is getting about two and a half pounds per day. Silage fed steers fetch just as much as dry fed animals notwithstanding the claim sometimes made that their flesh is not quite so firm.

The postal authorities have lately been rounding up a lot of swindlers who have been using the mails in the disposal of bogus oil, mining and other stocks from which outlandish returns have been promised. In their next roundup it will be well if they landed another numerous company—the tribe of real estate fakers who through false representation are raking in hundreds of thousands of dollars from unsuspecting people for land which never was worth anything and never will be as long as the sun shines. In one case of this kind which came under our notice recently land was palmed off on buyers as ideal for fruit culture when the meteorological records kept at the nearest station showed that the section has frosts most every night in the year. Besides, the [illegible] fruit yield records were [illegible] from [illegible]

VOL. XXVIII THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1911 NUMBER 6

GOV. TO DELIVER ADDRESS

Gov. A. O. Eberhart to Deliver Dedication Address of Lincoln High School.

Dedication on February 20th Will Be Epoch Making Event in History of City.

The date set for the dedication of the Lincoln High School in this city has been set for Monday, February 20th.

Governor Eberhart has been secured to deliver the dedicating address of this splendid building which is one of the finest buildings of its kind in the state, and this ceremonial will be the epoch making event in the city's history.

All of the leading educators in the state as well as parties interested from adjoining towns are extended an invitation to be present and participate in the event.

The full program will be announced in next week's issue.

The Local Telephone.

The meeting of the subscribers of the Erie local last Saturday was well attended. The officers elected for the ensuing year are A. W. Hanson, Pres. Hans H. Fjeld, vice Pres. John T. Lattimore, Secty. Carl O. Elg, Treas. Magnus Lysbakken was elected director for two years instead of of Hans O. Hommy resigned: H. C. Solberg for three years in place of Carl O. Elg, expired, and Bennie Rustad for one year in place of Joe Trenda declared vacant.

It was decided to divide the local into three sections, one including all subscribers west; one all north and one all thru south and east, John Rustad to do the work as soon as possible. O K Homme and Magnus Lysbakken were appointed as a committe to confer with the High Landing people in regard to connecting locals.

Bennie Rustad and Ole G. Lee were appointed a committee to confer with the Hilda people in regard to building a line to that place. Oscar Thoresen, Ole Johnsrud and A. W. Hanson were appointed a committe to see that all lines were properly connected and kept in repair. After voting a 25 cts. per share assessment for running expenses and appointing Hans H. Fjeld, Carl O. Elg and John Tofteland a "rubberneck" committee the meeting adjourned sine die.—Erie Eleven Towns.

Indians May Sell Timber.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Red Lake reservation Indians have received the authorization of the president for the sale of the burned timber on their reservation. This decision, strongly advocated by Representative Steenerson last week, has been conveyed to the superintendent of the reservation with instructions from the Indian affairs office of the interior department to take immediate steps to dispose of the timber.

The department of justice has asked to be heard on Representative Steenerson's bill to authorize the making of a roll of the Indians on the Red Lake reservation by bloods and will be granted a hearing today by the house Indian affairs committee. The department is not entirely satisfied with the way the bill is drawn.

"Fishy" But Good.

Talk about the benefits of advertising. Down in Florida long ago a family lost a child which they supposed had strayed away from home and got lost. After searching in vain for three days the frantic parents placed an advertisement in the nearest newspaper. Imagine the surprise of the parents upon going to the door the next morning to see a monster alligator on the doorstep, where he had disgorged the child alive and then died himself. The "ad" cost them 25 cents and it gave them back their darling child; they sold the alligator hide for $5, and the parents are showing the child in all the dime museums of the land at $50 per week. Does advertising pay?—Ex.

Advertised Letters.

The following is a list of unclaimed letters remaining in the Post Office at Thief River Falls, Minn., for the week ending Jan. 28, 1911, if not called for within two weeks from date will be sent to Dead Letter Office, Washington D. C.

Governor A. O. Eberhart Will Deliver Dedicatory Address of Lincoln High School.

Mileage Claims Allowed.

George H. Mattson, Roseau, travels farther than any of the members of the legislature to participate in law-making for the state, and will collect largest amount for mileage. According to the report of the house committee on mileage, Mattson is credited with 840 miles of travel coming and going. On the allowance of 15 cents a mile, the rate established in pioneer days, he will collect $126. Another long-distance traveler is Donald Robertson of Argyle, who will draw $102 for 680 miles and D. P. O'Neill, Thief River Falls, and Knute S. Aker, Neilsville are allowed each 640 miles and will draw $96.

Secures New Pianist and Singer.

The management of the Lyceum Theatre has secured the services of one L. E. Bowie as pianist and illustrated song singer at their ever popular theatre, who will open his engagement on Monday evening, February 13th. Mr. Bowie is said to possess a splendid baritone voice and is thoroughly experienced in his occupation besides being one of the highest salaried men in that line of business.

The managers have secured a fine attraction for his opening night. Dea Monda, the only lady in the world possessing and using four distinct voices, one of the most unique novelty acts of today, has been secured for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Feb. 13.

Bids Wanted.

Bids for the construction of one concrete abatement and one pier under the old Thief River bridge east of the round house will be received Saturday, February 4th, at 2 o'clock p m at the Co-operative store, Thief River Falls, by the board of superisors of the town of North. The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

Great Ditching Plans on Foot.

Crookston, Minn., Jan. 21.—This year promises renewed activity in drainage work throughout this section. During the past two years work has been pushed on the big general drainage plan affecting Roseau, Marshall and Red Lake counties and a portion of Beltrami county, and work on the main ditches started at that time is rapidly nearing completion, though last fall it became so dry that some of the floating dredges had to suspend operations from lack of water.

As a result of the drainage done, and that planned for the coming year, hundreds of thousands of acres have been converted into the richest of agricultural lands, and fully as much more, which was sufficiently dry on an average season, will now make crops sure on wet seasons as well, and will permit of farm work being started much earlier in the spring on any year.

Surveyor O. L. Hamery of this city reports several big ditching propositions in Marshall and Beltrami counties for the coming year. Judicial Ditch No. 12, which lies mostly in Beltrami county and will empty into Marshall County Ditch No. 2, has just been established. It is forty-three miles in length and in it 524,427 yards of dirt, the moving of which together with the cost of culverts and bridges, is estimated to cost $77,853. The date for the letting of this contract will be announced in a short time. Feb. 3 has been set for the date of the letting of the contract for Judicial Ditch No. 15 at Warren, Marshall county. There were 300,000 yards in this contract and the cost is estimated at $32,000 exclusive of the cost of culverts and bridges.

Marshall County Ditch No. 22, near Radium and Viking, a short ditch, will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000. These are but a few of the new drainage projects definitely decided upon and there will be a great many more, the dry season not in any way having checked sentiment in the line of the necessity of good drainage.—Duluth Herald.

Funeral of Mrs. Storholm.

The funeral services of Mrs. Ellen Storholm were held yesterday afternoon from the Synod church. Olaf Storholm and family of Thief River Falls, Hans Storholm of Stanley, N. D., Mrs. Mikkelson of Holt, Minnesota, and Mrs Robert Mulholland of Marshall, Minnesota were among the relatives who came from a distance to attend the funeral. The pallbearers were C. Swisdahl, Ole Norland, O. Twedten, G. Cornelius, O. Lyngholm and O. L. Hamery.—Crookston Times.

SANGERFEST IN JUNE

Red River Valley Scandinavian Sangerfest to Be Held in City.

From 125 to 150 Singers Are Expected to Participate in Meeting June 23, 24 and 25.

Great preparations are being made by the local Brage Choir for the entertainment of the Red River Valley Scandinavian Sangerfest to be held in this city on June 23rd, 24th and the 25th. This is the second meeting of its kind held by this society and about 125 or 150 singers are expected to participate in this great meeting.

The Sangerfest will take place at the Auditorium, and on the 25th, which falls on Sunday, the meeting will wind up with a grand picnic.

Just how many choirs will participate in this affair is not known as yet, but at present there are five choirs and more are expected to be added before the time.

The choirs, so far, that are on the list are the following:

Apheus, Fargo.

Ljom, Fergus Falls.

Bjarm, Grand Forks.

Viking, Crookston.

Devils Lake Choirs, name not given.

Brage, Thief River Falls.

Particulars as to the program, etc., will be published later.

Railroads Killed 215 Last Year.

St. Paul, Jan. 10.—Railroads of Minnesota killed 215 and injured 1,858 by the movement of trains during the year ending last June, according to a compilation of the reports of the roads by the railroad and warehouse commission. This is an increase of 47 killed and 203 injured, over the figures for the year preceding.

No reason is assigned by the commission for the increase in the number of accidents.

Of the number killed, trespassers constitute by far the largest number, 116. Only one passenger was killed on all roads operating within the state. Forty-seven of the dead were trainmen.

The roads also killed 19 and injured 1,107 by other accidents than those involved in moving trains.

Mrs. F. J. Stebbins goes down to Minneapolis and St. Cloud for a short visit tonight.

Gordon The Winner.

John Gordon, Minneapolis police wrestler, met Wm. Kline, the local mat artist, in a handicap match last Monday evening at the Auditorium and made quick work of the local aspirant for mat honors by throwing him three times in about 15 minutes of actual wrestling. The contest was as good an exhibition as has been seen in this city for some time, and is only a fore runner of a series of similar contests for this city if they are met with sufficient encouragement and support to merit them.

While Kline possesses an unusual amount of strength he was outclassed in science by the giant Minneapolis wrestler who is classed among the top notchers in the wrestling game.

A challenge from Geo. W. Turner, of South Dakota, to the winner of this match was read at the ringside.

Should a match be arranged between Gordon and Turner, people in this city may look forward to an exceptionally good contest.

Special music next Sunday at our regular services. Everybody welcome. Adolph B. Rosland, Pastor.

A CORRECTION.

It is perhaps unnecessary for us to state that it was the printer who made us say the "unfair" court, when referring to the District Court, in announcing the decision in the case of Healy vs. Pennington County. As must have been patent to most of our readers the word "inferior" was what we wrote.

Citizen Papers

Clerk of Court Ives received word from the Immigration and Naturalization Bureau at Washington that books and blanks were being shipped for the purpose of making declaration of intention and naturalizing aliens.

All persons who wish to declare their intention to become a citizen can be accomodated by the clerk any time after this week.

All who wish to take their final citizen papers should call at the clerk's office between February 15th and March 1st, and a special term of the District court will be asked for, for naturalization purposes only about June 1st. All who wish their final papers before next fall should attend at this time.

Steenerson Modifies Bill.

Representative Steenerson has modified his bill authorizing the sale on unsold allotments on townships of the Red Lake Indian reservation to give homestead entrymen who have successfully contested the titles of previous entrymen preference at the sale, provided they pay the amount agreed upon by the original entrymen. Under the act now in force the bill without amendments would have resulted in the sale of the lands at $4 an acre but the interior department feels that they will bring a better price. The amended bill will be given a hearing by the house committee on public lands Wednesday.

German Lutheran Church.

Services at Brooks next Saturday forenoon at 10:30. Services at Thief River Falls Sunday forenoon at 10:30. At the Excel school house Sunday afternoon at 2:30. Sunday school begins at 9:30. F. J. Seitz, Pastor.

Til Saters

Under the auspices of the Brage Singing Choir a play "Til Saters" will be given about the first of March. The proceeds of this play will be used for the purpose of making proper arrangement for the concert to be given in this city on the 23rd, 24th and 25th day of June this year by the Red River Valley Scandinavian Singing Association.

This will be a big gathering and is sure to draw a large number of visitors to our city. We want to receive the visiting choirs from the several cities in the Red River Valley in a fitting manner and anyone who has had experience in similar arrangements knows it takes money to do it, and a whole lot of it. This gathering will not be for the special benefit of any individual or any special society, but rather of general interest to all, and something that lovers of good music will enjoy.

Announcement as to the date for the play "Til Saters" will be given later. This same play was given a few years ago by local talent to a crowded house, it was a success then, it will be even better now, it will be an evening that all who attend will enjoy, besides contributing to give a boost for our city.

The committee in charge of the "Sangerfest" dislike to ask for subscriptions and take this means for raising funds trusting it will be more popular and meet with a ready response.

Creamery Meeting

The annual meeting of the Thief River Falls Co-operative Creamery Association was held at the Antlers Clubrooms.

After a sumptuous dinner had been partaken of served by the United Lutheran Congregation at the expense of the Creamery Association, the members of the association as well as interested outsiders of both farmers and city people repaired to the Antlers Clubrooms at half past one p. m. Meeting was formally called to order by President Christianson with some fitting introductory remarks.

Prof. Hay then was introduced and in his eloquent address paid a high tribute to that industrious class of made in developing the dairy industry tion of the country in their efforts and the progress, which they have farmers who are occupying this sec of this community.

He dwelt also at length on the seemingly good feeling and business relation between the city people and the farmer, which was manifested not only on this occasion but in former years as well.

He doubted very much if any place could be found where such a healthy co-operative spirit existed between city people and country people as right around Thief River Falls.

In appreciation of the farmers hospitality Mr. W. B. Fuller on behalf of the Antlers Club offered their splendid rooms for free use to the farmers, which was heartily applauded by the farmers.

Secretary P. Engelstad read the annual report of the Creamery association, which was adopted. Mr. M. P. Bakken as Treasurer likewise read his report, which was accepted.

Before the election of officers commenced Mr. M. P. Bakken announced that he was not a candidate for reelection.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President, C. Christianson.
Secretary, P. Engelstad.
Treasurer, S. O. Lee.
Directors, R. L. Muzzy and Henry Pope.

I. O. O. F.—Young Pine Lodge No. 221, meet every Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock at hall, corner of LaBree avenue and 2nd street. Visiting brothers invited.

H. A. OHM, N. G.
J. C. BERG, Secretary.

AUDITORIUM

Act I.—"In the Police Court.

"The Man On The Box".

Genuine and wholesome comedy such as has been seldom offered since the days of the Augustin Daly companies will be be vogue at the Auditorium on February 7th, when the most conspicuous comedy success of the last twenty years in New York City, "The Man on the Box" dramatized by Grace Livingston Furniss from Harold McGrath's successful book of the same name will be presented.

The story of the play is founded on a joke and is full of genuine comedy and heart interest. It relates that Lieutenant Worburton has seen a young lady on the steamer while returning from Europe, who has won his heart, but to whom he was unable to be introduced. At home in Washington his sister urges him to accompany her to the embassy ball, but he declines. He conceives the idea for practical joke on his sister, and arranges with the family coachman to take his place on the return from the functio with the intention of drivingat a reckless speed, making his sister believe that the horses are running away and then finally stopping them and lifting his sister out of the carriage and while in the coachman's livery implanting a hearty kiss upon her cheek. He carries out the program until the carriage calls are made, when he forgets the proper number and delivers the kiss as he had planned, before he realizes the mistake. The consequence is a police cell for the night, with the charges of reckless driving and abduction to face in the morning. With this foundation a capital comedy has been written that is worth going miles to see.

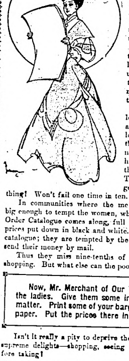
Do You Want to Make The Women Happy?



Shopping by Mail is vastly unsatisfactory to the Female.

There isn't a woman in Christendom—or in Islam—who doesn't prefer ten times over the trip through a store to the trip to the postoffice.

Why, Lord bless their hearts, the ladies love to shop! It's just as unsatisfying and artificial to shop by mail as to make love by mail—and that's the limit.

But, while the women love to walk through aisles of bargains, they love also to read about the bargains. When a newspaper comes to the house, which page does the woman peruse first? The page with the biggest shopping ads. Sure thing! Won't fail one time in ten. Test it and see.

In communities where the merchants don't advertise big enough to tempt the women, what happens? The Mail Order Catalogue comes along, full of attractive ads., with prices put down in black and white. The women read the catalogue; they are tempted by the bargains offered; they send their money by mail.

Thus they miss nine-tenths of the glory and joy of shopping. But what else can the poor ladies do?

Now, Mr. Merchant of Our Town, be good to the ladies. Give them some interesting reading matter. Print some of your bargains in your home paper. Put the prices there in black and white.

Isn't it really a pity to deprive the ladies of one of their supreme delights—shopping, seeing things, inspecting before taking!

BE GOOD TO THE LADIES AND YOU'LL BE PROSPEROUS.

The Magpie Ceiling.

One of the apartments in the ancient royal palace at Cintra, Portugal, is known as the Hall of Magpies. Painted in the arabesque ceiling is to be found a swarm of magpies. Each has in the mouth a scroll, on which, painted in red on a white ground, are the words, "Por bem." The story runs that King John of Portugal was making love to one of the maids of honor in this chamber and was surprised by the queen. His majesty made the best of the circumstances and explained to the queen, "E por bem minka sacre" ("Oh, it is nothing at all. It is quite right. There is no harm in it"). As to whether the queen was satisfied the legend is silent, but the ladies of the court were deeply interested and were constantly saying to one another with a smile, "Por bem! Por bem!" The king thought it time to act, so he commissioned an artist to paint on the ceiling as many magpies as there were talkative ladies about the court, each holding in the beak the ribbon with the words, "Por bem."—London Globe.

Fate of Portugal's Homer.

"The Lusiad" is one of the noblest records ever written of national glory and success. Camoens, its gifted author, determined to do for Portugal what Homer had done for Greece. The great poem was written in the sixteenth century, which has been called the heroic age of Portugal, and its main feature is the rounding of the Cape of Good Hope by Vasco da Gama, while a most interesting episode is the crowning after death of Inez de Castro as queen of Portugal. "The Lusiad" took its name from Lusius, who was said to have founded Lisbon. Its author was born about 1520, and his career, which began brilliantly, was blighted by the death of a broken heart of the lady of his love, for whose sake he was banished from the land. He wrote "The Lusiad" in his banishment and was recalled in 1571, losing on the way all his property except his poem. Pensioned at first by the king, this great epic poet of Portugal died in great poverty in 1570, when his patron was also dead.

Down in a Coal Mine.

To the ear accustomed to the constant sound of a living world the stillness of a coal mine, where the miles of crosscuts and entries and the unyielding walls swallow up all sounds and echo is a silence that is complete, but as one becomes accustomed to the silence through long hours of solitary work sounds become audible, that would escape an ear less trained. The trickling murmur of the gas, the spattering fall of a lump of coal loosened by some mysterious force from a cranny in the wall, the sudden knocking and breaking of a stratum far up in the rock above or the scurry of a rat off somewhere in the darkness strike on the ear loud and startling. The eye, too, becomes trained to penetrate the darkness, but the darkness is so complete that there is a limit—the limit of the rays cast by the pit lamp. —Joseph Husband in Atlantic.

Portuguese and Codfish.

It is an interesting fact that the fishermen of northern Portugal started and developed the fishing industry on the "banks" off the northern coast of America, and, though they now send fewer ships, their taste for salt cod from Newfoundland is unabated—in fact, it is a national Portuguese dainty. It is found in every little grocery shop, hard and brown as a board. A number of Portuguese have made their home on the islands to the south of the mainland of Massachusetts, and there the dark eyes of the Iberian maiden, raven locks and a certain picturesque element in dress are not infrequent. This connection with Portugal dates back many years, the ships of Marthas Vineyard bridging the distance over sea and returning with Portuguese crews.—Exchange.

Adam and Eve.

"I hope this expulsion of ours is not going to injure our social position," said Eve ruefully.

"I guess not," replied Adam. "They can't stop us from being one of the very first families, whatever they do."

"I don't find our names here in the 'Social Register,'" said Eve, looking the volume over.

"Look under 'Dilatory Domiciles,' my love," said Adam as he went out and named the jackass after himself.—Harper's Weekly.

A Pithy Sermon.

Here is the pithiest sermon ever preached: "Our ingress into life is naked and bare, our progress through life is trouble and care, our egress out of it we know not where; but, doing well here, we shall do well there. I could not tell more by preaching a year."

Wanted It Well Hidden.

Little Bobby was too polite to say he wanted a big piece of the turkey, but he said he would like a piece of the chest, where the wishbone was, only he didn't want to find the wishbone too quick.—Browning's Magazine.

It Was This Way.

"I suppose the father gave the bride away."

"Not exactly. He gave a million away and threw her in."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Excluded.

Ascum—Well, well! I congratulate you, old man. And how is the baby to be named? Popley—By my wife's people, it seems.—Exchange.

Long, slow friendship is the best; but slow enmity the deadliest.—Latham.

A Jersey calf of the male persuasion that hasn't sufficient merit to justify his use as a sire should be converted into veal by the time he is ten weeks old.

Some one who has tried it says that scattering concentrated lye in their runways will fix the rats. The stuff gets on their feet and burns them, and they next put their feet to their mouths to lick the lye off, and this finishes them.

A rat trap that works like a charm may be rigged up by sprinkling a couple of handfuls of bran over the surface of half a pailful of water, with some sort of an approach fixed so that the rodents can get into the pail without difficulty. We have seen this tried and know that it works well.

Roughly a horse will eat as much hay per day during the year as it weighs in hundred pounds; hence a horse weighing 1,200 pounds would eat twelve times 365, or 4,380 pounds of hay. This estimate is on the supposition that a fair grain ration is fed. If this were increased or diminished a trifle less or more hay would need to be fed.

In the purchase of cows for the dairy herd the cow is of vastly more importance than the price paid for her. To many men a cow is a cow and one worth no more than another. Yet when you get down to hardpan one cow for dairy purposes may be worth four or five times as much on a cash revenue basis as another that outwardly seems to be as good looking and be cheap at $80 or even $100, where the other wouldn't be worth a cent more than she would fetch as butcher's stock.

The fellow who goes with hair and beard untrimmed, dirt on his neck and in his ears, belongs exactly to the same class as the woman who goes about the house in a dirty, slovenly old wrapper when one neat and clean would not cost a cent more. Both are sinners and should repent—should clean up and try to make themselves as winsome and attractive as possible. A little gumption and the same amount of soap won't remove freckles, cure a hair lip or make over ugly features, but they will go a long way toward making a pretty unlovely individual look clean and presentable.

More boys go to the bad every year because they are not made to feel that they amount to something than from any other cause. The ball is started to rolling when they are little fellows and treated as if they were all round nuisances, and it's kept up until the job is finished. Those who have a hand in this process of degeneration apparently forget that the boys (and girls) are the best asset the country has, not excepting all the blue ribbon winners at the big stock shows. Give the boys something to do and try to cultivate in them a feeling that they amount to something in the busy workaday life and many of them will be saved from failure and utter misery

Kids that are allowed the run of all outdoors will get their hands and faces dirty, but for their own sakes and the reputation of the place they call home they ought to be cleaned up at least once a day and be given an all over warm water bath once or twice a week—twice won't hurt 'em any. We saw some forlorn little heathen the other day that but for the fact that they stood on their hind legs might have been little pigs right out of the pen or kittens from an ash barrel. When the good Lord ordained lye and grease he made soap possible and probably intended when six or eight bars can be had for a quarter that parents should use enough of it to keep their kiddies clean.

There's many a man engaged in tilling the soil who is wont to poke fun at the agricultural college professors and lead pencil farming in general, has got up at 4 a. m. to do chores and has wound up with them at bedtime and has literally grown gray headed at the farming business, who has not up to the present time learned the simplest and most important truth in agriculture—that a fellow can't keep skinning his land year after year in the raising and selling of raw grain products and not have his good acres become destitute and impoverished any more than he can lift himself by pulling on his boot straps or make water run uphill. The fact is if the lead pencil were used by more farmers in simple processes of addition and subtraction in the several lines of farm work there would be more profits on paper and in the bank at the end of the year.

The state of Wisconsin has a law which went into effect Dec. 1 of the present year which makes it unlawful to sell or otherwise transfer any bull, cow or heifer over six months old for other than breeding purposes or to export from the state or slaughter any animals unless the same shall have within a period of two years prior to such sale been tuberculin tested by some competent person approved by the state sanitary live stock board and been found free from tuberculosis. This law, which should be used as a pattern in other states, is supplemented by a state dairy law which makes unlawful the sale of milk and cream from diseased animals. In case the test applied shows animals are affected with tuberculosis the owner on their being slaughtered receives three-fourths of the appraised value, which in no case shall exceed $33, while if no lesions of tuberculosis are found on slaughtering the full appraised value of the carcass is received.

Making a Major.

John Esten Cooke, who went into the war as an enlisted man in a Richmond battery, was soon afterward appointed an officer on the staff of General J. E. B. Stuart. On Stuart's staff, Mr. George Cary Eggleston says in "Recollections of a Varied Life," he distinguished himself by a certain laughing nonchalance under fire and by his eager readiness to undertake Stuart's most perilous missions.

It was in recognition of some specially daring service of that kind that Stuart gave him his promotion. The delightful way in which the great boyish southerner did it is best told in Mr. Eggleston's own words.

"You're about my size, Cooke," Stuart said, "but you're not so broad in the chest."

"Yes, I am," answered Cooke.

"Let's see if you are," said Stuart, taking off his coat as if for a boxing match. "Try that on."

Cooke donned the coat with its three stars on the collar and found it a fit.

"Cut off two of the stars," Stuart commanded, "and wear the coat to Richmond. Tell the people in the war department to make you a major and send you back to me in a hurry. I'll need you tomorrow."

How It Feels to Be Run Over.

"When I was run over," writes a correspondent, "I had not seen the car approaching. The first thing I knew was that I was on the ground, kicking upward with my legs in an effort to get from under the car. Then I felt a wheel going over my chest, which bent as it passed over. In the intervening second or two I went through several minutes' worth of feelings. I had the sensations of astonishment at being on the ground, of wanting to roll aside and away, of bracing myself—and my chest especially—stiff to resist something, whatever it might be, while a lightning flash of fear was dimly there and a subconscious query, 'What on earth next?' Yet it was hardly fear, because there was no time for such a durable sensation. It was rather a sense of being suddenly confronted with a grave reality, of doubtful, obscurely terrible import."—London Chronicle.

Origin of Coal.

Coal is of vegetable origin. When vegetable matter accumulates under water it undergoes a slow process of decomposition, giving off its nitrogen, hydrogen, oxygen and some carbon, the result of which if carried far enough is the formation of a mass of carbon. Peat, found often in swampy tracts, is the first stage in the coal forming process, and the further stages are formed by the burial of these vegetable deposits under great loads of sediment, where they become subject to pressure and sometimes to heat. This effects a series of changes, consolidation and loss of oxygen and gives a series of products whose nature depends on the degree to which the original vegetable matter has been changed. The products are known as lignite, bituminous coal and anthracite coal.

Mixing His Dates.

There is a story of a man who was so transported with joy as he stood up at the altar rail to be married that his thoughts reverted to a day when he stood up at the prisoner's bar in a court of justice to plead "guilty" or "not guilty" to a criminal charge. So powerfully did that, the most painful event of his life, obtrude itself upon his mind that when the clergyman put the question, "Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife?" and so on, the poor distracted bridegroom answered with startling distinctness, "Not guilty, so help me!"—From Tuckerman's "Personal Recollections."

A Stubborn Opening.

The head of the household was going through her husband's pockets the next morning.

"What kept you out so late last night?" she suddenly demanded.

"It was the opening of the campaign, my dear," the lesser half replied.

"Well, it didn't take three corkscrews to open it, did it?"

And she drew the offending articles from his side pocket and waved them before him.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Riot of Ink.

Canon Nicholl used to tell how on one occasion he had visited the famous house of the Thrales in that suburb of London where Dr. Johnson was at home. "Johnson," said the canon in recalling his visit, "had occupied two rooms, and these were left as he last used them. The sight was an extraordinary one, for ink was splashed all over the floor and even on the walls. It was one of the doctor's habits to dip his pen in ink and then shake it."

Teaching the Teacher.

Teacher—Johnny, what part of speech is 'nose'? Johnny—'Tisn't any. Teacher—Ah, but it must be. Johnny—Maybe yours is, because you talk through it, but the only part of speech I've got is my mouth.

Same Old Story.

"Does he pay his alimony promptly?"

"No. He has to be urged and threatened every pay day; but, then, of course, I got used to that when we were living together."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Masculine Perversity.

Men are funny creatures to cater for. A woman will buy the things she wants, but a man will only buy the things he needs.—Exchange.

When the fight begins within himself a man's worth something.—Browning.

The Filial Chinaman.

Many examples of Chinese filial piety strike the occidental reader as ridiculous. There is the famous story of Lao Laitsu, which Mr. R. F. Johnston repeats in his "Lion and Dragon in Northern China." Lao's parents lived to such extreme old age that he was himself a toothless old man while they were both still alive. "Conceiving it his duty to divert their attention from their weight of years and approaching end, he dressed himself up in the clothes of a child and played about in his parents' presence with the object of making them think they were still a young married couple contemplating the innocent gambols of their infant son."

A similar case is that of Wang P'ou, whose mother had an unconquerable dread of thunder and lightning. When she died she was buried in a mountain forest, and thereafter, when a violent thunderstorm occurred, Wang P'ou, heedless of the wind and rain, would hurry to her grave and throw himself to his knees. "I am here to protect you, dear mother," he would say. "Do not be afraid."

Making a Gunstock.

A party of men were out hunting, and an old woodsman who was with them broke his gunstock in some way or other. It was just about nightfall when the accident occurred, and inasmuch as he was very anxious to do some shooting early the next morning he decided to fix up his shooting iron. Finding a walnut fence rail, he set to work. His only tools were an ax and a big pocket knife. All night long he labored vigorously at his task, and by morning the gunstock was finished and back in place and worked like a charm.

"How did you do it?" asked one of the number, greatly surprised.

"Very easy," was this old hunter's reply. "No trouble at all. Just get a piece of wood about the size and kind that you want and then whittle away all that you want whittled away. When you have all the wood cut off that you don't want you have a gunstock."—Kansas City Journal.

The Measure.

The ancient judge sat before the scales of worth.

"Bring forth the royal treasure!" he cried, and the hurrying slaves poured into the huge pan sacks of golden metal, caskets of sparkling gems until it seemed as if all of the wealth of earth were there. Yet the balance never stirred.

"Let the learning of the ages be added," came the order, and tons upon tons of the wisdom of sages, philosophers, scientists and poets was heaped upon the pile. And still the great arm of the scales remained high in air.

"Add now the men of power and high position," said the judge, "and the scale will fall." But all in vain.

"But what is on the other side that outweighs all these?" asked one.

"It is character," said the judge.—Portal.

A Good Sleeper.

Talleyrand used to tell an extraordinary story of the impassiveness of Louis XVIII. When he was minister of foreign affairs a courier came to him one evening bearing unpleasant news, and he therefore postponed the communication of it to the king till next morning, when he explained that he was afraid the tidings might have disturbed his majesty's sleep. The king replied: "Nothing disturbs my sleep, as you may see from this instance. The most dreadful blow of my life was my brother's death. The courier who brought this dreadful news arrived at 8 o'clock in the evening. For many hours I was quite overcome, but at midnight I went to bed and slept my usual eight hours." The story is told by the Duchesse de Dino, Talleyrand's niece, in her memoirs.

Sons of Butchers.

Three of the stained glass windows in the hall of the Butcher Guild, London, contain the portraits of Cardinal Wolsey, William Shakespeare and Daniel Defoe in recognition of their connection with the meat trade.

The cardinal was the son of a "respectable" butcher at Ipswich, in Suffolk, and "the immortal bard" assisted while a youngster a butcher in his native town of Stratford-on-Avon.

Defoe, nowadays known as the author of "Robinson Crusoe," but in his day an adventurer and secret agent of his government, was the son of a butcher in Fore street and a member of the guild.—National Provisioner.

Time, but No Money.

The Mean Thing.

The registration tax on mortgages is altogether unjust. It hits the wrong fellow and adds a further burden on the man who is compelled to borrow money, in additions to fees, commissions etc., which are surely burden enough in themselves.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature to reduce the fees for recording titles under the Lorrens law. This is right. A law should be passed making transfers under the old system illegal.

It is good to hear the expressions of optimism on all sides as to the future of the city and this section of the state.

The farmers have never been so prosperous as at present, and large numbers of farmer residents are returning, satisfied that no section offers greater inducements than this. The large amount of land purchased by farmers during the past season is the best possible indication of their prosperity, and proves they have found farming profitable.

The governments of the United States and Canada have agreed upon a reciprocity treaty, subject to ratification by the legislatures of both countries.

The most important feature of the agreement is the admission of Canadian wheat, and other cereals into this county free; in return for which we may send them manufactured articles. There are many expressions for and against, and the attitute of the Minnesota delegation in congress, may be taken as an index of how the measure is regarded in Country and City.

The representatives from the three cities are in favor of it, while the balance of the delegation are reported to be opposed to it. It is quite noticeable that those who are close to the farmer and the soil are not in favor of it, which, to one who is not familiar with all the terms of the agreement, would indicate that the measure is looked upon as being favorable to the cities at the expense of the country. Prof. Bailey of the North Dakota Agricultural College characterizes it as "monstrously unfair".

Others claim it will mean a drop in the price of wheat, instancing the fact, that there is a difference of from ten to twelve cents a bushel, in the price of wheat at Emerson in Manitoba, and St. Vincent in Minnesota, only four miles apart.

Senator Nelson is reported as saying: "If it is proposed to throw the whole burden upon the farmers of our state and their products. I do not believe they will stand for it. It won't do for the large cities to be too selfish in this matter".

Congressman Steenerson, as usual hits the nail squarely on the head when he says, "This treaty will never do. If farmers of our state are forced to accept free trade on the products they produce let the same rule be applied on the products of the East".

The farmer stood for protection for the manufactures for years, paying protection prices for everything he bought during a period when the tariff on grain was of no value to him. And now, when the tariff is beginning to benefit him, when the price is not regulated to such an extent as formerly by the markets of the world, to remove his protection without a corresponding reduction in the tariff on articles he consumes, does seem to us to be monstrously unfair".

Co-Operative Creamery Had A Large Meeting

Annual Creamery Meeting Held Here Last Saturday Was Well Attended.

Local Institution Makes a Splended Showing For The Past Year.

The annual meeting of the Thief River Falls Co-operative Creamery company was held Saturday. It was preceded by the annual dinner, to which were invited the 125 farmer stockholders as well as the business and professional people of the city. The meeting was the largest ever held by the institution and all expressed their satisfaction at the remarkably prosperous year their enterprise had enjoyed. The report of Secretary Peter Engelstad showed that $61,000 was received during 1910 from the sale of butter and byproducts after expenses were paid. Butterfat brought 33 cents a pound. Buttermilk was sold in this city to the amount of over $600. The months of June, July and August showed a decrease in creamery receipts compared with the same months of the preceding year, but the high price of butter during a part of the remainder of the year made the total receipts greater than in 1909. Many improvements were made in the creamery building proper. The officers elected for the current year wear O. C. Christianson for president and Peter Engelstad for secretary.

Six years ago this creamery was started by the farmers and it has increased its business every year until it is one of the most prized enterprises in this city. It is interesting to know that the year's receipts at this creamery are almost equal to the pay roll for the employes of the big sawmill located in this city and which cuts 40,000,000 feet of lumber during the season.

M. P. Bakken, Treas.

The year just passed has not been a very favorable one for producing an abundant quantity of cow material. June, July and August fell below in the cream receipt this year compared with the corresponding months last year while the winter months show up with a nice little increase over that of last year.

On the other hand it has been a year of exceptionally high prices on butter, and as a consequence the prices paid for butterfat has also been exceptionally high. Our average price 33.81 is certainly a record breaker for this section of the country.

Although the prices of butter at the present time has taken a tumble and is likely to continue low for some time, it is no reason why the dairymen of this part of the country should not plan for improvement in breeding, feeding and present dairy methods, so as to be able to take advantage of the time when the market gets in normal condition.

As usual in former years we found it necessary this year too to expend some money in improving our creamery property. The wooden driveway has been enclosed with a concrete one.

In the engine room quite an extensive improvement has been made. A new boiler was put in and a concrete floor put in.

The creamery board was once figuring on going to the expense of putting in a cement floor in the creamery, but inasmuch as it was already getting late in the fall for an undertaking of such an extensive work we finally decided no to put it up till next year.

Our business is in a splendid condition and hope it will continue so in the future.

On behalf of Board,
P. Engelstad.

SCHOOL NOTES

The date of dedication of the Lincoln School building is set for Monday, Feb. 20th and Governor Eberhardt will deliver the dedicatory address. The full program will be announced in next week's papers. All of the leading educators of the state as well as interested parties in neighboring cities, will be invited. Nothing will be left undone to make this ceremonial an epoch making event in hte city's history.

Illness lays as heavy a toll this winter on membrs of th faculty as it does on the pupils. Substitute teachers have been in constant demand of late.

A teachers' meeting was held in the Lincoln school on Monday afternoon after dismissal.

The teachers give systematic attention to music, note and rote work being judiciously combined from the second grade up. Without a regular teacher of music, it can hardly be expected that the results obtained meet the approval of professional vocalists, but very satisfactory work is being accomplished in most of the rooms. The text books in use are well graded and are considered the best extant.

The tardiness in the High School is being eliminated. It is a singular fact and obtains in all schools, that those students who have long distances to go to school and who have many home duties to perform are invariably the most punctual in attendance.

The children throughout all the grades and in the High School are convinced that, though the physical exercises presented in lieu of intermissions are interesting, nevertheless they are strenuous enough to bring the perspiration.

The janitors start fires in the buildings in the mornings at hours varying from four to six, according to the temperature. When the weather is severe they even keep fires going all night or nearly so. More fuel has been consumed in the furnace during the past six weeks than for any corresponding period in other years.

Children are permitted to bring dinners to school if they have long distances to go or if the weather is inclement. They are required, however, to maintain good order in school during noon hours.

The old high school building consumes almost twice as much fuel as the Lincoln, though its interior capacity is but half that of the new. Each building is heated by its own boiler.

The use of the gymnasium after four, manual training and physical exercises are strong factors in securing the regular attendance at school and the hearty interest in their studies of many boys, who otherwise, might be truants or give trouble to their teachers and parents. Ordinarily, these stirring mischievous boys with strong red blood in their veins make the ablest and most useful men, if their energies can be carefully directed in early years. It is certain they are going to be busy at something every moment. They are not dul lards and should be encouraged and sympathetically controlled rather than repressed. This the local school is attempting to do. How successfully the task is being accomplished, only future years can disclose.

To correct an erroneous impression prevailing in certain quarters, School Notes desires to state that neither public schools, nor anyone associated with them as teacher, has been connected directly or indirectly with athletic contests in this city, outside the Lincoln school gymnasium.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Melissa D. Whitman whose death occurred at her home in this city Jan 21st, 1911 at five o'clock p. m., from a lingering illness of over four years, of Diabetes Melites, was the wife of the late John N. Whitman whose death occurred in this city 8 years ago. Mrs. Whitman was one of the pioneers of Thief River Falls having come here about twenty-seven years ago. Mrs. Whitman was born in East Charleston, Vt. July, 4th, 1832 and was nearly seventy-nine years old. Her maiden name was Mellissa D. Wolcott, a direct decendent of Oliver Wolcott, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. She was married to John N. Whitman in 1849, and is survived by eight children.

E. W. Whitman of Pelican Rapids
Mrs. C. W. McCauley, Kenmare, N. Dakota.
Mrs. C. F. Hughes, Portland Ore.
Mrs. Theo. Farington, Dallas, Ore.
Mrs. F. H. Whitmay, St. Cloud.
John N. Whitman, Excel.
Wm. P. Whitman, Medford Ore.
Mrs. S. Kenison, Thief River Falls.

In October 1899 in this city Mr. and Mrs. Whitman celebrated their Golden Wedding, and besides the family, many of the old friends and neighbors were gathered to extend congratulations and good wishes to the aged couple, who enjoyed the pleasant as well as rare occasion.

After the death of Mr. Whitman, Mrs. Whitman's health gradually failed and for the last four years was an invalid, but she never lost her interest in anything that was for the good of Thief River Falls and its people, her mind being clear and bright until the last.

The funeral took place in the M. E. church of which the deceased was a member; Rev. Smith conducting the services, assisted by Rev. Flesher of Bemidji. The Pall bearers were chosen from the Pioneer residents of the city and were as follows:

M. C. Burns,
M. V. Evenson,
I. C. Richardson,
J. O. Aos,
C. C. Jackson,
Capt. Eberhardt.

The eastbound Soo train that was due here Saturday night failed to put in an appearance until Tuesday morning, having got stalled somewhere in North Dakota. For a time it was expected that the train would be only a few hours late and would be passengers remained at the Warren depot a considerable portion of the night awaiting its arrival. Finally it was given out that the train would reach here early Sunday morning, but when that time arrived, those who went to the station to board it, were informed that it had been annulled. One of the disappointed ones was a gentleman from Stephen, who was on his way to Thief River Falls, in response to a telegram announcing the illness of his daughter, who was teaching school near there. He took the Great Northern for Crookston on Sunday and doubtless arrived at his destination the next morning.—Warren Register.

"Refuse notice". Every editor has received them, says an exchange. The postmaster sends them to the editor. For instance, there is a man by the name of well, say John Jones, who refuses to take his paper out of the postoffice. He did not want it any longer. We wondered what was the matter. Upon investigation of our subscription book we found John was short $5.70, He had stopped his paper as a matter of economy to us. A few evenings ago we stepped into church, and John's melodious voice rang out loud and clear in the soul-stirring song, "Jesus Paid It All". We might have been mistaken, but his earnestness impressed us. The next day we sent him a receipt in full, begging his pardon for not knowing he had made an assignment of his liabilities to the Lord.—Ex.

O'Neil's Bill Passes House.

St. Paul, January 27.—Representative D. P. O'Neil's bill, "An act to amend Section 2,037, Revised Laws of 1905 as amended by Chapter 182 of the Session Laws of 1909, relating to the suppression of forest and prairie fires and for appropriating money for the suppression and prevention of fires", has passed the House.

The feature of the bill is that it places the blame for fires caused by faulty spark arresters directly upon the person, who inspects the arresters.

When it came to a final vote, there was not a dissenting voice, every representative present voting for the measure.

Medical Assn. Met.

The Red River Medical Association held its annual meeting at Crookston last Wednesday evening. The following officers were elected:

G. A. Morley of Crookston, president. Dr. O. F. Melby, Thief River Falls, vice president; Dr. N. F. Norman, Crookston, secretary and treasurer. Dr. M. S. Wattam of Warren was elected delegate to the state medical association, and Dr. Theodore Bratrud of Warren alternate. Following the regular meeting the members had a banquet. Dr. Wilson Randolph read the only paper at the annual meeting.

Hauges Church.

A religious conference will be held by the Trinity congregation of Hauges Synod from 15 to 19 of Feb. This conference will be held at the Swedish Luth. Augustana church commencing at 10.30 A. M. on the 16th. Rev. Berge Olson from Winsor, Minn. will preach the opening sermon. The text for discussion will be Luc. 13, 6. 9. introduced by Rev. S. O. Simonson from St. Paul. Several of the neighboring pastors has promised to be present and we hope for a meeting with showers of blessings.

Please tell your neighbors of this meeting and be present yourself and invite as many as you can to come. All are cordially invited. I. L. Lassesen.

TAKEN HOME FOR BURIAL

Fred Miller, Brother-In-Law of Hemstrought Arrived Here Monday.

Body Was Taken To Owego, N. Y., His Home, For Burial.

Fred Miller, brother-in-law of Theodore Hemstraught, the man who was found dead on a Soo train on January 19th and who has been held at the Torrison Bros.' undertaking parlors in this city pending an inquiry by the local police department as to the whereabouts of his relatives, arrived in the city last Monday morning, and on Monday evening departed with the remains for Owego, N. Y., where it is taken for burial.

This clears up the matter as to the identity of the man and the whereabouts of his home, and ends the hard and persistent work made by the local authorities in trying to get in touch with his relatives.

Hemstrought had up to a short time ago been engaged in the hotel business and was joint proprietor of the new Birdsall Hotel at Owego, New York, in company with his father-in-law and was a telegraph operator by trade. He had left Owego with the intention of going out to California to look up a location.

A letter received by the local police department from Ruddy H. Lowes last Monday stated that he (Lowes) was safe and sound and was at the time of writing, at Coffeeville, Kansas, but the letter does not throw any light on how Hemstrought happened to be traveling on Lowes' ticket. The letter stated that Hemstrought was unknown to him but that he thought he had boarded the same train that he had at Buffalo.

The local authorities have put in some hard and diligent work in getting the matter cleared up in such a short time, and in the manner they have, as the circumstances in the matter were of so conflicting a nature as to make it almost an impossibility to build the foundation of a search on.

The Funniest Thing.

Gentle Reader! Stop and think! What was the funniest thing you ever saw? Perkins once said that the funniest thing he ever saw was just a little bit funnier then what Artemus Ward told about one night when he and Bill Nye were swapping funny stories at a banquet in an eastern metropolis. Bill and Art had wagered a smaller sum of money than the capital stock of the steel trust, that each could tell a funnier story than the other. The bet was to be decided in the presence of three friends, they to be the judges. The friends were each to tell a funny story as a prelude to the big event. The evening came and, and the story telling started promptly on time. The judges each contributed his anecdote and then Artemus and William had their little seance.

But what's the use of repeating history. "Oak Farm" is coming to town and it's so extremely funny that the stories of Billy and Artie would be the most pathetic of pathos in comparison. "Oak Farm" is a three act, rural play, depicting in natural colors the darker hues of life, generated by the desire of a fond father to send the oldest son to college. That's just a brief summing up of the story. The play itself is so awfully funny that if it wasn't for the few bits of dramatic and pathetic fabric in the cloth of the play, you would'nt have enough strength left to order the usher to bring a glass of water. If it wasn't for the funny parts your tears would flow like April showers and that's the one reason why "Oak Farm" is so interesting. The pathetic and the dramatic are so finely blended that it is utterly impossible to distinguish the hair-line that separates them.

The Red Lake Falls Dramatic Club presents this play at the Auditorium on Friday, Feb. 2, and the fact that the members of the club have put in four months of studious practice, is a guarantee that it will be a good play well played. Red Lake Falls people witnessed three performances of the play and then longed for more. St. Hilaire people were enthusiastic enough to pack their opera house on a stormy winter night, just for privilege of enjoying a real hearty laugh. They're still talking and none have found occasion to complain.

WHAT TWO STUDENTS DID.

As showing that the instruction that is given at the agricultural colleges is of a practical and valuable kind may be cited the case of two Minnesota young men. One after finishing his course at the state school took up the raising of potatoes on a scientific scale. On 200 acres, which was a virgin prairie a half dozen years ago, he raised last season (1909) an average of 187 bushels to the acre, from which he realized net $10,000. This year he expected to increase his yield to 200 bushels and to get just as large a net revenue. To do what this young fellow did took brains and hustle. The other graduate of the same institution started five years ago with $500. He went into debt $11,500 for a 240 acre farm. He also had hustle and brains. Now he has property valued at $12,500. In the interval mentioned he has paid $1,000 a year in interest, spent $1,000 on buildings, has pure bred horses, cattle and swine worth $5,000, and he holds that his farm has increased $10 an acre in value, which it must be admitted is a conservative estimate. The book farming he learned at the agricultural college he put to good account, his wheat averaging ten bushels more per acre than his neighbor's, whose soil was just as good. These instances may be termed by some exceptional, yet they show nicely what a fellow can do if he is equipped for his work and takes hold of it with determination.

ONE CAUSE OF HIGH PRICED MEATS.

While the prevailing high prices for all commodities have doubtless been in a large measure due to a price inflation which has been worldwide, there is little question that a very important factor in causing high prices of meats has been due to the rapid cutting up of considerable range areas of the western plain and mountain sites through settlement by homesteaders. This settlement, which is going on more rapidly today than ever, means that the day of the vigorous range sheep and cattle, which were eagerly bought and shipped to points farther east for feeding, is fast passing and that ere long the territory which heretofore has been raising the feed with which to fatten these cattle will also have to breed and rear its own fattening animals. Taking into account that this will have to be done on high priced land, it means that higher prices are bound to prevail for cattle and sheep, whatever fluctuations from month to month may be, due to stockyard receipts. Corn belt should keep this situation in mind and be ready for it.

DO MOLES EAT GRAIN?

There has been considerable discussion over the question whether the mole is entirely an insectivorous animal or whether its bill of fare includes besides insects some grain. To settle this question one of the instructors in the Michigan agricultural college put a mole in a box of fresh earth in which some twenty kernels of corn were placed in four or five places. At the end of thirty-six hours it was found that all of the corn had been searched out and devoured, and there was no getting around the fact that the mole was responsible. This experiment tends to prove the claim of some that when a mole follows a row of corn he is not only after insects which may have been attracted by the presence of the seed, but the seed itself. It is a matter of common observation that when the mole can get all the big, white, juicy grubs he wants he does not seem to care for or molest anything else, but it is more than likely when these are not to be had he goes after other insects and grain if he can locate it.

WATER IN THE HOUSE.

In response to 600 queries sent out by the country life commission a couple of years ago, asking what one thing would be of most interest to farm life from the standpoint of the housewife, some 350 replies mentioned first "water in the house." Considering the distance some farm women have to go for water and the amount of it they have to carry in twenty-four hours, we guess these good housewives hit the nail on the head. The lack is one that ought to be remedied by digging a well nearer the house or moving the house nearer the well. Better than either of these is the installation of a tank and pipe system which will make it possible to have water on tap in the kitchen all the time, while the installation of a galvanized tank connected with a water front in the kitchen stove will mean that hot water will be under faucet all the time, thus doing away with much of the teakettle nuisance. Properly arranged, the same system may be used to furnish water for the stock in the barn.

There are mighty few dogs that are so handsome that the owner is willing to have one of them around his back door and pay from $3 to $5 for the privilege. A number of towns we know have about extinguished the canine tribe by assessing just such a fine. It's a whole lot better than anonymous poison and works automatically.

Where it is possible to do so it is a good idea to place the semi-tropical plants such as the palm, sword fern, sprengeri and cactus as high on the plant stand as possible, this because of the fact that there is a difference of several degrees in a stove heated room between the air three feet and seven feet from the floor. One of the most beautiful and long fronded sword ferns we ever saw was given a high niche, and we do not doubt that the warmer upper air had something to do with its thriftiness.

A postmaster general—if we remember correctly it was John Wanamaker—said that the four chief reasons why a parcels post had not been adopted in this country were the American, Wells Fargo, Adams and United States Express companies, and these same reasons still persist and keep the people of the United States from having a decent parcels service when every other civilized country has the system in successful operation, and some of them more than a century. When the farmers of the country wake up and make a roar they will get what they want, but not before.

Among other means which may be employed to protect the trunks of young fruit trees from the attacks of mice and rabbits whitewash gives excellent results. A recipe for making it recommended by the Ohio experiment station is as follows: Slack one peck of fresh lime with old soapsuds, thin to the consistency of whitewash and stir in one gallon of crude carbolic acid, four pounds of sulphur and one gallon of soft soap. This wash should be applied with a brush and will not only prevent rodents from gnawing the trees, but will kill insects and promote the health of the bark.

Owing to the scarcity of hay very generally through the north central states many a townsman who in years past has fed timothy, clover or alfalfa will have to feed instead shredded corn fodder, which has been put up in extra good condition this season. For the family cow this may be nicely balanced as a milk giving ration by feeding a quart of cornmeal, two quarts of bran and a double handful of oilmeal twice a day. This is sufficient for a cow giving from twelve to fifteen quarts of milk per day. If she is giving less than this the ration should be reduced proportionately. If ensilage is available and the ear corn was not removed when it was put up the same ration will suffice, leaving out the cornmeal.

There are now and then occasions when the circumstances seem to justify one in going to law, but they are few and far between. Especially is this true in equity cases, where property or money is involved and where a settlement could by all odds be best effected by arbitration and compromise. The folly of "lawing" it out willy nilly lies in the fact that before a settlement is effected in the court the chances are that the lawyers will have the bulk of the money or propriy that the litigants are scrapping over. Folks who persist in "lawing" in this way are easy "pickin's" for the legal fraternity and those who contribute most largely toward buying their flour and bacon and footing their coal and electric light bills.

Some experiments which have been conducted the past four years by the Ohio Agriculture college to determine what sized and shaped ears will on the average produce the most corn per acre, while not entirely conclusive, present some interesting facts. First it was found that long ears produced 3.07 bushels per acre more than shorter and deeper kerneled ears; that seed from ears with bare tips produced more corn per acre the first year than from ears that were well filled, but that in succeeding years the seed from well filled ears yielded from 1.5 to 2 bushels per acre more. It was also found during a period of five years that crease dented corn produced 2.84 bushels more per acre than rough dented seed and that seed from a well manured plot produced 2.4 bushels less per acre than seed from an adjoining plot that was not manured at all.

One of the best propositions we noticed listed for sale in a recent auction was a flock of forty bure bred Shropshires. We say best because there was nothing else on the list which put to its best possible use would do so much good to the man who bought it as these sheep. Rightly handled they will give an easier return than any other resource on the farm. For at least seven months in the year they will get their living from the weeds on the farm, which are worse than useless; will convert this into fertilizer, which every farm needs, in much larger quantities than it gets, while the lambs can be finished for market in a comparatively short time. The wool fetches a high price and will add a snug sum to the bank account. It is better to start with twenty sheep than sixty and get experience as one goes along, which if unfavorable doesn't come in as big chunks.

Magnitude of Stars.

The brighter a star is the smaller the number representing its magnitude, and consequently a star of the first magnitude is brighter than one of the second, and one of the second magnitude is two magnitudes brighter than one of the fourth. In the same way stars brighter than the first magnitude can be represented by numbers smaller than one, by decimals, or even by negative numbers. Sirius is of the 1.4 magnitude, Vega of 0.2 magnitude. Our sun is a star of the 26.5 magnitude, and it gives us 10,000,000,000 times as much light as Sirius. If the sun were twice as far away from us as it is it would give only one-quarter as much light. If it were 100,000 times farther off than it is its light would be the same intensity as that of Sirius. But even at this enormous distance the sun would be only about one-sixth as far away as Sirius exactly lies. In other words, Sirius shines with a luster fully thirty times that of our sun.—New York World.

How Fast of Ramadan Begins.

Since the Mohammedan year is composed of lunar months, the beginning of the fast is dependent upon the appearance of the new moon. The word of the almanac is not taken as true evidence, and before the mufti, the highest Moslem official in the nation, declares the fast to have begun two Mohammedans must appear before him and swear that they have seen the new moon. In precisely the same manner the fact comes to a close. The mufti proclaims a three days' feast whenever the next new moon is seen by two of the faithful. One year the moon was visible in upper Egypt the night before it was observed in Cairo. Two Mohammedans up the Nile telegraphed the fact to the mufti, asking him to announce the feast. This he refused to do on the ground that a telegram could not take the place of two Moslem witnesses.—Christian Herald.

Old Daddy Longlegs.

Everybody is well acquainted with the insect called "daddy longlegs," but not everybody knows that there is evidence to show that this strange little creature, towering high upon its threadlike stilts, is probably a more ancient inhabitant of America than any representative of the human species. Far back in tertiary time, at the very dawn of the modern world, its ancestors lived, we are told, in great numbers in that part of the continent which we call Colorado. The fossil remains of these insects show the characteristic features that mark them today, although new species have taken the place of the old, for even "daddy longlegs" knows what evolution is and has attained to something that in his view is perhaps a kind of civilized existence suitable to the exigencies of life in the twentieth century.—Harper's Weekly.

The Hunting of the Tahr.

Of all the ways of hunting surely that of the hillmen of Garhwal is the strangest. This, according to Major the Hon. C. G. Bruce, in "Twenty Years in the Himalayas," is their method of killing the tahr, a local species of goat: "Having driven the tahr into deep nullahs with most precipitous sides, out of which there are certain well known tahr runs, they proceed to cover these runs where the ground is most difficult with mats made of split bamboo which have been previously well drenched in water. The result is the mats freeze and become as slippery as glass. Then they frighten the herd and drive them over these mats, with the result that they are precipitated from the cliffs and that the Garhwali pick up the remains—perhaps twelve basketfuls."

Mostly Hall.

A New Yorker bought one of those fine old colonial places down in Virginia, principally on account of the glowing description of the real estate agent and on information from friends. When he went down to see his mansion he was much impressed by the great pillars, the spacious porch and particularly the great hall running from the front to the back of the house.

He inspected the place and came back to New York.

"What shall you name it?" he was asked.

"I think," he replied, "I shall call it Mostly Hall."—Saturday Evening Post.

Philadelphia Is Not So Slow.

"Mother," said a thoughtful Boston child, "is Philadelphia older than Boston?"

"Of course not, my son. The first settlement was made in Charlestown in 1630, while William Penn did not arrive on the site of Philadelphia until fifty-two years later."

"That was always my impression, mother. How is it, then, that Philadelphia is mentioned in the Bible, while Boston is not?"—Boston Star.

Discovered.

Little Violet was one day examining a beehive, which was new to her. Being disturbed, the bees came out of their hive and one of them stung her. Tears came into her eyes, but she quickly dried them and cried triumphantly:

"Now I know who takes the needles out of mamma's cushion."—Delineator.

Couldn't Bother With Trifles.

"Has your father ever given you any idea what he thinks of me?"

"No. I really don't believe father thinks of you at all. He has so many important things to fill his mind."—Stray Stories.

Why He Wanted References.

At a credit men's dinner one of the veterans told this story: "In the reconstruction days a man from a Mississippi valley town came to our western house one day. We had sold him before in a small way, and he always paid. He had enlarged his business, he told us, and wanted a bigger line than usual, but before making his selections he wanted us to give him references. We expressed surprise at such an unheard of demand, but he said, 'My two brothers-in-law have gone in with me, and they're very particular as to whom they do business with.' So we sent him to our banks, and he came back, said we were all right, picked out a big line of goods, and in sixty days he 'busted.' We couldn't collect a dollar. Two years later I met the man in Cincinnati and told him we had become reconciled to our loss. 'But will you please tell me,' I asked, 'why did you want references as to our credit?' 'Well, you see,' he answered, 'I wanted to know if you could stand it.'"—Exchange.

No Law's Delay Here.

In Perak, in the Malay peninsula, lawyers find no business, for a modified form of trial by ordeal decides all disputes. In place of the legal practitioner the pleader is a native boy who is assigned to one or the other of the sides and is given a bamboo tube in which is sealed the pleading of the person or party whom he represents. When all is ready two stakes are driven into the bed of a stream, and by aid of a bamboo pole the heads of the two boys are submerged at the same time. By grasping the stakes they are enabled to remain under water for quite awhile after their natural inclination would bring them to the surface, but at last one of them gives in and, releasing his hold of the stake, comes to the air. He is immediately seized, and the tube he holds is cast aside. The other lad is led ashore, his tube opened, and the document contained therein stands as the decision in the case.

Scott Relics at Abbotsford.

The present estate of Abbotsford was formed during the years 1811 to 1817 from various small farms, the first one purchased bearing the "inharmonious designation" Clarty Hole. After Sir Walter Scott's death in 1834 a committee of friends collected £8,000 toward the redemption of the estate, and Mr. Cadell, the publisher, contributed the rest on receiving the rights over Scott's works. The library and museum had been given some years before by the creditors. As his son, Lieutenant Colonel W. Scott, died on his way home from India, the property descended to J. R. Lockhart, his son-in-law, and thence to his daughter's husband, J. R. Hope-Scott, whose daughter held the estate for some years. Many Scott relics are preserved in the house, notably his chair and writing table in the study and his hat and gloves in the hall.—London Standard.

Hard For the Eskimos.

One of the difficulties of the Moravian missionaries in Labrador is to make the Old Testament, with its wealth of pastoral detail, intelligible to the Eskimos, not one of whom has ever seen a horse. "Sheep and cattle," says Hesketh Pritchard in "Hunting Camps In Wood and Wilderness," "they cannot realize or conceive of, for there are no domesticated animals save dogs in that portion of the peninsula. They comprehend the story of Esau, the hunter, and that of Samson and the lion, which animal can be translated as polar bear, but of Abraham in the land of Mesopotamia they can form no picture. The nearest approach to these ideas is drawn from the harvest of the sea, seals and fish taking the place of flocks and herds."

Mistletoe a Menace.

Few people who know mistletoe only as a desirable feature of Christmas decorations understand that the plant is a parasite dangerous to the life of trees in the regions in which it grows. It is only a question of time after mistletoe once begins to grow upon a tree before the tree itself will be killed. The parasite saps the life of the infected branches. Fortunately it is of slow growth, taking years to develop to large proportions, but when neglected it invariably ruins all trees it reaches. The only method of extermination is the cutting down of diseased trees.—Exchange.

Two of a Kind.

"I told dat feller I was so flat broke I had to sleep outdoors," said Plodding Pete.

"Did it touch his heart?" asked Meandering Mike.

"No. He said he was doing the same thing an' had to pay de doctor fer tellin' him what a blessin' it was."—Washington Star.

His Kind.

"I heard of a man once who was going to make money hand over fist when he was carried off."

"By death?"

"No; by the police. He was porch climbing."—Baltimore American.

He Was Slow.

"I had not talked to him more than fifteen minutes when he called me an idiot."

"Gee! He didn't violate any speed limit in getting next, did he?"—Boston Post.

Drying Her Tears.

"What do you do when your wife cries?" asked the younger man. "Do you have to give in to her?"

"No," said the older man. "Give her some money."—Buffalo Express.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

INDIAN FOUND NOT GUILTY

Red Man Who Confessed to Committing Murder Freed by Jury—Unwritten Law the Defense.

Bowstring Joe, the Chippewa Indian witness in the murder trial of another Indian, Goggle Eye, at Grand Rapids, who was charged with killing a white man, John Caldwell, several months ago, and who, when called to the stand to testify a few days ago, created a sensation by declaring he himself was the murderer, has been acquitted by the jury.

Goggle Eye was acquitted at once upon the confession of Bowstring and the jury has now acquitted the latter.

Bowstring's manly attitude and the explanation that he killed Caldwell for making improper advances to Mrs. Bowstring prejudiced the jury strongly in his favor.

TO ELECTROCUTE MURDERERS

All Executions to Be at Minnesota State Prison Under New Bill.

Electrocution instead of hanging is proposed as capital punishment in Minnesota by Representative Rufus P. Morton in a bill presented to the house. The board of control is directed to provide a permanent death chamber in the state prison where all executions must be conducted.

The senate committee on finance recommended that authority be given the state to call in $850,000 of new capitol certificates now held by the permanent school fund.

The house passed a bill to appropriate $636,000 for the completion of various buildings for the University of Minnesota and for other purposes.

A monument to mark the grave of the late Governor John A. Johnson is the object of a bill introduced into the senate by Senator H. N. Benson of St. Peter.

RESOLUTION PASSES HOUSE

Provides for Reapportionment on Population Basis.

The Congdon reapportionment resolution passed the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 91 to 19. This is the resolution which is hung up in the senate and which fixes a maximum limit of 63 senators and 126 representatives. The objection to it is based on the fact that it restates the provision of the constitution that reapportionment shall be based on population.

Representative Ole Peterson's bill abolishing road labor taxes and substituting the payment of highway taxes in cash was recommended for passage by the house committee on roads and bridges. This is a reform for which Mr. Peterson has labored ten years.

LONE BANDIT ROBS MANY

Holds Up Sixteen Men in Mill City Negro Club.

A lone negro held up the Richileau club at Minneapolis at the point of a revolver, lining up sixteen men against the wall and securing $300. The Richileau club is a negro resort.

The negro bandit entered the club early in the evening and waited until a large crowd had gathered when, undisguised, he mounted a chair and, drawing a revolver, commanded all to throw up their hands. Then he went through his victims' pockets.

With his booty he backed out of the door.

JUMPS OFF CAB TO DEATH

Breaking of Engine Rod Causes Loss of Fireman's Life.

One man killed and one badly injured resulted from the breaking of a side rod on an engine near Montevideo.

Freight train No. 496 was coming east when the broken rod tore through the engine cab. Charles Whitakle, a brakeman, who was riding in the engine, was badly injured.

Helge Brenden, the fireman, jumped from the engine and struck his head on the frozen ground and soon died.

Governor Johnson Memorial.

The Governor John A. Johnson memorial will be located on the triangular grass plot west of the approach to the main entrance of the state capitol at St. Paul and between Wabasha street and the Capitol drive. The sculptor will be Andrew O'Connor of Paris. Decisions on both these points were reached by the Johnson Memorial commission at a meeting held at the St. Paul Institute.

Street Cars Collide.

Five men were injured, one perhaps fatally, in a head on collision of two street cars of the Minneapolis street railway. The cars came together with great violence, the south bound car crashing through the vestibule of the north bound car and pinning the motorman of the latter, Charles J. Lucier, against the side of the car. He was severely crushed and may die.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

The members of the Red Cross forest fire relief committee have returned to Duluth from Baudette and Spooner, where they held a meeting and acted on fifty cases from outlying points. The committee has expended $65,000 for dwellings, provisions, clothing, hay, feed, medicines, etc. The committee will make its final report to the Red Cross society about March 1.

C. A. Graves of Duluth has been appointed by Governor Eberhart as deputy oil inspector for the counties of St. Louis, Cook, Itasca and Carlton. The appointment of Martin Cole as superintendent of the Duluth branch of the state free employment bureau was also announced. Mr. Cole is a seaman and has been in charge of a tug in Duluth harbor.

The Minnesota Federation of Commercial Clubs, in session at St. Paul, elected the following officers: D. M. Neill, Red Wing, president; F. E. Wade, Fairmont, first vice president; Andrew Davis, Elk River, second vice president; A. G. Wedge, Bemidji, third vice president; Frank J. Moyat, Minneapolis, treasurer; J. C. Van Hul, St. Paul, secretary.

With the impressive consecration services of the Episcopal church Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston, who since 1903 has been rector of St. Paul's church at Minneapolis, was made bishop of the Eastern diocese of Oklahoma. Adding dignity to the ceremony were twelve bishops of the church from various dioceses of the country.

A complete appraisement of the estate of the late Mrs. Mahala Fiske Pillsbury, widow of John S. Pillsbury, was filed in probate court at Minneapolis showing the estate to be worth $788,752, of which $542,686.31 is in personal property. The inheritance tax has not been estimated.

Articles of incorporation of the St. Paul Newsboys' association were filed with Julius Schmahl, secretary of state. The association has a membership of fifty and has a balance of $1,200. The immediate purpose of the club is to obtain temporary winter quarters.

A fierce telephone war is raging at Sauk Center, with both sides confident of success. The Northwestern Telephone Exchange company, it is said, will not reduce the rates recently increased 50 cents on every phone and citizens say they will take out their phones.

Because a Duluth ordinance forbids whistling in the city limits the parents of Marie Mattson, who died from injuries received when hit by a train, may sue the city for damages. It is claimed the railroad cannot be held liable because of the ordinance.

A great Minnesota corn and grain exhibition for January, 1912, with something like $30,000 for prizes, is the plan of A. D. Wilson, head of the extension division of the Minnesota College of Agriculture.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

While working on the railroad bridge at Lanesboro the bridge builders discovered the dead body of a man on the rocks below. The body was identified as that of John Svendseid, a bachelor farmer of the Highland neighborhood, south of Lanesboro. It is believed that in trying to cross the bridge he fell through to his death.

Anton Ladley, marshal at St. Bonifacius, Lake Minnetonka, was shot in the leg when he pursued two safe crackers after they had blown the postoffice safe. The robbers secured $250 in stamps and $150 in currency, escaping after a fusilade of shots. Marshal Ladley is not dangerously injured.

John P. Kennedy, Sr., for four years editor of the Labor Review, a weekly paper supported by organized labor in Minneapolis, has been indicted by the Hennepin county grand jury, the charge being grand larceny in the second degree.

August Wendt, forty-five years old, was instantly killed by being caught in the belting of machinery in the new hog killing house of Swift & Co., South St. Paul.

Marie Mattson, the Duluth telephone operator who was hit by a train and who was not found until the next morning, is dead. She did not recover consciousness.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

Mrs. Mina Krueger of Janesville, who had just recovered from a recent operation at a Mankato hospital for gall stones and who was preparing to leave the hospital, dropped dead from a sudden attack of heart failure while she was walking across the floor.

Notice was received at Fergus Falls of the death of Mrs. Listoe, wife of Consul General Listoe, who represents the United States at Rotterdam, Holland. Mr. and Mrs. Listoe were among the first settlers of Fergus Falls.

David Shatto, for the last forty years a resident of Maywood, has begun, at the age of eighty-two years, to cut his third set of teeth. He is still vigorous and retains full use of his mental faculties.

Haskell Fischbain, aged sixty-three, since 1880 a resident of St. Paul, well known and highly esteemed in business and social circles, died suddenly from ptomaine poisoning.

SENATE KILLS RESOLUTION

Reapportionment Plan Loses in Minnesota Upper House.

Legislative reapportionment is as dead as the vote of the Minnesota state senate can make it. By a vote of 22 to 39 the senators declared as plainly as possible that they will not consent to legislating themselves out of office two years ahead of time. The vote was on the resolution by Senator George P. Wilson, reported to pass by the reapportionment committee. It merely fixed a maximum limit of 63 senators and 126 representatives.

No senator voting against the resolution even suggested that there should be a larger membership. The "no" votes came from men who do not want reapportionment at all and will vote to kill any proposition of the kind that comes up.

Thorough investigation of charges against the work of the state drainage commission, which has been in prospect for some time, will be undertaken by a subcommittee of the house committee on drainage.

YEGGMEN ROB TWO SAFES

Secure $1,080 in Minneapolis and Make Their Escape.

Yeggmen cracked two safes in Minneapolis, obtaining $800 at the Dewey theater and $280 from the office of John H. Constantine, a contractor and builder.

Entrance to the Dewey was gained through the roof. In the safe were the receipts of the Saturday evening and Sunday performances. The nitroglycerin tore open the safe and damaged the interior of the playhouse.

The offices of Mr. Constantine, directly across the street, were opened with skeleton keys. The safe was an old fashioned affair, opening with a huge key. The yeggmen pried open the door of this with a crowbar.

WALKER DEPUTY SHERIFF KILLED

Shot by Man for Whom He Had Warrant.

While endeavoring to serve a warrant on Charles H. Smith, caretaker at the summer home of A. W. Morris of St. Louis, located near Walker, this state, Deputy Sheriff Harry McCabe was shot and fatally injured. He died as a result of the wound while en route to a Bemidji hospital and in his dying statement accused Smith of the crime.

He stated in order to quiet the suspicions of the Smiths, who have been accused of petty thievery, that he walked to the Morris home three miles from the city, instructing Mike Mountbriand, a local livery man, to follow with a team.

As the deputy sheriff entered the Morris home he found Mrs. Smith guarding the door with a rifle. This McCabe took away from her. He later placed handcuffs on her wrists and endeavored to make a search of the premises for goods which were supposed to have been stolen and concealed there.

As he entered one of the side rooms Smith, who had been hiding in it, shot him with a sawed off shotgun, the charge taking effect in McCabe's abdomen.

DULUTH YOUTHS SENTENCED

One Given Life and the Other Thirty Years.

Charles Melodrowski will spend the rest of his life in Stillwater prison and Algot Johnson will spend thirty years there for the shooting of Officer Harry Chesmore of the Duluth police department when they escaped from the officer on a street car on the morning of Jan. 6.

Justice moved quickly in this case. Just twenty-two days after the crime had been committed the two boy bandits who held up the night clerk and porter of the McKay hotel, bound them to posts, rifled the cash register and later, in an attempt to escape, shot and killed the officer, have been tried, found guilty and sentenced.

DULUTH PIONEER IS DEAD

Captain C. H. Green Settled in Zenith City in 1871.

Captain C. H. Green, eighty-five years of age, is dead at Duluth. He was born in Hamburg, Germany, in 1825. As a sailor he circled the globe five times. Captain Green served in the signal corps on the Cumberland of the British navy during the Crimean war. He is survived by four daughters and three sons. Captain Green visited San Francisco when it was a hamlet and has made Duluth his home since 1871. He spoke ten languages.

Minneapolis Murder Mystery.

Another murder mystery developed for the Minneapolis police department to solve in the finding of the mutilated body of a man probably sixty years old near Glenwood Park, two blocks beyond the city limits. The body was found in a small clump of timber, and, according to the coroner, had been there for several weeks. The body was mutilated and the head crushed in.

TIDINGS FROM SCANDINAVIA

Interesting News From Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

PRAISE FOR SWEDISH ATHLETES

President of American League Tells Countrymen to Watch Out for Swedes in Stockholm Olympian Games—Economic Conditions in Norway Improving—Prominent Danish Magazine Publisher Dead.

SWEDEN.

"Watch out for Sweden in the Olympian games at Stockholm next year," said Everett C. Brown, president of the Amateur Athletic Union of America, a few days ago, previous to his starting for New York to attend a meeting of some of the United States representatives to the Olympiad. "The native sons have gone out for the world's championship with 'blood in their eye,' and with the training they will have, added to the natural ability they displayed in London in 1908, they are going to cut considerable figure in Stockholm. I do not want to be accused of lack of patriotism, or anything like that, because of my statement, but my aim is to warn the athletes of this country that they will have to be up and doing every minute of the time if they want to figure at the top in the final count, for Sweden is going to leave nothing undone to turn the trick. As a starter, the government is back of the movement by which Ernie Hjertberg, formerly coach of the New York Irish-American Athletic club, has been secured to train the Swedish athletes and he has been given free rein in the work. At present he is engaged in scouring the entire country for athletes from all stages of life and every time he lands a man who looks like a 'comer' he puts that individual to work with a promise of a place on the Olympic team if he shows enough class. Hjertberg has nothing to do but attend to this work, and, as it was his team, the Irish-Americans, which piled up the greatest total points at London, it is only reasonable to suppose that he can make a good showing next year, considering the material he will have at his disposal."

Count Albert Ehrensvard, the new minister of Sweden to the United States, arrived in Washington recently. Count Ehrensvard succeeds Herman Lagerkrantz, who resigned last summer. The new minister comes to Washington from the courts at Brussels and The Hague, where he has represented his government as minister during the last two years. Prior to his diplomatic service in Belgium and The Netherlands Count Ehrensvard was an official of the supreme court at Stockholm. He is a brother of the present secretary of the navy of Sweden.

Baron Cederstrom, the aeronaut, is working hard to start an aeronautic company in Stockholm. His intention is to purchase an aeroplane or two and open a flying school in the vicinity of Stockholm. Thus far it has been almost impossible for the baron to interest any of the wealthy Stockholmians in the venture, which they seem to regard as something of a rather hazardous and uncertain nature. Baron Cederstrom is determined, however, and says that if he cannot raise the necessary capital in his own country that he can secure it in Germany.

The Swedish archaeologist, Birger Lundell, recently came into possession of a memorandum book used by Eric XIV. of Sweden. The book was not supposed to have much value and was purchased for a trifle along with some other rubbish. It contains notes and memoranda made in King Eric's own handwriting. Eric XIV. was a son of Gustaf Vasa and an uncle of Gustavus Adolphus, the hero of the Thirty Years' war. He was king of Sweden from 1560 to 1568 and was deposed.

With the increase in the number of automobiles the number of accidents have also increased. Last year there were not less than 133 automobile accidents, of which seven terminated fatally. In spite of the fact that the laws regulating the speed of the autos in Stockholm is exceedingly strict the number of accidents have increased instead of diminished.

Although the spiritual condition of the state church of Sweden is not what it should be, according to Lutheran Church Review, the foreign missionary board has recently appropriated 9,000 rubees for the erection of a school building at Pudakota, in Southern India. As long as the mission spirit lives, adds the paper, the church has lots of life to itself.

It is a noteworthy fact that some industries are moving away from Stockholm. The last to move was the Swedish Metal Works company, which has erected a new plant at Vesteras.

According to recent advices from Shanghai the Chinese government has appointed A. W. H Heidenstam as engineer in chief of the government dam at Hoangho.

The thirteenth meeting of the General Lutheran conference will be held at Upsala in August, 1911.

NORWAY.

The Tidens Tegn says: "It is a significant fact that times are improving in Norway. Economic conditions show a vast improvement during the last five years and there is not a man or woman who wishes to work that will not agree that this is so. Both in country and city living conditions are greatly improved and we hear little or no complaint in any section. The country districts have never been as well off in Norway as they are today and they are satisfied with their condition, in spite of the fact that we hear agents from America make their claims to the contrary. A feeling is beginning to evince itself all over the country that it pays to work, that it actually yields financial reward. That, by the way, was a feeling which was not prevalent a few years ago. We are approaching a better and a happier era and our people both in country and city are commencing to feel satisfied with their condition. That bodes well for the future."

There is nothing overlooked in the restoration work which is going on at Trondhjem cathedral. The latest news from Trondhjem is that prominent men, not only in that city but also in Christiania and in other parts of the country, have recently proposed that the altar table of the cathedral, which was taken as a booty of war by the Swedes in the Seven Years' war, be bought back from Sweden and placed in its original position. At the present time it is kept in the Koping church. Bishop Bang is in favor of offering $27,000 for the sacred relic. The government would undoubtedly be willing to pay that sum and more, too, if necessary, to restore it to the place where it originally belonged.

The official report of the election held in Christiania on Dec. 1 has been made. There were 93,000 votes cast from a population of 244,000. Twenty-eight years ago there were only 1,343 votes cast from a population about one-half as large as at present. In 1907 the total vote was 69,753. Women can vote in Christiania and it was in 1907 that they for the first time outnumbered the men, having cast 36,130 votes, while the men had only 33,623 votes. At the last election women cast 54,000 votes, while the men cast 39,000. This goes to prove that there is no country in the world where democracy is making such rapid progress as in Norway.

Because Sweden has agitated so vigorously against participating in the Christiania exposition in 1912 Consul Axel Heiberg, in a lecture before the Christiania Polytechnic society, recommends that the exposition be postponed until 1920. Consul Heiberg is the president of the National Norwegian Forestry association. He also advances as an argument that the Danes would find it to their advantage to participate in the Baltic exposition at Malmo in 1914 and that under all circumstances it would be best for Norway to postpone the whole matter until 1920.

Bergen is increasing in population at a rather significant rate. The population of that city is 76,919. In 1900 it was only 66,000. This is a pretty good showing for a Norwegian city, whose increase in population is rather slow in comparison with cities of other countries. It must be borne in mind that emigration has been sapping the country of thousands every year.

Holiday trade in Christiania had not been so brisk for many years as it was during the recent season. There is undeniably more money in the country, and, so far as Christiania is concerned, the conditions among the poor has improved vastly. The holiday trade was the briskest on record for the past ten years, according to the Aftenposten.

A recent landslide at Haga, on the Drammen river, carried ten acres of ground and a barn into the river. With the exception of one horse, the stock in the barn was all lost.

Twenty thousand tons of herring were shipped to Sweden, Germany and Denmark last year. In 1906 there were only 2,000 tons shipped to the same countries.

DENMARK.

Elfride Fibiger, who for a number of years has been publishing a magazine for women, died a few days ago, aged seventy-eight years. She was also an author of note and had written a great deal of interesting things regarding Danish women. Nearly all her books have dealt with problems of interest to women.

In Aalborg and vicinity automobiles are not permitted to run after dark. A number of accidents happened in that neighborhood for which chauffeurs and owners of automobiles were directly responsible and now the authorities will not permit them to be used after dark, under penalty of a heavy fine.

The medical course at the Copenhagen university is this year an unusually severe one. It is estimated that by the time the tests are finished only about twenty out of a total of seventy three will be able to stand the examination and receive their diplomas.

They are working hard in Denmark at present to try and establish a money lottery, the proceeds of which shall go for the erection of a royal speakers' stand in Copenhagen. By means of the lottery it is estimated that over one million crowns can be collected.

Not less than 65,000 Christmas trees were shipped from Copenhagen for the holidays this year.

FOREIGN NEWS.

India is arming and the British government is seriously alarmed at the outlook. The recent seizure of thousands of modern rifles, being smuggled into India, the bloody battles which have been fought with gun runners in the Persian gulf, in which a score or more of British bluejackets have lost their lives, are but the outward manifestations of a thoroughly organized and widespread conspiracy to arm the dissatisfied Indians and ultimately to rise against the British government.

Messages from Asiatic Turkey say that the rebellious Turks and Arabs in the Yemen vilayet are determined to found an independent kingdom and have already established a provisional government and are levying taxes. There is grave fear that the uprising will result in a renewal of the recent massacres of Armenians and other Christians.

More than one hundred soldiers were killed in a three days' battle between the Mexican federal troops and insurrectos in the mountains between Ojingo and Chichillo Parado. The government troops were caught in a trap and were literally mowed down by the storm of bullets which swept their ranks from three directions.

The New York Herald prints a special dispatch from Ceiba, Honduras, via wireless to Key West, saying that Ceiba fell into the hands of the Bonilla revolutionists after a day of desperate infantry and artillery fighting. Ten are said to be dead and many wounded.

The scope of the reciprocity agreement between the United States and Canada came as a surprise to the British public. No one had expected so many changes to the free list or such important tariff reductions as the details of the proposed measure revealed.

Twelve anarchists, convicted of conspiracy against the throne and the lives of the imperial family, were executed in the prison at Tokio, Japan. Those put to death included the alleged ringleader, Denjiro Kotoku, and his wife.

Sir Charles Dilke, aged sixty-eight, Liberal member of parliament, holder of many government offices and one of the wealthiest mine owners of Great Britain, died suddenly of heart failure.

THE DEATH RECORD.

Captain Charles Barr, the famous American skipper, died suddenly of heart disease at Southampton, Eng. Barr sailed the yachts Reliance and Columbia when they successfully defended America's cup.

Police Inspector James McCafferty, for many years head of the detective bureau of the New York police force and well known to police officials in every corner of the country, is dead.

Mrs. Ella Knowles Haskell, aged fifty-four years, the foremost woman lawyer in Montana, is dead at Butte. She was successful in her practice and leaves a fortune.

Right Rev. Robert Atwill, Protestant Episcopal bishop of Western Missouri, is dead at Kansas City after an illness of several months.

Time was not many years ago when cotton seed was considered a virtually useless byproduct of the cotton raising industry. Today, in addition to furnishing enormous quantities of oil used for various commercial purposes, the seed is ground into meal, which contains a considerably larger protein content than flaxseed meal and costs about the same per ton.

Many a street laborer looks with longing at the brownstone front and wishes he were the owner of it, while the owner of the same brownstone front, with health knocked out by the strain and tension of business cares, would probably give a small fortune for the appetite and zest with which the laborer consumes his midday lunch of bread and meat.

Now and then a lawyer may be the instrument of getting a fellow into trouble. As often, if consulted, he may make it possible for one to avoid a good deal of trouble. In the above we have in mind referring to a good lawyer contracts or other legal instruments involving obligations to be assumed. Such advice may cost several dollars, but it may save as many hundred.

During 1910 the federal fish commission distributed 3,233,632,572 fish and fish eggs, which exceeds the record of the previous year by 4 per cent. Of this total 433,177,000 eggs and 7,425 fish were delivered to several state fish commissions, and [illegible] salmon and trout eggs were shipped to France, Japan and Argentina. The report shows that the commercial fisheries of the country represent an investment of about $55,000,000, while the value of the output for the year is placed at $62,000,000.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

Reports of the state drainage commission on work done in Minnesota from Aug. 1, 1898, to Aug. 1, 1910, have been placed in the hands of the legislature. The commission estimates Minnesota had originally 10,000,000 acres of swamp lands, too wet in their natural condition for agricultural purposes. This vast area, comprising about one-fifth of the land of the state, is fast being transformed from swamp lands to productive farms. Conservative estimates place the total area reclaimed during 1909 and 1910 at 1,500,000 acres.

The average cost of current government for the year in twenty-three cities in Minnesota having a population of 5,000 or more was $10.93 a person. In addition to this amount an average of $5.05 per capita was expended for permanent improvements, making the total cost of municipal government $15.98 a person. The chief item of public cost was for protection of life and property as exercised by the fire and police service and the municipal courts.

Representative Hammond of Minnesota was elected a member of the committee on ways and means at the party caucus held at Washington for the purpose of perfecting the organization of the house in the Sixty-second congress. This place will give Mr. Hammond a voice in the framing of the tariff bill which the Democrats will present to the new congress.

W. F. Schilling of Northfield, who has been at the head of the State Dairymen's association the past two years, was re-elected at the Litchfield convention. Other officers elected were: Vice president, Andrew French, Plainview; second vice president, Charles Nelson, Rosendale; secretary, F. D. Currie, Nicollet; treasurer, J. M. Jack, Stanton.

Representative Knute Knutson has presented a bill in the legislature regulating the carrying of firearms which contains the following provision: "No person who has partaken of any intoxicating liquors shall, on the day he has so partaken of such intoxicating liquors, carry or otherwise use any long range rifle."

The governor has announced the following reappointments: A. L. Sackett, St. Peter, and C. F. McDonald, St. Cloud, Soldiers' home board; G. H. McNair, Cloquet, highway commissioner.

The annual meeting of the Southern Minnesota Horticultural society, covering the counties of Fillmore, Mower, Steele and Freeborn, was held at Albert Lea last week.

In the last five years fire insurance rates in the state have decreased 2.1 per cent, making a saving of $681,000 to the people of Minnesota.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Falling from a scaffold into a vat of boiling water in the hog killing department of Swift & Co.'s packing plant Albert Leininger, city assessor of South St. Paul, had a miraculous escape from death. Fortunately he was not completely immersed, as he managed to alight on his feet, but his lower limbs were badly scalded and he was burned about the body in his attempt to extricate himself. It is feared both limbs will have to be amputated.

The two men killed by a Minneapolis and St. Louis freight train near St. Louis Park have been identified as Rudolph Kroc and James Havel, both of Hopkins. Kroc was married and had three children. Havel, who was single, boarded with him. Both men were employed by the Monitor plow works at St. Louis Park and were on their way to work when they were run down by a train in the darkness and fog.

Alex Tybora, aged eighteen, son of Frank Tybora, a Winona merchant, was run over and instantly killed by a freight train. He was looking for coal in the train with a flour sack and evidently became caught in the automatic hopper of a gondola coal car.

William B. H. Taggart, a freight brakeman, running out of Austin, was killed in the yards at Wells. From letters found on the body it appears that his mother and aunt are living at Shanandoah, Pa.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

John Geonen of Shakopee, eighty years old, who was visiting his son at St. Paul, was found dead in his bed. Mr. Goenen was one of the oldest settlers in Shakopee. For many years he drove the stage between St. Paul and Shakopee. He is said to be the first German who went to live in Shakopee, having operated the ferry across the Minnesota river when he had few except Indians for passengers.

Gertrude McGoroty, aged twenty-one, was found dead in bed at her home in St. Paul with the gas turned on. The girl's parents say they are sure her death was accidental, declaring that they know of no reason why she should have taken her life.

George Oliver, a pioneer of Lakeland, Washington county, is dead. He was seventy-five years of age and a member of Company B of the famous First Minnesota volunteer infantry.

Andrew Olson, former chairman of the board of county commissioners of Washington county, is dead at the age of seventy-two.

A HELP IN THE HOUSE.

Many a hardworking housewife could ease her labors greatly, as well as save the cost of ice and the fuel used in melting it, did she understand a little more about the cleansing of hard water. It is true that the job can be done after a fashion with washing powders, but much more satisfactory results are had by using one of the several brands of pure concentrated lye. Well water varies in hardness—that is, in the amount of lime it contains—from nearly soft to very hard, and the only way to find out how hard it is and how much lye will be required to cleanse or soften a given amount of it is by doing a little experimenting. The way the water acts with soap gives a good general idea. A level spoonful of powdered lye dissolved in a little warm water and stirred in will cleanse six pails of quite hard water. Should the water be softer a half level tablespoonful of lye may be tried on the same amount of water. If after the lime precipitate has thoroughly settled an application of soap to a little of the cleansed water imparts a milky color, this is evidence that not quite enough lye has been added. When the amount of lye required for cleansing a given amount of water has been determined, future testing of the water will not be necessary, as the water will usually continue quite uniform in the amount of lime it contains. The water will cleanse the more rapidly if it is warmed slightly.

A SENSIBLE SUGGESTION.

Farm, Stock and Home makes a suggestion in a recent issue that has much to commend it to taxpayers and legislators in a number of states. The suggestion had in view taking money received from the sale of state lands and reinvesting it in the developing of these lands, particularly along the line of clearing and making ready for tillage a certain portion of every tract sold and also the building of roads to lands opened up so as to make them accessible to market and in the end when the work was done adding the cost of the improvements to the value of the land in distributed payments and in the case of the roads bonding the township for a period of years to meet the last of the improvements. It was pointed out that one of the chief advantages in this plan would be due to the fact that the real settler, instead of having to borrow private capital at 8 or 10 per cent, could in the manner outlined have the use of state funds at not more than 4 per cent, while the fact that a good share of the tedious work of grubbing the land which would be done in advance would tend to encourage settlement. Captious critics may say that such a plan smacks of paternalism or possibly socialism, but it is sound and sensible notwithstanding, as it has in view giving aid to a large number who need aid.

BENEFITS OF FALL PLOWING.

While spring plowing may be preferable to fall plowing in some sections where small grain follows a tilled crop, the benefits of fall plowing are such that it should be followed in far larger measure than at present. One of the chief of these is the disintegrating and mellowing action of the frost, rain and snow during the winter months—a benefit, by the way, that is too often overlooked. A second advantage of fall plowing not rightly valued by those unacquainted with the habits of many insect pests is that during the fall and winter months the worst foes of the farm crops—the cutworms, white grubs, wireworms, corn root worms, corn ear worms and corn root lice—are in the dormant or pupal stage, and plowing the ground after they are nicely housed against the cold weather not only covers many of them so deep that they never come to light, but exposes others so that they fall victims to their bird enemies or die from exposure to the cold. Moreover, if the land is fall plowed it is possible to work it with the disk much earlier the next spring, which will sprout and kill myriads of weeds.

MONEY IN POPCORN.

As a general thing popcorn yields a little more than half as many bushels as ordinary dent corn and does not bring quite twice as much per pound. A farmer who lives in the popcorn belt in the Mississippi valley, whose yield of popcorn for 1910 we saw reported the other day, harvested an average of 4,000 pounds per acre and received $1.20 per hundredweight, an average return of $48. If it cost him $12 an acre to produce it, and the crop gave him a net return of $36 per acre, which is a very satisfactory revenue. An advantage which growing popcorn has over raising the common varieties of field corn is that the former may be planted a trifle later if necessary and ripen a couple of weeks earlier in the fall, thus escaping damage from frost.

Cement makes an excellent pen or stable floor, but a generous supply of bedding should be used to offset coldness and a tendency to dampness.

A bright farm housewife whom we read of the other day has hit upon the idea of using her vacuum cleaner for currying the Shetland ponies on the place.

The cedar or cypress hedge has none too much to commend it from the artistic point of view when carefully trimmed. When neglected it is a decidedly scraggly, useless proposition.

The federal government has taken a hand lately in a movement to stop the sale of impure food in some eastern cities. As a result bad eggs, known to the trade as "rots and spots," have tumbled in price from about $2 to 25 cents a case. It was found that these were used quite generally in the manufacture of confectionery and bake shop stuff.

Arbitration as a means of settling neighborhood differences and disputes does not give to either party that "get even" type of satisfaction that one of them might feel in the event of a lawsuit, but there is no getting around the fact that it promotes neighborliness and good feeling in the long run and does not entail such a heavy toll in the matter of court and attorneys' fees.

There is just one kind of proposition that is more costly to finance than a red automobile, and that is an ill advised case in justice or district court where a greedy lawyer or two have got hold of the steering gear. It is a mighty well to do fellow that can afford this type of entertainment, and even such a one will do well to have all of his real estate listed in his wife's name.

There may be times when it seems worth while trying to save a few dollars a month in the hire of a man who is to do nothing but operate a manure spreader, but it is folly usually to attempt it in the case of the man who is to care for and milk the dairy cows, as the loss in milk and butter fat due to carelessness and rough treatment will usually offset many times the amount saved in the wages of the man.

Rarely if ever do you see a father, whether tiller of the soil, merchant or day laborer, who has taken time from his pressing duties to take an interest in his boy and share in his sports who is later called upon to "give the boy his time"—that is, virtually renounce the responsibilities of a father toward him. Seldom even in such cases is the fault entirely with the parent, but naturally as the elder he is fairly chargeable with the larger measure of responsibility, and time was probably when he failed in his duty to the boy along the lines suggested.

The proper place for little girls up to eighteen years of age who want to develop into pure, winsome and estimable women is at home with their folks when night comes and not on the streets, unless some specific errand calls them thither. Many a tragedy too pitiful for print, with heartbreak and heartache, would be spared if mothers would take this simple precaution with their daughters and were daughters on their part sensible enough to appreciate the wisdom of it. And the place for boys who want to grow into clean, manly men is also at home when night comes, and for the same reasons.

The writer inspected the contents of a box of Pacific coast fruit the other day that was sure an eye opener in view of the packing standards that are supposed to be in vogue with the most progressive western apple growers' associations. The fruit in question was odd sized, bruised, wormy and much of it positively runty, fit only for hog feed. Of course it is the unusual scarcity of apples that made possible the transportation of this kind of fruit 2,000 miles, and yet we seriously question if the profit accruing to the boxer and shipper of this "truck" will not be more than offset by the ill repute which will be attached to Pacific coast fruits as a class as a result.

The machine cornhusker still seems to be in the experimental stage—that is, it has not developed as yet to a point where it will work with entire satisfaction under the varied weather conditions which are likely to exist at husking time. If the soil is dry, the corn sound and well matured, there is little more to be desired. On the other hand, if wet weather prevails at harvest time, the field is muddy, husks are damp and cob butts soft and spongy the machine husker comes a long way from being satisfactory, and it is usually retired for the more tedious hand method. As regards the relative cost of husking by the two methods the Iowa station has compiled some figures that are interesting. Figuring repairs and depreciation of a $225 machine at 12 per cent and interest on investment at 6 per cent, the cost of machine maintenance was $58.50 per year. The labor of two men and a boy was put at $5 per day, and at this figure the husking of a 100 acre field which yielded at the rate of sixty-five bushels per acre, requiring eighteen days, cost $90, making the total cost of machine husking $148.50. Husking this 6,500 bushels of corn at 3 cents per bushel would come to $195. An advantage of the machine husker, aside from greater economy, was that the job could be done in less time. A drawback noted was that it left the leaves and husks in bad condition for forage.

WILL DISCUSS THE PLAN

Commercial Club Will Discuss The Commission Plan For City at Next Meeting.

It Will Only Require Discussion To Be Adopted.

At its next meeting which will be held on Friday evening, Feb. 17 the Commercial Club will bring up for discussion, commission form of municipal government for Thief River Falls.

This form of government has been tried in various cities and has been crowned with success and it only requires discussion for it to be adopted.

Wm. McKenzie Buried Saturday.

Last Friday morning at the St. Vincent hospital at Crookston occurred the death of William McKenzie of this city from rheumatism and tuberculosis. Deceased has made his home in this city, having arrived here from Ontario several years ago, and had up to the time of his illness been employed by the Tri-State Telephone company in this city.

He was taken to the hospital at Crookston last October.

The funeral was held last Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Crookston.

He has a brother residing in this city.

John F. Meier Dead.

News of the death of John F. Meier which occurred the 25th of January at his home in Star City, Saskatchewan, Canada, was received by relatives in this city recently. Mr. Meier had been ill for a long time. Deceased was a former resident of this city.

The Printer Must Live.

The Litchfield Independent says the Northwestern Printer, in common with a number of other country papers, has recently been running a series of advertisements for a Chicago mail order house. This step was taken because of the short sightedness of local merchants in refusing to use sufficient advertising space to give the editor a living. No town can afford to have its editor fill his columns with the advertising of mail order houses, but the publisher must live, if not from patronage then from what he can secure elsewhere.—St. Cloud Times.

Tipping and the Car Portercrats.

If the news had come that the negro porters who perform the sacred rite of hitting people on the back with the butt of a whiskbroom, had secured control of the Pullman Company, not much surprise would have been manifested. But the news that the Pullman porters have asked for a raise in wages because they cannot live on what they receive causes much mental unrest. Every mean man who has watched a porter's face light up with pleasure when he was handed a dollar, and who has watched that same face express bewilderment, chagrin, disappointment and anguish when its owner was asked to give back seventy five cents, has held the thought that every porter was a multi-millionaire in disguise and that he wielded the brush-butt and inflicted an imitation shine because of eccentricity. Booker T. Washington, asked his opinion on tipping, gave an answer that would have delighted the Delphic oracle. "If the wages are too low, tipping should be continued", says this educator. But why in the name of the nine gods and the seven sacred hills of Rome the Pullman Company, after charging first-class hotel rates for an ill-ventilated, jerky, uncomfortable sleeping shelf, should expect the public to pay the tanned chambermaid in addition—well, that is something that seems to have been born without being fathered by reason.—Human Life.

Creamery At Oklee.

At a meeting held at Oklee last Wednesday a creamery association was organized with about 60 stockholders and more coming. Requisite money was subscribed, a lot purchased, and officers chosen: Ole Lee, President, Walter Anderson, Secretary, and it is practically assured that the able supervision and experience of William Lauritzon will be secured as Buttermaker and also to supervise the construction of the installation of the machinery.—Plummer Pioneer.

House Burned During Blizzard.

The house of Tom Bjorke, clerk of the Town of North, was totally destroyed by fire during the severe blizzard Wednesday of last week.

The fire in some manner started overhead, presumably from the chimney, and the flames were so impelled by the strong wind that any attempt to smother them proved futual.

The loss is keenly felt, especially coming as it does this time of the year, and as there was no insurance.

Poet to Poetess

Doc. Bixby, the plump poet of Nebraska, has favorably reviewed the verses of his sister poetess, Maurine Hathaway of Minnesota. Doc says:

I like the way you write, Maurine,
Of tender heart and lips,
But when I try this old machine,
On verse like that it slips.
I, too, have visions recondite
That drive away dull cares,
But Mollie will not let me write
About old love affairs.
I do not dare submit to rhymes
The romance far away,
But this fat heart's been broke more times
Than I would care to say.

While the doctor was penning these few lines and chasing the rhyme book for a word to go with "Maurine", a book agent broke into his study and held him spellbound for one hour. He now has a Yale lock on the door.—A. J. R., in Minneapolis Journal.

The above rhyme is dedicated to Maurine Hathaway of this city. It was "Embers" a book in prose, of which she is the author that is directly responsible for this poetic inspiration of the venerable "Doc".

Holt Items.

Andrew Bjerk went down to Thief River Falls last week for the purpose of purchasing an ox, but came back empty harded as there was nary an one to be gotten.

Dissolves Partnership.

A deal was perfected last Saturday whereby Carl Engell disposed of his interests in the Lyceum Theatre and henceforth the popular play house will be under the management of Henry Eyde and Hans Engell. Mr. Engell is undecided, as yet, as to what he will engage in in the future but may decide to engage in that business elsewhere.

Mr. Eyde has severed his connection with the Langseth Merc. Co's store and will devote his entire time to the business.

Mixed Metaphors.

(By A. W. Clark)

It is said that the democrats in the senate have lined up solidly Against Reapportionment: Well! aint it the "against" party?

A democrat in the legislature is like a bull in a china shop,—he buries his head in the sand and tries to reverse the rules of common sense.

If the mountain don't come to the farm boy, the farm boy will go to the city: wisdom did not die with Mohammet.

All the brains the democrat party ever had in Minnesota was buried in St. Peter two years ago; there is nothing left now but the jackass.

The best way to lift the drudgery of farm life into the field of art is to keep a hired girl.

The legislators are puzzling over "How to beat the Constitution:" "What's the Constitution between friends."

And now state engineer Ralph is to be investigated: Wonder if he has let the Steal culvert men play off both ends against the middle?

If God had anything to do in creating parties, He must have made the jackass to fill up a vacuum.

Your Uncle did keep his boy on the farm till the chain broke.

Trying to work horse sense into an average senator is like putting a chestnut burr under the tail of a Trogan horse expecting a frolic,—there's nothing doin'.

The city man goes to the country to get fresh air and things; the countryman goes to the city to get fresh too.

The "Democratic Wagon" is making great progress in the senate with the jackass hitched to the "hinend".

Now don't break your necks telling how you like this stuph; just knock the editor crazy by shelling out your beans. He'll get wise.

Cannon and Lorimer seem to have discovered the meat the jackass doth feed upon.

Reapportionment is a far cry when the brewery wagon heaves in sight of democratic headquarters.

Rollie has quit fighting long enough to break out the roads.

The editor has nothing to do with this hot stuph; it's your Uncle's own invention and he stands ready to answer before the bar of judgment when called that it is void of malice. If you like it, just give the editor a bunch.

The only thing the democrats ever did for the country was to try to bu'st it up.

As the month went out our heifer came in and butter dropped four cents a pound. And people wonder "why the boy leaves the farm."

From a farmer's point of view, free trade with Canada is like blowing up the granary to kill the rats.

What will happen when the jackass pulls out the tailboard?

The average high school girl is wondering these days "how it is going to fit."

When your Uncle bets on a democrat he always puts a copper on the chips.

It is hinted that our republican senators are not averse to prodding the jackass to save their jobs.

Did Not Arrive.

The North Star College basket ball team of Warren, who were scheduled to play a game with the high school quint of this city last Friday evening failed to show up, owing to the belated condition of the Wheatline train, which was some six hours late in arriving here that evening. This was to have been the opening athletic contest in the new Lincoln high school gymnasium. Whether a later game will be arranged, is not known as yet.

Crookston Press May Enter Daily Field.

The many friends of the journalism thruout the County will be glad to know that Chas. W. Latta, editor of the Crookston press, is contemplating starting a daily in the spring.

His plans for the venture are not quite ready as yet, but he informs us that it is nearly an assured fact. Those who have kept up with the progress made by the Press since it got into the hands of Mr. Latta only a short time ago will know that he is well qualified to get out a live and wide awake daily. And it would be well to have a daily in Crookston that would have some facility in getting news from its territory without clipping from other newspapers, like the Times is doing daily as more than half of it is clipped and not credited, from the county weeklies, and such methods will not be tolerated for any length of time. Here is wishing Brother Latta all the success he deserves in his venture—The Fertile Journal.

BIG DAIRY MEETING

Dairy Meeting Held In This City Last Week Was Well Attended.

The Corn Growers Assn. of Upper Minnesota Organized At This Meeting.

In spite of the disagreeable weather conditions a dairy convention was held in the gymnasium of the Lincoln high school Wednesday of last week and was fairly well attended.

Many braved the fierce blizzard and drove many miles to be present at the meeting.

The meeting was in charge of C. Smith, an institute worker. Joel G. Winkjer, state dairy and food commissioner was present and delivered an interesting and instructive address, as also did D. P. O'Neill who came up from St. Paul and was present at the meeting.

At the close of the meeting the organization of the Corn Growers Assn. of Upper Minnesota was perfected and the following officers were elected;

President—Henry Pope
Secretary—W. C. Spratt
Treasurer—Chas. Gustafson

A seed corn contest was decided upon to be held in this city some time in March and a liberal number of prizes will be offered.

Hauges Church.

A religious conference will be held by the Trinity congregation of Hauges Synod from 16 to 19 of Feb. This conference will be held at the Swedish Luth. Augustana church commencing at 10:30 a. m. on the 16th. Rev. Bergo Olson from Winsor, Minn., will preach the opening sermon. The text for discussion will be Luc. 13, 6, 9, introduced by Rev. S. O. Simonson from St. Paul. Several of the neighboring pastors have promised to be present and we hope for a meeting with showers of blessings.

Please tell your neighbors of this meeting and be present yourself and invite as many as you can to come. All are cordially invited. I. L. Lassason.

Mrs. Frank Mousley and children returned last Monday from Litchfield this state, where they went the first of last week to visit with Mrs. Mousley's parents.

School Notes

Bishop Morrison, of Duluth, and Rev. Jones, of Crookston, made the Lincoln school a visit on Tuesday afternoon. The gentlemen expressed surprise at the size of the enrollment and at the modern facilities and equipment of the building. The students were treated to a brief but eloquent address by the Bishop.

The board of education at its last meeting gave the old high school building the name of "Washington." This was to avoid confusion in having two schools known as high schools. All the buildings are now known by titles of one name each, which makes for brevity and convenience. They are the Lincoln, Mechanical, Washington, Knox and Central.

A farmers' institute will be held at the Lincoln gymnasium next Wednesday at 11 a. m. Professor Tombave, of the College of Agriculture, will preside. He is known as the state's stock expert and will surely bring to his audience something of interest and value. Mr. Charles Gustafson, of this city, than whom there is no better dairy stock man in this section of country, will relate his experiences with breeding and feeding. Dr. Newell, the veterinary surgeon, has also been secured to address the farmers on contagious diseases and how to prevent them. This trio ought to be able to make this meeting of great value to any person owning stock of any kind. Everybody is cordially invited. The date is Wednesday, Feb. 15th.

The dedicatory program cannot be announced until next week, as it appears impossible to secure the attendance at one time of all those throughout the state who are interested in this event.

Supt. J. H. Hay delivers an address on "Making for Citizenship" before the North Central Teachers' Association at Bemidji next Friday.

New shades are being hung in the Lincoln this week. The floors are also being oiled, so visitors hereafter will find the building in good order.

Cards are in the hands of all the grades teachers, on which is recorded the temperature of the several rooms at hour periods. The health of the pupils is of more consequence than their mental training. Given the former and the studies will be easily cared for.

The program attachment in Lincoln ring warning and class bells. It also cut out the bells at four and and on Saturdays and Sundays. This automatic arrangement of bell ringing prevents any waste of time and compels promptness on the part of both teachers and pupils.

It is the modern idea to extend the use of a school building to those who cannot properly be classed as day students. This may be for civic purposes, for gymnastic work or for amusement proper. A gymnasium is the best place for young men to spend their evenings, if it is equipped with facilities for instruction and amusement and under proper supervision. The local high school gym ought to be so used. The young men of the city are deserving and worthy of it.

Although it may be a bit contradictory, it is probably true that those who enter exhibits in grain, poultry or stock shows and get inferior prizes or none whatever derive more benefit from the exhibition than those who carry off the blue ribbons, for there is furnished them in very definite shape a spur and incentive to go home and do better, while the natural inclination with the winner of first prizes is to rest on his laurels. If you have lost out or should lose out in any such exhibitions take comfort from this thought.

Some sixty years ago a writer in the Cornhill Magazine described a rat trap by means of which it was claimed that 3,000 rats were caught in a large warehouse in a single night. Briefly the plan consisted in attracting the rats on to the tops of barrels covered with thick brown paper and there feeding them for several nights. When they had become accustomed to this procedure a cross was cut in the paper, and thereafter as many rats as stepped upon it fell into the barrels and were easily disposed of. The same feature has been carried out by many since in the equipment of barrels with light covers supported by a rod extending across the middle, easily turned, so that the weight of a rat would operate it.

Death of Consul General Moller, Roumanian Representative in Sweden, Removes Prominent Personage—History of Fight for Woman Suffrage In Norway—Denmark Exported 20,000,000 Dozen Eggs in 1910.

SWEDEN.

In the death of Roumanian Consul General Fredric Moller of Stockholm there disappeared a personage who was well known not only in Sweden but all over the European continent. General Moller was stricken by heart failure Jan. 16 and death was almost instantaneous. He was a son of a prominent Stockholm merchant, Theodore Moller. Consul Moller was born in Stockholm in 1846 and was graduated from the Stockholm lyceum. He afterwards completed the classical course at Upsala university. Afterwards he completed his education at the University of Heidelberg, Germany, and shortly afterwards entered the diplomatic service. He was Swedish consul at Antwerp for a number of years, where he was also interested in his father's export and import business. In 1879 we find him as Russian vice consul and later on Swedish consul general at St. Petersburg. In 1892 he was appointed Roumanian consul general at Stockholm, a position which he held at the time of his death. He was a commander of Vasa and a knight of the North Star Order. His funeral was a large one, perhaps one of the largest accorded any member of the diplomatic corps that has ever been held in Stockholm.

The chief of the Sixth army corps has positively forbidden all profane language on the part of the soldiers of the various regiments belonging to that division. The swearing of the Swedish soldier is well nigh historic and it is of a class which savors of such vulgar strength that it is enough to make even the most indifferent person in the world sit up and take notice. There is a tendency all through the Swedish army to eliminate swearing and it is now absolutely imperative in some divisions of the army. "Military swearing" in Sweden is a black spot on the country's history.

The French Academy of Fine Arts has appointed the medallion engraver, Erik Lindberg of Stockholm, as successor to the late Sir Francis Seymour Hayden, who during the past ten years has served as corresponding representative of the L'Institute de France. This is a distinction which becomes all the more noteworthy when it is considered that the L'Institut de France has only two foreign European representatives of this class.

Dowager Queen Sofia has lately entertained as her guest her niece, the Duchess Bentheim-Steinfurt, who was once the Princess Waldeck-Pyrmont. The duchess, whose first name is Pauline, is an older sister of the dowager queen of The Netherlands and the Duke of Albany. She was born in 1855. She arrived at Stockholm Jan. 12 and will visit the dowager queen for an indefinite period.

In a recent address held at the university in Lund Professor Soderberg claimed that it is reasonably sure that the Northmen discovered America. The claim is an old one, but discussion regarding this claim is now being resuscitated both in Sweden and Norway as well as America. Some interesting lectures and papers on this subject are bound to follow sooner or later.

Schuback, the much wanted fruit dealer of Stockholm, who disappeared very suddenly last month with a large sum of money, has been traced to Liverpool, where he boarded one of the Cunard line steamers for America. Owing to the great expense in going after him it is possible that the Swedish authorities may decide to let him go.

Gustave Adolph Bellet has been appointed Swedish vice consul at Fecamp. The consulate of that city is under the jurisdiction of the Swedish consulate at Rouen, France. A merchant, Nicholas A. Alexandrou, has been appointed Swedish consul at Smyrna, Palestine.

Sweden has a new prince. Princess Ingeborg gave birth to a bright little royal baby boy recently and his name is not less than Carl Gustaf Oscar Fredrik Christian, duke of Ostergotland. Both Princess Ingeborg and the little arrival are in the best of health.

According to the annual report of the Swedish patent service bureau there were organized during the year 1910 621 stock companies, representing a combined capital of 73,000,000 crowns.

The exact number of persons who emigrated to foreign lands during the year 1910 were 20,162. Of this number 12,497 were men and 7,665 were women.

The Rikshank shows a surplus for the year ending Dec. 31, 1910, amounting to 6,399,043 crowns.

NORWAY.

So far as the actual enfranchisement of women is concerned the first material gain was scored by the suffrage agitators in 1901, when the municipal vote was given to the Norwegian women on the basis of taxation. This law entitled two-fifths of the married and single adult females to elect city fathers and to vote on all matters pertaining to the municipality. The Norwegian women took advantage of their right at the three elections in 1901, 1904 and 1907, the percentage of women who actually cast their ballots rising at each successive election. In fact, it is claimed that in the two largest cities of the land a slightly larger percentage of women than men performed their electoral duties at the last election. The bill that gave limited municipal franchise to women also granted her the right to election to municipal corporations. As a result of this provision 150 women today are sitting on the various Norwegian municipal boards. Co-education probably hastened the enfranchisement of women of Norway, for all schools, from the kindergarten to the university, are open to both sexes on perfectly even terms. One of the first fruits of woman's enfranchisement has been the opening of schools where all branches of domestic science are taught. The "kitchen schools," as they are called, now are maintained in connection with all common schools, and here the girls learn cooking. Separate schools also have been established by the state to teach all branches of housekeeping and to practically educate the wives of the peasants. The more advanced among the Norwegian women now are agitating for the founding of state schools where girls will be taught the laws of health, marriage, motherhood and the nursery, so that, grown to womanhood, they will not enter upon the duties of wife and mother without the necessary knowledge.

Just now radical Norwegians are engaged in an endeavor to pass revolutionary laws legitimatizing illegitimate children. If this law is passed the father of an illegitimate child will be required to pay for the support of the mother for three months previous to delivery; to settle the childbirth expenses; to support the mother for six weeks after delivery and to maintain the child until it is sixteen years old; and if he can be proven to be the father, whether he acknowledges his parentage or not, it will have all the rights of legitimate offspring. This bill is being pushed by Mr. J. Castberg, who in the last Liberal cabinet filled the post of minister of justice.

In Norway, as well as in our own country, it seems that it costs more money every year to run the government. Of course the country is growing and that may account for it somewhat. The appropriation asked from the storthing for the coming year is 6,161,000 crowns, or 659,000 crowns more than was used the previous year. Three and one-half million are to be used for the maintainance and increase of the navy. Notwithstanding all the efforts of the peace commission nearly all the nations are building more and larger war vessels.

There about 10,000 Swedes living in Christiania, more than in any other city of Europe outside of Sweden. During the Christmas season one of the Swedish societies of that city held an imposing celebration in one of the mission houses, at which it is said that no less than 4,000 Swedish men and women and about 500 children were present and participated in the exercises. They had their Christmas tree and sang Christmas songs and patriotic songs.

At present there are forty-nine steamships under course of construction in Norway, representing a total tonnage of 30,155. Most of these steamships are built for freight purposes. There are, however, a number of passenger steamers that will be built during the coming summer. Little Norway has one of the largest merchant marine fleets in the world.

There is, according to the church papers of Norway, a strong religious movement on foot in Christiania. It is felt more particularly among the younger people and especially among the younger women.

DENMARK.

Denmark exported over 20,000,000 dozen eggs to foreign countries during the year 1910. The greater number of these eggs were shipped to British ports. England takes all the butter and eggs that Denmark produces. Germany is also beginning to patronize Denmark and meantime the poultry and dairymen of little Denmark are not at all worried about making a good and easy living.

There are strained relations between the large breweries and the restaurants and cafes selling beer. The breweries have raised the price on beer two ore per bottle and the retailers do not like this. They have not been able to raise the price to the consumer, hence there is war between wholesaler and retailer. The breweries claim that they will not yield, and so there you are.

Dr. Richard Paulli, a prominent physician of Copenhagen, passed away a few days ago, aged sixty-four years. He had been a most successful surgeon in Copenhagen for twenty-five years and people came from far and near to consult him. He left a considerable fortune and hundreds of friends and admirers.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

It cost the state an average of 39 cents for the 2,078 jobs found for people in St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth during the past month, according to reports to the state labor bureau. At the St. Paul office 388 places were obtained, 209 being for women. The Minneapolis office found work for 1,042 people. The cost for each place secured from the St. Paul office was 57 cents.

In the opinion of the state board of health the control of smallpox in Minnesota is impossible without a compulsory vaccination law, to be enforced in case of epidemic. Such is the burden of a special report covering the disease in Minnesota, prepared by Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the board.

Laying of rails for the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific, a subsidiary of the Canadian Northern, will begin May 1, according to a statement of Resident Engineer Hazen of Duluth, and the road will be in operation Sept. 1. This will give a direct line from Duluth to Winnipeg.

Out of 1,041,570 aliens admitted to America in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, a total of 21,541 settled in Minnesota, an increase of nearly 1,000 over 1907 and 6,347 more than in 1909, according to C. W. Seaman, in charge of the Minneapolis immigration office.

Battles of the First Minnesota regiment will be commemorated upon a bronze tablet to be placed in the new capitol building. The commission in charge of the erection of the statue to Colonel William Colville decided to use the $1,400 surplus for such a purpose.

Receipts of live stock at South St. Paul during January indicate one of the month's best business records at Packingtown in the history of the local markets. The actual count for the month was 21,568 cattle, 6,765 calves, 103,646 hogs and 21,798 sheep.

The state of Minnesota is losing $5,000,000 annually in revenue that might be secured from water power, according to a statement made by Colonel James H. Davidson of St. Paul, chairman of the state waterways commission.

For every person in Minnesota who dies two babies are born, at least that was the ratio in 1909, according to the figures of the state board of health.

An Ohioan, John W. Willet, won first prize in the alfalfa contest at the National corn show. Second place went to Minnesota and third to Iowa.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Charles Altonen, a logger, was knocked down by a highwayman on the Iron Range tracks at Duluth and was afterwards thrown over the rocks on the lake shore to the ice below, a distance of twenty feet, where he was discovered some hours later. He was unconscious from a fractured skull and his recovery is said to be doubtful.

Nearly eighty years old and deaf, Helick Hellickson, a Civil war veteran, was struck by a train at Southtown Junction and died in the police ambulance before he could be taken to the Minneapolis city hospital. He had lately moved to Minneapolis from Wheaton, Minn.

Andrew O. Cop, about forty-five years old, a lumberjack, was killed one mile north of Blackduck when he was run over by a Minnesota and International railroad freight train. He was walking in the center of the track when the train hit him.

An explosion of a tank containing twenty gallons of gasoline nearly cost the lives of three persons at Rochester. Mr. and Mrs. L. Kersh and their young son were frightfully burned about the face and hands.

HOMES IN ATHENS

As a Rule They Are Clean, but Bare and Comfortless.

PEOPLE LIVE IN THE CAFES.

When They Do Get Into Their Houses Their Principal Occupation Is Looking Out of the Windows—The Marriage Customs of Greece.

Home life in Greece, particularly in Athens, is peculiar. It might almost be said that there is no such thing. In Mr. Duckett Ferriman's book on "Greece and the Greeks" the manners and customs of the picturesque Hellenes, which are little known to the average English reader, are described at length. Mr. Ferriman states that the Greeks do not know anything about the art of making a home.

"One may meet with exquisite cleanliness," he writes, "with beautifully embroidered bed linen scented with rosemary, but never with what we mean by coziness. The Greeks are far less in their houses than we are, and when they are at home they appear to spend most of their time in looking out of the window. They are not given to inviting their friends to their houses. It is not that they are niggardly, for they will gladly entertain you at a restaurant at far greater cost to themselves. But it does not enter into their ideas to ask you home to dinner, even after an acquaintance of many years.

"They do not ask each other, so it can hardly be expected that they should make an exception in the case of foreigners. The cafe is a second home to them. There they meet friends and gossip. That is one reason perhaps why they dislike country life.

"It offers no alternative to the home; there the hearth is the social center, while in town it is the cafe. In Athens those who do not own the house they dwell in seldom remain long in the same abode. Two or three years is quite a long tenure. Many people make a point of moving every year.

"The imposing facades of Athenian houses conceal, for the most part, a bare and comfortless interior, and a well kept garden is rare. A garden is not made in a year, and a person who changes his residence every twelve months does not want to be troubled with much furniture, nor is he particular as to its arrangement, seeing that it will be carted away in a few months.

"Home life has no resources for the Greeks, as it has for us. It affords them little occupation and no amusement. They like to eat and drink in crowds, where there is noise and movement. Their instincts are too gregarious to allow them to appreciate the domestic intimacy which we prize.

"The day chosen for marriage in Greece is usually Sunday, but the day of all days in the year is the Sunday preceding the Christmas feast. It is not fashionable now to be married in church. In Athens the ceremony takes place in the house of the bride's parents. A temporary altar is set up in the middle of the room.

"At the conclusion of the ceremony the priest and the couple join hands and walk three times round the altar, the guests pelting them with comfits. The most important part of the ceremony is the crowning of the bride and bridegroom with wreaths of orange blossom; hence a wedding is popularly called 'the crowning.'

"Love marriages are rare exceptions. The match is made by the parents and relatives rather than by the parties [illegible]lly concerned. There are certain [illegible]blished usages which, though not legally binding, are not to be contravened with impunity.

"Then it is considered wrong for brothers to marry until their sisters have been wed. Again, girls must marry in order of seniority. It would not be right for a girl to be married while she had an elder sister who remained single. The men of a family are thus naturally anxious to see their sisters settled, and as a dowry is indispensable its provision is often a matter of serious anxiety and the fruit of great self denial on the part of the brothers if the parents are dead.

"There are cases in which brothers have remained unmarried for years and have devoted all their hard earned savings to the dowries of their sisters. Among the poorer classes emigration is resorted to, not infrequently solely with this object, and many a dowry comes to a Greek maiden from across the Atlantic."

SHOCKED THE GUIDE.

Antics of an Irreverent Visitor at the National Capitol.

A big man with a fierce, bristling gray beard and wearing a broad brimmed slouch hat marched down the main corridor of the capitol, closely followed by a guide at a dogtrot. They had inspected statuary hall and the rotunda and looked in at the chamber of the supreme court, and the visitor had made no other comment on the sights shown him than to utter an occasional grunt, snort or growl.

The big man paused at the end of the corridor and jerked his head toward a carpeted passage.

"What's them burglars doing today?" he demanded.

"The senate is not in session, sir," said the guide in a shocked voice.

After the visitor had departed the guide sat down on his chair in front of the statue of Daniel Webster and mopped his heated brow.

"That's one kind that comes here," he said. "We have all kinds, but his style is the hardest to deal with. Called the senate burglars—you heard him—and he kicked at everything else I showed him. That kind comes prepared to kick. They ain't got no patriotism at all, and a United States senator ain't no more to them than a doorkeeper. Why, I'm afraid to take men like him into the supreme court. Likely as not they'll say something disrespectful right out loud. Do you know what that one said when I showed him statuary hall? He says, 'Who are all these crooks?' Then he wanted to know how much all them statues cost the government and who got the rakeoff. I told him they were given by the states, and he said that was once when the states put one over.

"You wouldn't think," said the guide, with a sigh, "that patriotic Americans could come here and be so callous about the things they see. They seem to begrudge giving a dollar to be shown the place where Webster stood when he made his reply to Hayne. I don't know what the country's coming to. I've been a guide here twenty years, but I never thought I'd live to hear the senate called burglars."—Washington Cor. Kansas City Star.

LIGHTNING VERSUS STEAM.

Testing the Telegraph In the Early Days of Its Invention.

Years ago, when the electric telegraph was a new idea and a mystery to the masses, there came trouble one Saturday night in the Bank of England. The business of the day had closed and the balance was not right. There was a deficit of just £100. It was not the money, but the error, that must be found. For the officers and the clerks there could be no sleep until the mystery had been cleared up. All that night and all Sunday a force of men were busy; money was surely gone from the vaults, but no one could discover whence.

On the following morning a clerk suggested that the mistake might have occurred in packing for the West Indies some boxes of specie that had been sent to Southampton for shipment. His chief acted on the suggestion. Here was an opportunity to test the powers of the telegraph—lightning against steam, and steam with forty-eight hours the start. Very soon the telegraph asked a man in Southampton, "Has the ship Mercator sailed?"

The answer came back, "Just weighing anchor."

"Stop her in the queen's name," flashed back the telegraph. "She is stopped," was returned.

"Have on deck certain boxes (marks given), weigh them carefully and let me know the result," telegraphed the chief.

This order was obeyed, and one box was found to be somewhere about one pound and ten ounces heavier than its mates—just the weight of the missing sovereigns. "All right. Let the ship go!" was the next order.

The West India house was debited with the £100 and the Bank of England was at peace again.—Harper's Weekly.

Hallucinations of Henbane.

Henbane bears a remarkable reputation for creating the most extraordinary hallucinations. Dr. Houlton relates that some monks who ate the roots by mistake for parsnips transformed their monastery into a lunatic asylum. One monk rang the bell for matins at midnight, and of those of the community who attended some could not read, others "fancied the letters were running about like ants," and some read what was not in their books. Even the exhalations from these pretty but very poisonous flowers produce these weird effects.—Westminster Gazette.

The Adoration of the Wig.

Wigs were never so popular as in the reign of Charles II. The author of "The Beaux and the Dandies" tells us that "when Cibber played Sir Fopling Flutter his wig was so much admired that he had it carried to the footlights every evening in a sedan chair, from which it was handed to him that he might put it on his head."

HIS GIRL FRIENDS.

Mark Twain Dearly Loved Children as Playmates.

THE ANGEL FISH SOCIETY.

A Delightful and Touching Story About Little Margaret, One of Its Members, and the Genial Humorist—A Pretty Compact and a Quaint Letter.

Like many another great man, Mark Twain was fond of children. He never outgrew childhood, and he always chose young playmates where they were to be found. He formed curious societies of these girl friends. Back in the nineties, when he was living in Europe, he created a club which was to consist of one (only one) girl in each country of the globe, the duty of said member being to write occasionally to the chief officer, who faithfully replied to these random and far faring messages. Of course these little girls were swept into womanhood presently, but even to the last years of his life the member who signed herself "France" remained faithful to the law.

Another club of girls, little girls, became one of the chief interests during his final years. It had its beginning in Bermuda during one of his frequent visits to those happy islands. It was called the Angel Fish club, after a gorgeous swimmer of those waters, and he gave to each member an angel fish pin as a society badge. It was a successful club, and on his return to America he elected other members, enough to make twelve in all.

His home at Redding, Conn., Stormfield, had been originally named Innocence at Home, and as Angel Fish headquarters Innocence at Home it always remained. Members with their parents visited him there, and the billiard room, where the "fishes" were likely to spend most of their time knocking the balls about, under the chief member's instruction, was called the Aquarium, and gay prints of many Bermuda fishes were hung along the walls to carry out the idea. Each member had the privilege of selecting one of these as her patron fish and of identifying it with her name.

It was in Bermuda one day when he was walking along the beach with one of his angel fish members that he picked up a small iridescent double shell, delicately hinged together. He separated it and handed his companion half.

"You will be going away from me pretty soon, Margaret," he said, "and growing up, and I won't know you any more. I shall see a great many Margarets, and now and then one of them will say she is my Margaret, but I will say, 'No; you resemble my Margaret, but you are bigger than my Margaret, and I can't be sure.' Then I will take out this shell and I will say, 'If you are really my Margaret you will have the other half of this shell, and it will fit exactly.' Then if she has the shell and it fits I shall know that it is really my Margaret, no matter how many years have gone by or how much older she has grown."

All this he said very gravely and earnestly, and the little girl took the shell thoughtfully and promised to keep it always. Next morning when she came running up to meet him on the hotel veranda he looked at her questioningly.

"You look like Margaret," he said, "but I can't be sure. If you are really my Margaret you will have a shell I gave her once—the mate to this one"—

He got no further. The talisman was promptly produced, and it fitted exactly. He returned to America, and somewhat later Margaret received a letter—one of the pretty letters he was always writing to children. In it he said:

I am always making mistakes. When I was in New York six weeks ago I was on a corner of Fifth avenue and saw a small girl—not a big one—start across from the opposite corner, and I exclaimed to myself joyfully, "That is certainly my Margaret," so I rushed to meet her. But as she came nearer I began to doubt and said to myself, "It's a Margaret, that is plain enough, but I'm half afraid it is somebody else's." So when I passed her I held my shell so she couldn't help but see it. Dear, she only glanced at it and passed on. I wondered if she could have overlooked it. It seemed best to find out, so I turned and followed and caught up with her and said deferentially, "Dear miss, I already know your first name by the look of you, but would you mind telling me your other one?" She was vexed and said, pretty sharply: "It's Douglas, if you're so anxious to know. I know your name by your looks, and I'd advise you to shut yourself up with pen and ink and write some more rubbish. I am surprised that they allow you to run at large. You are likely to get run over by a baby carriage any time. Run along now and don't let the cows bite you."

What an idea! There aren't any cows on Fifth avenue. But I didn't smile. I didn't let on to perceive how uncultured she was. She was from the country, of course, and didn't know what a comical blunder she was making.

Margaret, with her mother, called when they returned to America. When the cards were brought to him he looked at hers and said:

"Well, the young lady, her name seems familiar, but I can't be sure it's my Margaret without a certain token which she is supposed to carry as a proof." The shell came up without delay. He took the two halves now to a jeweler and had them set in gold as charms. One of these Margaret wore on a ribbon about her neck, and the other he linked to his watch chain, where it remained till he died. What a sweet fancy it all was!

He spent the last months of his life in Bermuda in the home of one of his angel fish, Helen Allen, daughter of the American vice consul there. She was his daily companion, and it will be her lifelong happy memory that she brightened and comforted his final days.—Albert Bigelow Paine in Ladies' World.

LAYING BRICKS.

How Scientific Methods Raised the Standard of a Day's Work.

There are now eminent consulting engineers who are engaged by industrial heads to study their establishments from top to bottom with a view to finding by scientific study the methods of working, accounting and handling labor which will improve on the old traditional habits. Some extraordinary results have been attained. What scientific management means is admirably illustrated by the story of bricklaying, as told by an expert.

Ordinarily a brick mason makes eighteen different sets of motions in laying a single brick. He bends over, in the first place, to pick up one brick, and in lifting it he lifts ten pounds of brick and about a hundred pounds of brick mason—the upper part of his own body. In laying 1,000 bricks in a day's work he lifts 100,000 pounds of brick mason. This was an obvious waste of labor. So a common laborer was hired to put the bricks where the masons would not have to stoop for them. Another thing is that when a mason picks up a handmade brick, which is always a little thicker at one side than on the other, he tosses the brick up, turning it over until his touch tells him which side is the top before he puts it in place in the wall. The cure for this was to have all the bricks piled top up before they were brought to the masons. Then, further, every one has seen the mason tap his brick several times to settle it into the mortar—more waste of time. The cure was to make the mortar thinner, so that the weight of the brick would settle it into the right position. This was scientific management, "motion study." It raised the day's work for the average brick mason from 1,000 up to 2,700 bricks a day and in individual cases to much higher figures. The mason made only six motions where he used to make eighteen.—American Review of Reviews.

WHISTLER WAS INDIGNANT.

The Idea of Buying His Pictures and Then Demanding Possession.

A certain eminent English lady, the proud possessor of a title of fairly high degree, who admired Whistler's genius to the extent of purchasing one of his pictures, never was able to obtain possession of her property. One day she drove to the studio in her victoria. Mr. Whistler went to greet her.

"Mr. Whistler," she said, "two years ago I bought one of your pictures, a beautiful thing, and I have never been able to hang it on my walls. It has been loaned to one exhibition or another. Now, today I have my carriage with me, and I would like to take it home with me. I am told it is in your possession."

"Dear lady," returned Whistler, "you ask the impossible. I will send it to you when I have it again, but it is not here. You have been misinformed." And so forth, and so forth, to the same effect, and the lady drove off without her picture.

After she had departed Whistler commenced to poke around his studio and, to the great astonishment of a friend who had been an involuntary listener to the above conversation, he brought forth a canvas.

"Here it is," he said. "She was right about one thing—it is beautiful." And it was beautiful.

"But the impudence of these people," he continued, "who think that because they pay a few paltry hundred pounds they own my pictures. Why, it merely secures them the privilege of having them in their houses now and then! The pictures are mine!"

A Medical Sherlock Holmes.

A physician was knocked down and robbed while on his way to see a patient. His pockets were rifled, and one of the articles stolen was a clinical thermometer with which he had earlier in the evening taken the temperature of a patient. He remembered the temperature registered and also that he had not shaken down the mercury before putting the thermometer in his pocket. He communicated these facts to the police. Some time afterward a thermometer registering the identical temperature was discovered in a pawnshop, and the police were enabled thereby to track the doctor's assailants and to arrest them.

The Wicked Majority.

A new gardener had been employed on a Long Island estate. This man was raking leaves off the lawn one fall day when a neighbor, passing by, inquired of him, "Where's the gardener who used to work here?"

"Dead, sir," was the reply.

"Dead!" said the astonished neighbor. Then, musing, he added, "Joined the great majority, eh?"

"Oh, sir," the gardener interrupted in a shocked voice, "I wouldn't like to say that. He was a good enough man as far as I know."

Caution.

"Shall I have this prescription filled without further consultation?" asked the patient.

"Certainly," replied the physician. "Why not?"

"I thought maybe I'd better call in a handwriting expert."—Washington Star.

Minneapolis Tribune—Reapportionment may have to go over until such time as the present senators have filled out their terms. It is understood that the attorney general believes that a law could be passed to take effect four years from now. But the injustice of the present reapportionment remains patent, just the same. This week, 31 senators, representing a little over 700,000 people, outvoted 29 senators representing over 1,500,000. The startling figures, based on population, tell only part of the story. Consultation of the tax lists, show that the 31 senators represented a tax levy of $7,807,006.72, while the 29 senators who were outvoted in their demand for reapportionment represented a tax levy of $23,006,663.43. The minority represented in the senate by the 31 senators, as compared with the majority, represented a ratio of about 2 to 1. On a basis of property valuations and taxes paid, the minority as compared with the majority represents a ratio of almost 4 to 1.

The above is the strongest argument for the Justice of the claim made by those in favor of reapportionment, and is furnished by the opponents of the measure Any senator who cannot afford to vote himself out of office, in order to give the people Justice, must have a very slight hold upon his constituents, and is probably of the kind they would be glad to be rid of.

That small strip of territory lying south of the Twin Cities had better recognize at once that it is not the whole state. The greater natural resources of the upper half, will soon give it the balance of power, and as the South end treats us now so may they expect to be treated when that time comes and it is coming fast.

Friends of reapportionment from the North part of the state are talking secession, if a fair bill is not passed at the present session

It is proposed to draw a line East and West just South of Brainerd, and form a new state. Taxation without representation has caused stranger things to be done.

The next meeting of the commercial club to be held on the 17th inst will discuss commission form of government for the city. It only requires discussion to be adopted.

May Be Deported.

Albert Bauder, a native of Poland, has been detained here pending an investigation as to the state of his health and may be deported to his native land. He has been in this country only since last October and was on his way to Canada and was refused admission by the British authorities at the boundry. It was thought at first that the reason why he was not admitted was because of his failure to have the sum of money required by aliens before being admitted into Canada. About $50 was sent to him by his father-in law and brother-in-law who reside in Canada, but was again turned back. He is in poor health and this was the reason why he was not admitted.

He is in charge of the county sheriff here and was to have undergone a medical examination last night and will undoubtedly be deported to his home country.

Moengen-Kibler

Last Thursday at the home of the bride's parents, in the town of Rocksbury occurred the marriage of Emma Caroline Moengen to Florantine M Kibler, of Mayville, N. Dak., the ceremony being performed by Rev. I. T. Aastad in the presence of a few intimate friends and relatives. The bride was beautifully gowned in a brown messaline florid satin and carried a large bouquet of pink and white carnations. Miss Inga Oftedahl, of St. Paul, and Ole Moengen, of Lorette, Minn., attended the bridal couple. Covers were laid for twelve and after the ceremony a dainty wedding dinner was served.

The happy couple left Thursday evening for the cities, from where they will proceed to the eastern points, Chicago, Toledo and Niagara Falls. On their return they will make a short stay at Watertown Iowa. After Feb 20th they will be at home to Mayville, N. D., where the groom is engaged in business. We all extend our heartiest congratulations in wishing them prosperity and happiness in their long married life.

BAND CONCERT

Thief River Falls Concert Band Will Render Fine Program on 13th.

Will Be Assisted By Mrs. Mellby and the Irvine Orchestra.

The Thief River Falls Concert Band will render its next concert in the Auditorium on Monday evening, Feb. 13th.

That the boys under their able director have put in some long and hard work goes without saying and can be judged by some of the very difficult operatic selections that they will render and have mastered to perfection. The selections from "Norma" and "Robin Hood" were recently rendered by the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra and is in the class of music that is played by the professional organizations in the big cities and it is a matter of much pride that the local organization is able to handle this class of music.

In addition to the band selections Mrs. Mellby will render a vocal solo and two selections will be played by the Thief River Concert Orchestra.

The tickets for the concert are now being sold and should be met with a liberal patronage.

Plant for This City.

Peter Noble, a Greek candy maker of Minneapolis, will, in the near future, establish a concern for the wholesale and retail manufacturing of candies and confectionery and has leased the Grundy building on 3rd street, for a period of five years.

Mr. Noble has been engaged in that business in New York city and some of the larger cities in this country and has an established reputation. He proposes to put in all the latest fixtures and conveniences there is and will run an entirely up-to-date plant.

He believes the selection of this point is a good one for his concern, and will, also be a big thing for the city.

Let Ditch Contracts.

Warren, Minn, Feb. 7—Two big ditch contracts have just been awarded here. One of them, Marshall County Ditch No. 22, was awarded to George Castle of Crookston. This job includes the moving of 100,486 cubic yards of dirt at 10 cents per yard, amounting to $10,048.60, and in addition $660 for roadmaking, totaling close ts $11,000. Mr. Castle will start the work as early in the spring as the ground will permit.

The other job let was Judicial Ditch No. 15, which went to the Northwestern Drainage company, 301,368 yards, at 10.75 cents per yard, amounting to $32,698, with the roadmaking at $1.20 per mile.

O. L. Hamery of Crookston is the engineer on both jobs.

The statement that it pays to advertise is well established by the following incident: An editor printed the following item in his paper. "The business man in this town who hugs his stenographer had better stop or we shall publish his name." The day following the publication by the editor twenty business men called at the editors office, advanced their subscription one year, gave him a years cash in advance order for a column of advertising and told him not to take any stock in all the foolish stories heard.—Ex.

THIEF RIVER CO-OPERATIVE STORE COMPANY

The recent heavy snow fall has jeopardised the work in the pinaries to such an extent that the operations are practically at a stand-still at present. Men are returning every day from the woods and report that the recent snow was the heaviest seen for a long time.

The Eastern Stars of this district are to hold a school of instruction next Wednesday, February 15, at Argyle, Minn. The initiatory work will be done by the Thief River Falls' chapter. The entire core of officers and a number of other members of the local lodge are going over in a body.

Mrs. Creapo and Miss Drucie McCaulley went to Thief River Falls Wednesday morning. In the evening Mrs. Carl and Miss Dora McCaulley went up on the local. The entire party attended the performance given at the opera house in the evening, "The Burgomaster".—Mahnomen Pioneer.

H. K. Hanson, of Minneapolis, has been here since last Saturday working on a plan of establishing a co-operative store. He represents the Right Relationship League, under whose auspices the Thief River Falls, Roseau, Badger, Grygla and many other co operative stores have been established.—Middle River Pioneer.

Martin Jensen was summoned to Thief River Falls Saturday by Mrs. S. Brgseng, informing him of the illness of his daughter Celia who is teaching school at Grygla and he left at once for the above place and returned Monday with his daughter who is suffering greatly from a nervous breakdown. Mrs Brgseng, with whom his daughter was boarding accompanied them home. This was Mr. Jensen's second summons to Thief River since his daughter had commenced teaching and as she had just returned to her school two weeks ago, it is thot she had not regained her strength sufficiently to take up her duties as teacher.—Stephen Messenger.

Moorhead News:—According to the report of Warden Wolfer to the state board of control, the state penitentiary could pay back to the state all the money ever spent for the twine plant, replace the revolving fund and still show a net profit of $1,507,992 since it was started. For the two years ending August 1, 1910, the twine plant cleared $233,000 and sold about 16,000,000 pounds of twine a year. Figures also show that in a few years, unless much larger amounts are needed in the revolving fund to finance the manufacturing activities, the Stillwater institution will be wholly self supporting. At present the prison requires only about $15,000 a year from the state treasury to operate it, the rest being earned from the sale of twine and other products.

A Creditable Production.

A fair-sized and well pleased audience was at the Auditorium last Friday evening to witness the production of "Oak Farm" by the Red Lake Falls Dramatic Club, which is composed of a number of young people from the lower falls. The play was well staged and the company as a whole created quite an impression among the theatre-goers who were present.

Immediately after the performance the chairs were cleared away and a social "hop" was indulged in by the "troup" and those who remained for the occasion.

The Club may decide to have their play produced elsewhere in the near future, and undoubtedly will, and ought to, meet with the same approval and patronage as it has in the towns where they have given this performance.

Are Not Connected.

The managers of the Thief River Falls Marble and Granite Works in this city wish to announce to the public that the impression created by a representative of the Crookston marble and granite works to the effect that the local concern was just a branch of the Crookston house is entirely false and without foundation.

The factory to be opened in this city is not in any way, shape or manner connected with the one in Crookston or anyone else and is purely a local concern.

"Man On Box" Good Attraction.

The "Man on the Box" which was played at the Auditorium last Tuesday evening was witnessed by a fair-sized and very highly pleased audience. The play is one of the best on the road and is of a kind that is very seldom seen in the smaller cities. This was the fourth time this play had been produced by this company and the manner in which the actors performed their various parts was trully remarkable. The play was produced at Grand Forks last night.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that a Special election will be held in the Independent School District No. 18, of Thief River Falls, Minn. Pennington Co. on the 4th day of March, 1911, in the North Room Masonic Bldng. 1st floor, for the purpose of voting on the proposition of issuing to the State of Minnesota the bonds of said municipality in the aggregate sum of $12000.00 bearing interest at the rate of 4 per centum per annum, the proceeds thereof to be used for the purpose of—Completing the Lincoln High School, to be numbered and to mature as set forth in the resolution now on file in the office of the Clerk.

SECURES NEW PIANIST AND SINGER

The management of the Lyceum Theatre has secured the services of one L. E. BOWIE as PIANIST and ILLUSTRATED SONG SINGER at their ever popular theatre, who will open his engagement on Monday Evening, February 13th. Mr. Bowie is said to possess a splendid baritone voice and is thoroughly experienced in his occupation, besides being one of the highest salaried men in that line of business. The managers have secured a fine attraction for his opening night. Des Monda, the only lady in the world possessing and using four distinct voices, one of the most unique novelty acts of today, has been secured for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Feb 13.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

LEGALLY HANGED

By CHARLES LEWIS PHIPPS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Which one of all your cases," I asked Wilcox, the celebrated criminal lawyer, "has most excited your interest?"

"That of Mathews, who was accused of murder."

"Was he innocent or guilty?"

"Innocent."

"Did you secure his acquittal?"

"No."

"Hanged?"

"Yes; legally hanged."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I'll tell you. Mathews was in the employ of Henderson, the man who was murdered. I don't care to go into the details of the case; I will only say that there was so much circumstantial evidence against him that from the first I despaired of saving his neck. I knew he was innocent, though he could no more explain the circumstances that pointed to his guilt than I could."

"How did you know he was innocent?"

"By both experience and intuition. I defy any of my clients to deceive me in this regard. I simply look them in the eye, and that tells me the story.

"There was everything about Mathews' case to interest me. He was a younger son of a British country gentleman and in love with the daughter of another British gentleman. His mother had no knowledge of his having been accused of crime, much less having been convicted, for I could do nothing to prove him innocent. He showed me his mother's letters, and it was distressing to read them. His betrothed was also writing him without any knowledge that he was under sentence of death. A week before he was to be hanged a letter from solicitors in England was handed him, informing him that a bachelor uncle had died and left him a large fortune."

"Upon my word! It was an interesting case, wasn't it?"

"I should say so. If ever there was a man who had everything to live for Mathews had. And to be judicially executed without ever having wronged any one in his life was simply awful. You have no idea how having a life on your hands wears on a man, and this case nearly drove me insane.

"But I braced myself for a gigantic effort. After conferring with Mathews I decided to cable the solicitors in England, giving them the situation and asking how much funds they could cable me within a few days. They placed £20,000 to my credit, and with this sum I went to work. There was no use in trying to secure delay or a new trial. What I must do was to interest the sheriff. I had a long secret conference with him, but could not move him to act for money, though I so far secured his judgment that he must do an official wrong in hanging Mathews that he consented to wink at any game I might practice, provided it could be kept secret.

"I got a friend of mine who was a professor in a medical college to apply for the body of Mathews as soon as he was dead. This enabled me to gain possession of the condemned man the moment the hanging was over. Then I "fixed" every official who was to be present at the hanging. Mathews put in a request that there should be no spectators present. I could not even be present myself. But there was not one of the officials to whom I paid less than $10,000, and the hangman got $25,000. My friend the doctor was the only one present who got nothing. He had a coffin ready for the corpse as soon as it was taken from the gallows and a hearse to carry it to the hospital.

"Well, that night I went to the hospital and found Mathews locked in the doctor's room."

"But how was the hanging managed?"

"I don't know; I never asked. There were half a dozen men paid by the state to see that Mathews was hanged, and I paid every one of them—in all $100,000—to go through the process without hanging him. All I know is that I paid the money and found Mathews alive in the doctor's room. Some burnt cork, a woolly wig and a suit of clothes procured from a Jew tailor fixed him so that no one would know him. I had a steerage ticket for him in an outgoing steamer, and early the next morning he was on his way to England."

"He must have been very grateful to you."

"Grateful! I should say so. Before parting with me he made me promise that I would come over as soon as possible and see him. I couldn't go for a year, and then I found him in possession of £50,000 a year income and married to the woman he loved. He met me on the steamer, and the first thing he did was to impress it upon me that neither his mother nor his wife nor any one living except his solicitors knew that he was judicially dead in America. He had often tried to bring himself to unburden his secret to his wife, but had always failed.

"Mathews entertained me royally and begged me to suggest some way for him to pay the debt he owed me, even if it required every cent of his fortune. I assured him that I took more comfort in his case than in all the cases I had ever won, though I had lost it.

"After spending a month with him I left him to return. He could hardly bear to part with me and regretted that it wouldn't be safe for him to come to America or he would cross the ocean with me. He shed tears when I came away."

DODGING THE LAW

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Josephus Henderson was a man of forty when a startling event took place in his life. He was also a widower. He was exactly five feet high and weighed 110 pounds. These figures will convince you that Josephus was not numbered among the mighty men of earth. He had tried various ways of making a living, and in pursuing them he had got the reputation of being keen. He had at last turned peddler and was driving a horse and wagon around the country with dry goods, notions, groceries and tinware. That's the way he came to meet the widow Sopher, who lived on a farm.

The widow had passed forty. She was large and bony and strong. She was not handsome. The only thing on earth she feared was the law. She had once been arrested for kicking a man and had spent ten days in jail. The sheriff had made her stay as pleasant as possible, but she had never recovered from the shock.

Peddlers are a jovial lot, and so are widows, and in time these two came to call each other Josh and Sally.

Things would have gone no further but for the little man's keenness. He never made a sale to the widow without cheating her, and one day when he heard that she had come into possession of $5,000 in cash through the death of a brother Josephus saw his way clear for the future. That money would set up a store in the village, and he would become a thriving merchant.

Josephus went courting. He found the widow behind the plow in a field. As he courted she plowed. He had no objections, as time was money to both of them. Josephus confessed that he had entertained a sneaking affection for the widow since his first call, and, though she didn't say much, she seemed pleased.

Josephus was told to call two weeks later, but at the end of nine days he was back again. He said it was his beating heart that fetched him. He had cut the time down, but the widow was ready for him. Several days previous she had gone to the village and paid a lawyer $5 to answer the question:

"Can the law trouble a wife who licks her husband?"

And his answer had been:

"Not if you do not lick him too hard. There is neither assault nor battery in what may be called a moderate licking. Don't break any bones and don't seriously injure his eyes."

"I have been thinking," said the widow to Josephus; "I have been thinking and wondering if you loved me."

"Heavens, can you doubt it?" he exclaimed.

"And you will always love me?"

"Forever and forever!"

"Then we'll say two months hence."

"One month—a week—a day!"

Josephus knew of a store to rent in the village, and he wanted that $5,000. The widow insisted that she must have two weeks at the very shortest, and a date was settled on. The marriage was to be private and be celebrated in her home. In due time the happy day came round—a preacher and two witnesses and the deed was done. An hour later, as the happy couple were left alone, the widow changed her dress, rolled up her sleeves and brought out a new horsewhip bought for the occasion.

"What's up?" asked the wondering Josephus.

"Take off your coat and stand out."

"For what, love? I want to talk with you about opening a store in town."

"Plenty of time for that, Josephus. The first sale you made to me was five yards of roller toweling. You beat me on the price and on the measure. I'm going to tan your jacket for it!"

"But, love"—

She took him by the collar and laid on the whip till he hollered. A woman who could twist a plow around in clay soil could handle the little Josephus.

"The second sale," continued the wife as she rested, "was five tin pans. Four of them leaked, and you beat me out of 10 cents beside. Here is licking No. 2."

"But I am your dear husband!" he protested as he squirmed about.

"And that's why I can lick you and dodge the law. Here goes!"

Josephus' hide was tickled again. He attempted to fight, but was taken by the hair and his head banged against the wall till he grew quiet. When the performance was over and the wife had got her breath she said:

"You sold me ten yards of calico for a dress and warranted it to wash. It was three-quarters of a yard short on the measure and the colors ran into each other. Josephus, some more horsewhip!"

"I'll have you arrested for this!"

"You can't. That's what I paid $5 to make sure of. Come to time!"

And Josephus was licked for selling short weight groceries, and for charging 50 cents too much for a pair of shoes, and for selling black stockings that crocked, and when he had got his last stroke the wife said:

"Josephus, darling, it was a cousin of mine that got the $5,000, but you've got me, and here we dwell, and you do the farm work and do it well or you'll get some more of this! The mercantile business is not for us, dear. What we want is the free air of the country, with honest prices and good measure thrown in!"

THE TWO DETECTIVES

By WARREN GRANT FOX

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I was sitting in a railway station waiting for a train. A man sat near me, but I didn't look at him. All I remembered afterward was that he was a man. Presently I turned and saw on the seat where he had been a rectangular package. I looked about for its owner, but could see no one who appeared to have missed it. I took it up, not doubting for a moment that the person who had left it would come back for it. But although I remained there some time no one came. Then I opened the package, which proved to be a box containing jewels. It was plain to me that they were of considerable value.

While I was looking at them two men came up to me. Seeing them approach, I closed the box, but they told me to open it, and as soon as they saw its contents congratulated each other on finding, as they expressed it, the "Huntington jewels." They believed the story I told them of how I had come into their possession, "for," they said, "the man who has stolen them would not be examining them in a public place." They had received orders to watch this station for the thief, and he doubtless suspecting that he would not be permitted to leave it without being searched, in order to avoid being caught with the plunder on him had left it on the seat.

"Let us act like friends met by chance," said one of them, "for the fellow is doubtless watching us, his intention being to shadow you and trick you out of them."

So I put the box in my pocket, and the two men went away. I remained a few minutes longer, then left the station and went home. I was quite sure I was followed not only by the thief, but by the two detectives, but whether the former knew anything about the latter I did not know. I had not been at home ten minutes when there was a ring at my doorbell and the detectives entered.

"Well," said the spokesman, "I think we may at once turn in the jewels. The thief doubtless has marked your house and will try, either by diplomacy or stealth, to get possession of them. You'd better be prepared for him tonight; he may break in to your house and try to get them by force."

"I'm always prepared for such things," I replied, and, pulling out a drawer from a cabinet, I took up a six shooter.

"Good for you," said one of the men. "I don't think any one breaking into your house will get much. Let me have the jewels. I'll take them to the police station, and if you'll call tomorrow I dare say you'll be paid a handsome reward by the owner."

"All right," I replied, "but you must give me some evidence that you're authorized to receive them."

"Authorized!" exclaimed the spokesman. "We have found you in possession of the property, and it's our duty to run you in with the jewels. But you've told so straight a story that we don't wish to inconvenience you. If you don't give up the stolen goods we'll have to take you along."

"I'll go with you willingly," I said.

For the first time a suspicion came to me that possibly these detectives might put me in a hole. When I said that I would go willingly they gave each other a look. It seemed to me that they didn't wish me to go with them; they preferred to take the gems themselves. They went into another room for consultation. This proved to me conclusively that they were not detectives, but very likely had themselves stolen the jewels, that they had feared arrest and had taken this method of getting their plunder out of the station. When they returned I had slipped the revolver up my sleeve. One of them stepped to the telephone and called for a carriage.

Now, if he had called for a police patrol wagon I should have known that he was a bona fide officer. As it was, I knew he wasn't; that they were going to pretend to take me in a carriage to a station, but really to secure the jewels on the way.

When the carriage arrived I had backed into a corner. They told me to come with them, but instead of doing so I shouted "Hands up!" and pointed my weapon toward them. Fortunately they were very near together and I could cover both at one time. One of them put his hands up at once, but the other made a move of his hand to his hip. I shivered the hand with a bullet, and the bloody hand went up immediately. Then, backing to the telephone, I held both men in position while I called up the police.

My two detectives were in a box. I could kill them if they moved, and if they didn't make a move to get away they would go to the penitentiary. But it was with them a choice between death and prison, and they chose prison. In a few minutes a patrol wagon dashed up to the house and several policemen, carrying cocked revolvers, came in.

"Hello, Tom Dugan!" said the sergeant in command. "Caught again! And you, Pete Miller! I thought you were working the west."

I had captured the Huntington jewels.

But this wasn't all. The property was worth a hundred thousand dollars, and there was a reward offered of ten thousand. This reward, with a bonus, was paid me, for I had risked my life in retaining them.

We're All Actors.

Mme. Alexandria Viarda, the Polish tragedienne, once propounded the following:

"It is a strange thing, but ask a man to mend a rip in his coat.

"No; he is not a tailor.

"Ask another to stop the faucet from leaking.

"No; he's not a plumber.

"Or another to do a bit of cabinet work.

"No; he is not a carpenter.

"But ask any one of the three or all of them to enact a little part in a play and each will smile in fatuous confidence and instantly acquiesce.

"But watch him act!"

Saintliness Unpopular.

That state of mind which let us call the ignominy of the virtuous is not entirely confined to boys of nine years. I have seen grown men and women, being accused of saintliness, over whose faces passed an expression of mortification. They would accept with more complacency the tribute that they were getting to be devils in their old age.—Atlantic.

Lack of Tact.

Do You Want to Make The Women Happy?

Shopping by Mail is vastly unsatisfactory to the Female.

There isn't a woman in Christendom—or in Islam—who doesn't prefer ten times over the trip through a store to the trip to the postoffice.

Why, Lord bless their hearts, the ladies love to shop! It's just as unsatisfying and artificial to shop by mail as to make love by mail—and that's the limit.

But, while the women love to walk through aisles of bargains, they love also to read about the bargains. When a newspaper comes to the house, which page does the woman peruse first? The page with the biggest shopping ads. Sure thing! Won't fail one time in ten. Test it and see.

In communities where the merchants don't advertise big enough to tempt the women, what happens? The Mail Order Catalogue comes along, full of attractive ads., with prices put down in black and white. The women read the catalogue; they are tempted by the bargains offered; they send their money by mail.

Thus they miss nine-tenths of the glory and joy of shopping. But what else can the poor ladies do?

Now, Mr. Merchant of Our Town, be good to the ladies. Give them some interesting reading matter. Print some of your bargains in your home paper. Put the prices there in black and white.

Isn't it really a pity to deprive the ladies of one of their supreme delights—shopping, seeing things, inspecting before taking?

BE GOOD TO THE LADIES AND YOU'LL BE PROSPEROUS.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL

One Member Refuses to Sign Minnesota Commission Report.

H. V. Mercer and W. E. McEwen, members of the Minnesota employers' liability commission, created by the legislature of 1909, presented a workingmen's compensation bill to the legislature, with a report on the subject covering 289 pages. George M. Gillette of Minneapolis, the third member of the commission, does not sign the report, but files a memorandum giving his three reasons for refusing. These are replied to by the other members in separate statements.

Mr. Gillette's reasons for refusing to sign are briefly these: First, that he favors assessing the employe for a part of the cost; second, that the compulsory scheme provided is probably unconstitutional; third, that the cost to industries will be a great burden. Mr. Gillette represents the interests of employers, who will oppose the bill as drawn. Mr. McEwen represents organized labor, and Mr. Mercer, as an attorney, is the "disinterested third party" on the commission.

MINNEAPOLIS WOMAN KILLED

Succumbs to Wound Inflicted by Alleged Highwayman.

Mrs. John C. Henson of Minneapolis, aged thirty-five, was murdered by a highwayman near her home. There is no clue to the murderer.

The woman was shot through the left breast, dying at St. Mary's hospital twelve hours later.

Mrs. Henson was going home from a visit to her mother, Mrs. John E. Hughes, four blocks from her own home, when the highwayman attacked her.

STEADY GROWTH OF MINNESOTA BANKS

Deposits Increase Enormously During Past Year.

State banks have $17,000,000 more resources now than they had a year ago, according to a statement issued by Kelsey S. Chase, superintendent of banks. There are 696 banks under his jurisdiction now as compared with 648 a year ago. The increase in number, together with additions of capital stock, brings the total increase in capital stock of state banks to $861,000 for the year.

The total resources of the state banks Jan. 7, 1911, was $123,964,688, of which $95,800,000 consisted of loans and discounts. The cash on hand then amounted to $4,920,000.

Deposits in the banks have increased enormously during the year. The increase in time certificates alone has been $9,000,000, the total being $64,000,000. There has also been an increase of $3,000,000 in deposits subject to check, the total now being $34,854,628.

Minneapolis Murder Mystery.

Another murder mystery developed for the Minneapolis police department to solve in the finding of the mutilated body of a man probably sixty years old near Glenwood Park, two blocks beyond the city limits. The body was found in a small clump of timber, and, according to the coroner, had been there for several weeks. The body was mutilated and the head crushed in.

Arrested for Girl's Death.

Blanche Stokes, seventeen years of age, daughter of a widow residing at Monticello, died from the effects of an alleged criminal operation. A coroner's jury was summoned and returned a verdict accusing Dr. E. S. Gibbs of performing the operation. He was arrested and bound over, giving a bond of $800 for his appearance in court.

Young Man Kills Himself.

Edwin Ceynar, twenty-six years old, son of John Ceynar, a farmer near Sauk Center, committed suicide by taking strychnine. He wanted to marry a young woman who lives near there, but was opposed by her friends. He became despondent and this is supposed to have caused him to take his life.

Famous Engineer Dead.

Colonel J. T. Fanning, a resident of Minneapolis for twenty-five years and one of the most distinguished members of the engineering profession of this country, is dead. He had been ill about ten days with pneumonia. Colonel Fanning was born at Norwich, Conn., Dec. 31, 1837.

BOARD ISSUES STATEMENT

Two Iowa College Presidents Asked to Resign.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Feb. 7.—"The reason for calling for the resignations of Dr. George MacLean, president of the state university, and Dr. A. B. Storms of the state college at Ames was that neither of these college executives was able to deal with the situation in his respective institution."

This was the statement issued by the board of education here to quiet the rumors that recently have been heard concerning the resignation of Dr. MacLean from the state university presidency.

THE HENPECKED CLUB.

Queer Methods of a Queer Society in Lancashire, England.

Of all the queer clubs that exist in the world you will find some of the queerest in Lancashire, England. One of these is called the Henpecked club. As the title indicates, its members are all males, and you can come across a club in almost every Lancashire town of any size.

The meetings are held, as a rule, in some bar parlor, and the discussions are about members and often nonmembers who have the reputation of being henpecked. When evidence has been brought to show that a particular man has allowed himself to come under his wife's thumb they tax him with it in the place of meeting. The president delivers a lecture on the danger of a husband permitting his wife to usurp his position as master, and when the others have indorsed his remarks the person to whom the speeches are addressed is warned that if he continues to stand the henpecking he will be made the subject of a demonstration.

The announcement that a "henpecked" club demonstration is to take place is received in the district with mixed feelings. The men applaud it, and the local police, recalling similar displays that led to trouble, become a little anxious. On the evening appointed the members of the club meet at a public house, where they arm themselves with all kinds of household utensils; then, led by concertina players or a tin whistle band, they start out and march along the crowded streets of the district.

One man carries a broom, another a swab, a third a shovel or a coal scuttle or a fender or a poker. Fire tongs, blacklead brushes, washtubs, buckets—everything used in the home, in fact—is carried shoulder high. As they march along to the music in front and the discordant clanging of their baggage they sing snatches of songs in which the name of the victim occurs often.

The mission of the verses, which have been specially composed for the occasion by a local poet, is to hold up the henpecked one to ridicule, the reason for the demonstrators bearing the household goods being, of course, to remind him that, having fallen under petticoat government, he will quickly become the slavey.

When they reach the cottage where their victim resides they form a circle in front of the door and sing and clang their fenders and coal scuttles more loudly than ever.

The man inside is invoked by the president during a halt in the program to "be a man" and join his brethren. Sometimes if he looks upon the affair as more of a joke than anything else he does their bidding, and they reform and march to headquarters with him at their head. Usually, however, his wife appears instead with a bucket of soapy water, which she promptly throws over the demonstrators, or she quickly causes a clearance with a hose pipe.

To the onlooker it is just an exhibition for laughter and nothing more, but behind the scenes there is generally a lot of trouble and heartaching. A good number of these "henpecked" demonstrations have sequels in police courts. Sometimes it is an enraged victim being charged with assaulting a demonstrator, but more often than not the sequel shows a wife appealing to the magistrate for a separation order.—London Tit-Bits.

A Bullet Stopped the Game.

Alfred de Musset, the poet and dramatist, was almost as fond of chess as of poetry. He played nearly every night at the Cafe de la Regence, and even the revolution of February, 1848, did not divert him from his habit. He turned up as usual and, finding no one there to play with, insisted that the waiter should make a game for him. The waiter did so, though a fusillade was raging in the street outside, and all went well until a musket bullet smashed a mirror in immediate proximity to the board. Musset was anxious to continue in spite of the interruption, but his opponent would not. "With monsieur's permission," he said, "we will adjourn the game until after the republic has been proclaimed."—Paris Gaulois.

Sentimental Juries.

Maitre Henri Robert, the most famous advocate in criminal cases at the Paris bar, told an audience almost entirely composed of ladies that before any jury a woman with some youth, some looks and a pretty voice has fifty chances out of a hundred of being acquitted, whereas a man would have only one. If she knows how to shed tears at the right moment she need not worry—a verdict of not guilty is a dead certainty.—Paris Letter.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

SENATE AGAIN ON RECORD

Upper House of the Legislature Again Kills the Reapportionment Proposition.

The state senate has again declared against reapportionment. The G. P. Wilson resolution, limiting legislative membership to 63 senators and 126 representatives, was beaten in committee of the whole, 31 to 25. On a roll call later it was lost again, 29 to 31. In the general debate friends of reapportionment made it plain that the vote would be a test and while opponents of the resolution denied it the result is generally regarded as indicating that reapportionment is impossible at this session.

With one lonely vote against it the house passed the 1-mill road tax bill and with two votes in opposition passed its companion measure, the highway commission bill. These are the measures drafted by Robert C. Dunn of Princeton and introduced by the committee on roads and bridges.

By a unanimous vote the house committee on general legislation recommended for passage the bill by Representative Thomas Kneeland proposing a constitutional amendment for a convention to revise the state constitution.

John Saugstad is declared elected state senator from Polk county by 202 plurality over A. D. Stephens in the unanimous report of the elections committee.

ENDORSES PARCELS POST

Minnesota House on Record for Lower Package Rates.

A joint resolution memorializing congress to provide for a parcels post system was passed by the lower branch of the state legislature. The resolution was drafted and introduced by Frank Hopkins of Fairfax and in its preamble recites that express rates are exceedingly high, that there is no real competition among express companies and that the only relief for the public from the present situation will be through the federal government, by installing the conveyance of small parcels and packages through the mails at low rates.

The house committee on state fair is preparing a bill which will make the fair a semi-state organization. The committee is satisfied to allow the State Agricultural society to elect its own officers, but it wants the state to fix salaries and to supervise improvement and construction work.

ORGANIZE NATIONAL BODY

Northwestern Railway Mail Men Meet in St. Paul.

Upon the receipt of letters from railway mail clerks in practically every state in the Union asking for a national organization representative mail clerks of the Northwest held a meeting at St. Paul and created the "National Brotherhood of Railway Mail Clerks." The "Northwestern Brotherhood of Railway Mail Clerks" will be incorporated in the new organization and a new charter will be asked for to include both organizations.

A general discussion of grievances resulted in a long telegram to James Manahan, the attorney of the clerks, who has gone to Washington to present their cause before the government officials.

TALK OF DIVIDING STATE

Northern Minnesota Complains of Unfair Representation.

A division of the state of Minnesota along the line just south of Brainerd is being discussed by some men from the northern part of the state, as the result of the apparent opposition to reapportionment in the senate.

"If we do not get an unselfish reapportionment law, one based on the last census, the law providing for the taxation of state land for school, road and bridge purposes and other legislation we demand, the Northern Minnesota Development association will at once take steps to divide the state at a state line just south of Brainerd," declared Francis J. McPartlin, county attorney of Koochiching county, and a leading figure in the development association.

Death on Wedding Eve.

A coroner's jury at Knapp, called to investigate the death of Hilma Erickson, aged thirty-five, who died suddenly after an hour's sickness, came to the conclusion that she died from strychnine poison taken or given in a way unknown to the jury. She was to have been married to Emil Osland Monday and she died Sunday evening.

Dies at Age of 106.

Miss Victoria Kukchura, aged 106 years, died of old age at the residence of her niece, Mrs. John Marshall, at Duluth. She was born in Poland in 1804. She was the oldest citizen in Duluth and probably the oldest maiden lady in America.

A Great Battle Painter

How He Got His Start

By GERALD L. PERKINS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The battle of Gravelotte had been fought; a smoke mist still hung over the field, though in the gathering darkness it was gradually becoming imperceptible. A man carrying a portfolio and paraphernalia necessary to sketching left the field and, making his way to a hut on a hill overlooking the scene of the engagement that had occurred that day between the French and the Prussians, entered the hut and asked if he might have some supper.

"Certainly, monsieur," said a woman who was there, "but we can give you very little. The soldiers of both armies have taken all we have except a few bits that we hid in the cellar. Come, Fanchette, bestir yourself and set the table!"

The table was set and the supper put upon it. The stranger sat down, and Fanchette poured into his glass some of the cheap wine of the country. She was between seventeen and eighteen years old, a simple French maid who had no secrets from any one in the world.

"You wear a sad look, Fanchette," said the stranger. "Is it from seeing the slaughter today?"

"No, monsieur. I did not look that way."

"Well, then, tell me what troubles you."

"It is this, monsieur. Antoine Brisson went out along the fighting and received a wound. He is lying now in the next room."

"He is your brother?"

"No, monsieur."

"Well, then, he is your lover?"

To this the only reply was eyes cast upon the floor.

"What was he doing out there—fighting?"

"No, monsieur; he has not yet become a conscript. He will not be the age for a month."

"Well, then, what business had he on a battlefield?"

"Sketching!"

"Sketching? That's what I was doing there. When I have finished my supper I will go in and see him."

The stranger chatted on with the girl and easily gleaned from her that she and Antoine could not marry because she had no dot. After having supped and smoked a pipe the artist went into the room where Antoine was lying. The boy had received a flesh wound, but not of sufficient importance to endanger his life.

"So you were making sketches of the fight?" said the artist. "That is my business. I have been drawing for one of the Paris illustrated papers. Let me see what you have done."

Fanchette took an improvised portfolio that she had made for her lover of two pieces of pasteboard laced together with a string and brought it to the artist. There were blood stains on it, but he did not mind that. He had seen plenty of blood that day. He opened the portfolio, took out what there was in it—five or six sketches—and began to look them over.

"Where did you learn to sketch?" he asked the boy.

"I have never learned, monsieur," he replied.

"Never studied in an art school; never had any instruction?"

"No, monsieur."

The artist went on looking at the sketches one after the other and when he had seen them all looked at them again. Then he turned his eyes to the boy on the bed.

"Do you know, my boy, that my paper sent me here to make sketches of this battle? I have graduated at the art school with honors, and yet you who have never taken a lesson have done what I cannot do."

"What do you mean, monsieur?" asked the boy, his eyes opening very wide, while Fanchette was all attention.

"You are a born battle painter. You have put into these crude sketches an action that I have not been able to put in mine. And you have known what scenes to select. Your soldiers move; they fight; they are impelled by the demon of war; they die—really die, while mine—well, mine beside yours are like toy soldiers."

"Oh, monsieur," exclaimed Fanchette, clasping her hands, "how good you are to say that!"

"Good to say that! I'm not talking to please you. I'm telling you the truth. And, to prove what I say, if Antoine when he has recovered will come to Paris I am sure I can interest art lovers in him who will see that he receives instruction."

"Oh, monsieur," replied Fanchette, "how can he do that? He has no money. He would have to walk to Paris."

"Not at all! I will take these sketches with me. They will be used in one of the illustrated papers and will be well paid for. The money received for them I will send to Antoine."

The same night, having hired a conveyance, the artist set out posthaste for Paris. Antoine's sketches were produced and created a sensation. The money paid for them was sent him. He went to Paris, where owing to the interest created by his pictures he was taken up and educated by the paper that published them.

All this occurred forty years ago, and the great battle painter has flourished and passed away. His widow loved to tell how he got his start.

LEGALLY HANGED

By CHARLES LEWIS PHIPPS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Which one of all your cases," I asked Wilcox, the celebrated criminal lawyer, "has most excited your interest?"

"That of Mathews, who was accused of murder."

"Was he innocent or guilty?"

"Innocent."

"Did you secure his acquittal?"

"No."

"Hanged?"

"Yes; legally hanged."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I'll tell you. Mathews was in the employ of Henderson, the man who was murdered. I don't care to go into the details of the case; I will only say that there was so much circumstantial evidence against him that from the first I despaired of saving his neck. I knew he was innocent, though he could no more explain the circumstances that pointed to his guilt than I could."

"How did you know he was innocent?"

"By both experience and intuition. I defy any of my clients to deceive me in this regard. I simply look them in the eye, and that tells me the story.

"There was everything about Mathews' case to interest me. He was a younger son of a British country gentleman and in love with the daughter of another British gentleman. His mother had no knowledge of his having been accused of crime, much less having been convicted, for I could do nothing to prove him innocent. He showed me his mother's letters, and it was distressing to read them. His betrothed was also writing him without any knowledge that he was under sentence of death. A week before he was to be hanged a letter from solicitors in England was handed him, informing him that a bachelor uncle had died and left him a large fortune."

"Upon my word! It was an interesting case, wasn't it?"

"I should say so. If ever there was a man who had everything to live for Mathews had. And to be judicially executed without ever having wronged any one in his life was simply awful. You have no idea how having a life on your hands wears on a man, and this case nearly drove me insane.

"But I braced myself for a gigantic effort. After conferring with Mathews I decided to cable the solicitors in England, giving them the situation and asking how much funds they could cable me within a few days. They placed £20,000 to my credit, and with this sum I went to work. There was no use in trying to secure delay or a new trial. What I must do was to interest the sheriff. I had a long secret conference with him, but could not move him to act for money, though I so far secured his judgment that he must do an official wrong in hanging Mathews that he consented to wink at any game I might practice, provided it could be kept secret.

"I got a friend of mine who was a professor in a medical college to apply for the body of Mathews as soon as he was dead. This enabled me to gain possession of the condemned man the moment the hanging was over. Then I "fixed" every official who was to be present at the hanging. Mathews put in a request that there should be no spectators present. I could not even be present myself. But there was not one of the officials to whom I paid less than $10,000, and the hangman got $25,000. My friend the doctor was the only one present who got nothing. He had a coffin ready for the corpse as soon as it was taken from the gallows and a hearse to carry it to the hospital.

"Well, that night I went to the hospital and found Mathews locked in the doctor's room."

"But how was the hanging managed?"

"I don't know; I never asked. There were half a dozen men paid by the state to see that Mathews was hanged, and I paid every one of them—in all $100,000—to go through the process without hanging him. All I know is that I paid the money and found Mathews alive in the doctor's room. Some burnt cork, a woolly wig and a suit of clothes procured from a Jew tailor fixed him so that no one would know him. I had a steerage ticket for him in an outgoing steamer, and early the next morning he was on his way to England."

"He must have been very grateful to you."

"Grateful! I should say so. Before parting with me he made me promise that I would come over as soon as possible and see him. I couldn't go for a year, and then I found him in possession of £50,000 a year income and married to the woman he loved. He met me on the steamer, and the first thing he did was to impress it upon me that neither his mother nor his wife nor any one living except his solicitors knew that he was judicially dead in America. He had often tried to bring himself to unburden his secret to his wife, but had always failed.

"Mathews entertained me royally and begged me to suggest some way for him to pay the debt he owed me, even if it required every cent of his fortune. I assured him that I took more comfort in his case than in all the cases I had ever won, though I had lost it.

"After spending a month with him I left him to return. He could hardly bear to part with me and regretted that it wouldn't be safe for him to come to America or he would cross the ocean with me. He shed tears when I came away."

LAYING BRICKS.

How Scientific Methods Raised the Standard of a Day's Work.

There are now eminent consulting engineers who are engaged by industrial heads to study their establishments from top to bottom, with a view to finding by scientific study the methods of working, accounting and handling labor which will improve on the old traditional habits. Some extraordinary results have been attained. What scientific management means is admirably illustrated by the story of bricklaying, as told by an expert.

Ordinarily a brick mason makes eighteen different sets of motions in laying a single brick. He bends over, in the first place, to pick up one brick, and in lifting it he lifts ten pounds of brick and about a hundred pounds of brick mason—the upper part of his own body. In laying 1,000 bricks in a day's work he lifts 100,000 pounds of brick mason. This was an obvious waste of labor. So a common laborer was hired to put the bricks where the masons would not have to stoop for them. Another thing is that when a mason picks up a handmade brick, which is always a little thicker at one side than on the other, he tosses the brick up, turning it over until his touch tells him which side is the top before he puts it in place in the wall. The cure for this was to have all the bricks piled top up before they were brought to the masons. Then, further, every one has seen the mason tap his brick several times to settle it into the mortar—more waste of time. The cure was to make the mortar thinner, so that the weight of the brick would settle it into the right position. This was scientific management, "motion study." It raised the day's work for the average brick mason from 1,000 up to 2,700 bricks a day and in individual cases to much higher figures. The mason made only six motions where he used to make eighteen.—American Review of Reviews.

WHISTLER WAS INDIGNANT.

The Idea of Buying His Pictures and Then Demanding Possession.

A certain eminent English lady, the proud possessor of a title of fairly high degree, who admired Whistler's genius to the extent of purchasing one of his pictures, never was able to obtain possession of her property. One day she drove to the studio in her victoria. Mr. Whistler went to greet her.

"Mr. Whistler," she said, "two years ago I bought one of your pictures, a beautiful thing, and I have never been able to hang it on my walls. It has been loaned to one exhibition or another. Now, today I have my carriage with me, and I would like to take it home with me. I am told it is in your possession."

"Dear lady," returned Whistler, "you ask the impossible. I will send it to you when I have it again, but it is not here. You have been misinformed." And so forth, and so forth, to the same effect, and the lady drove off without her picture.

After she had departed Whistler commenced to poke around his studio and, to the great astonishment of a friend who had been an involuntary listener to the above conversation, he brought forth a canvas.

"Here it is," he said. "She was right about one thing—it is beautiful." And it was beautiful.

"But the impudence of these people," he continued, "who think that because they pay a few paltry hundred pounds they own my pictures. Why, it merely secures them the privilege of having them in their houses now and then! The pictures are mine!"

A Medical Sherlock Holmes.

A physician was knocked down and robbed while on his way to see a patient. His pockets were rifled, and one of the articles stolen was a clinical thermometer with which he had earlier in the evening taken the temperature of a patient. He remembered the temperature registered and also that he had not shaken down the mercury before putting the thermometer in his pocket. He communicated these facts to the police. Some time afterward a thermometer registering the identical temperature was discovered in a pawnshop, and the police were enabled thereby to track the doctor's assailants and to arrest them.

The Wicked Majority.

A new gardener had been employed on a Long Island estate. This man was raking leaves off the lawn one fall day when a neighbor, passing by, inquired of him, "Where's the gardener who used to work here?"

"Dead, sir," was the reply.

"Dead!" said the astonished neighbor. Then, musing, he added, "Joined the great majority, eh?"

"Oh, sir," the gardener interrupted in a shocked voice, "I wouldn't like to say that. He was a good enough man as far as I know."

Caution.

"Shall I have this prescription filled without further consultation?" asked the patient.

"Certainly," replied the physician. "Why not?"

"I thought maybe I'd better call in a handwriting expert."—Washington Star.

Reciprocity.

There is one word which may serve as a rule of practice for all one's life—that word is reciprocity. What you do not wish done to yourself do not do to others.—Confucius.

Pretty Narrow.

Mrs. Hoyle—Is there much room in your flat? Mrs. Doyle—I should say not! There isn't room to give anybody a broad hint.—Judge.

An Unfortunate Situation

By JOHN TURNLEE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The only definite feature respecting my attentions to Phoebe Constant was that they were unwelcome to her father. Mothers are less apt to take definite ground with regard to their daughters, especially men friends, and the only opposition to my being devoted to Phoebe came from her father. Mind you, I was not engaged to her. I was not sure that I wished to be engaged to her, and she had not indicated that she wished to be engaged to me. This matter of love is usually considered as something that comes suddenly, turning a couple from indifference to a wild passion for each other. I admit that there are many such cases, but mine was not one of that kind.

One day Phoebe wrote me a note suggesting that if I had nothing special on hand for the evening I'd better come to see her. I did so and found that her father had gone on business to a neighboring town and would not be at home before 11 o'clock. If there is anything needed to bring about a love affair it is something clandestine. The fact that Phoebe had sent for me to be with her while her father would know nothing about it inspired me with a more tender feeling for her. Indeed, it opened the bud of love. For the first time in my life I put some warmth into my words and bearing toward her and received a corresponding response. When I left her I felt that we had made a beginning in a new relationship.

Mr. Constant kept a large dog on his premises which was unchained every night at 10 o'clock. Not wishing to make my presence during Mr. Constant's absence especially known among the servants, I did not suggest any delay in unchaining the dog, intending to leave just before 10 o'clock. At five minutes before 10 I said good night to Phoebe—no kiss; I hadn't got that far; only a pressure of the hand—and started down the walk leading to the gate. I hadn't gone more than half way before I saw a black mass moving in another part of the yard and knew it for the dog. I was about ten steps from a tree, which I reached in five long ones and, making the jump of my life, caught a branch and drew myself up to a safe place.

Either my watch was wrong or the dog had been let out ahead of time. It did not matter which was the case, I was a prisoner in a tree near a walk along which Mr. Constant would pass when he came home. If the dog had barked Phoebe would have heard him and suspected that I was in trouble. But he did not utter a single growl. I saw no way to attract the attention of any one in the house, and, as to coming down into the jaws of the fierce brute below me, it was not to be considered. When he found he couldn't reach me he simply lay down and waited.

My position was unpleasant in more respects than one. That first sweet passion of love which had entered by blood I found delicious. I knew that a young woman about to enter upon a love affair is very sensitive to any noble or ignoble attitude the man in the case may occupy. I dreaded to be caught by her father upon a tree like a thief, guarded by a watchdog. It was a contemptible position for me and would place Phoebe in an unenviable attitude with regard to her father, indicating that she had received me clandestinely during his absence.

If I could only think of some ingenious way to escape the dog or, better yet, some daring stroke to overcome him I might not only avoid losing prestige, but gain it. I looked about me for a means of escape. The trees were very thick, but toward the gate not thick enough to admit of my passing from one to the other and out of the grounds. Toward the house the prospect looked more favorable. I determined to try it. Better be caught like a burglar than a sneak thief.

By climbing from branch to branch and making some desperate leaps, the dog following me, I finally gained the roof of the house. When I got there I couldn't get back, for the limb from which I dropped, relieved of my weight, sprang upward beyond my reach. I found myself in a sort of roof pocket directly in front of a window.

It seemed to me that I had not improved the situation. I had got rid of the dog, but had been cornered on the roof. In any event I must stay where I was till relieved by human help. I heard a train come in at the station half a mile away, and in about twenty minutes Mr. Constant came in at the gate and spoke to the dog. I rejoiced that dogs can't talk and this one couldn't give me away. Then the front door closed, and the next development was a bright light in the window before which I was standing and from which I could not move. And what was my horror to see Mr. Constant beginning to disrobe.

He advanced at once to draw down the shade and, seeing a man on the narrow ledge of the roof outside the window, was about to turn for some weapon for defense when, placing my face against a pane, I implored him by my expression to desist. The light shone on my features, and he recognized me.

That was the end of my attentions to Phoebe Constant. She never quite satisfied her father but that there was some mystery about the matter greatly to my discredit, and she could never again think of me as a lover.

The Reward

She Received For Bringing Washington Information

By MAY C. ETHEREDGE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When Washington was at Cambridge in command of the patriot army holding the British shut up in Boston it was his object to capture them if he could, if not to force them out. He sent a spy into the city to learn of their strength and condition.

The young man selected for this work was Joel Armstrong, twenty-two years old, who a few days before had left Boston to join the army at Cambridge on the eve of his betrothal to Sally Perkins.

Washington instructed him to discover just what supplies and ammunition the British possessed. The general knew the numbers and armament.

It is not far from Cambridge to Boston; indeed, they are now one city. Joel had no need to fear being taken in citizen's dress, for he had no uniform. He had always lived in Boston and knew all routes between it and its environs. He went through in the night, and in the morning when Sally had just lighted the fire in the kitchen and was swinging the crane bearing the pot to boil the water he walked in, and they were locked in each other's arms.

There was no great danger to Joel in going about the city so long as he was not liable to be caught with information on his person. The American army was considered by the British rather as a rabble than an organized force, and transitory at that. Joel collected all the information he wanted from patriot citizens who knew very well how General Howe was situated. But he did not dare trust to his memory. Besides, certain citizens were desirous of sending communications to Washington informing him of various matters important for him to know. Joel took all these letters and papers to Sally and asked her to sew them in the lining of his coat.

Now, it so happened that a British soldier whom Joel had known and had told that he was going to Cambridge to fight against the tyrant king saw Joel walking past Faneuil hall. This soldier saw the young patriot go into the house where Sally Perkins lived and told his captain of the circumstances. The captain told his colonel, and a guard was sent to the house to prevent Joel's going back to the American army, lest he carry information.

It so happened that Sally was sewing the papers in Joel's coat when, looking out through a window from which she could see some distance down the street, she spied a squad of soldiers coming, the officer making inquiries as he came. She also saw a citizen point to her home. Quick as a flash she inferred that Joel was in danger. Pulling a huge chest out from under a bed, she put her lover into it and shoved it back as the soldiers stopped before the house and surrounded it. An officer walked in without knocking and found Sally at her spinning wheel.

Joel was not discovered, but the guard remained outside on watch so that if he were still there he could not leave. Sally told Joel of the situation, and he was much chagrined that he could not deliver the information he possessed to General Washington.

"I suppose I shall have to burn it all," he said.

"How would it do for me to take it?" Sally asked.

"Do you think you could?"

"Of course."

So Joel transferred the papers to Sally, who concealed them about her person and walked out of the house in face of the guard. The officer looked dubious about letting her go, since he had received orders to permit no one to leave the house. But Sally paid no attention to him, though her heart was beating like a trip hammer.

Sally, fearing she might be followed, went among the shops making purchases. She saw a redcoat following her, but managed to elude him. When it was quite dark she started for Cambridge, keeping to the fields. Finding a boat on the Charles river, she appropriated it and, rowing across, was taken in by an American sentry. She asked to be conducted to the commander in chief.

Washington was conferring with people who called to see him on innumerable subjects when a sentry announced Sally Perkins.

"What can I do for you, Mistress Perkins?" asked the general.

"Nothing, general. I am doing something for you. You sent Joel Armstrong, a soldier in your army, to Boston for information. He is shut up there and cannot leave for the redcoats who are watching the house. Here is what he collected for you."

The general's face lighted at seeing the papers. He took them and, having glanced at them, said:

"We are under obligations to you, Mistress Perkins, for these papers, which are of great value to us. What can I do in recognition of our appreciation of your heroic act? Is there anything I can give you?"

"Yes, general, a kiss. I would like to be able to say that I have kissed the commander in chief."

Washington, though he was old enough to be the girl's father, colored slightly. He was so dignified as well as modest that this reward given before a dozen persons was a great trial to him. He submitted to be kissed on the cheek by the girl, then said:

"Now that this worthless reward has been given you must go and have something of value—a supper."

Joel Armstrong remained hidden till Boston was evacuated.

THE HENPECKED CLUB.

Queer Methods of a Queer Society in Lancashire, England.

Of all the queer clubs that exist in the world you will find some of the queerest in Lancashire, England. One of these is called the Henpecked club. As the title indicates, its members are all males, and you can come across a club in almost every Lancashire town of any size.

The meetings are held, as a rule, in some bar parlor, and the discussions are about members and often nonmembers who have the reputation of being henpecked. When evidence has been brought to show that a particular man has allowed himself to come under his wife's thumb they tax him with it in the place of meeting. The president delivers a lecture on the danger of a husband permitting his wife to usurp his position as master, and when the others have indorsed his remarks the person to whom the speeches are addressed is warned that if he continues to stand the henpecking he will be made the subject of a demonstration.

The announcement that a "henpecked" club demonstration is to take place is received in the district with mixed feelings. The men applaud it, and the local police, recalling similar displays that led to trouble, become a little anxious. On the evening appointed the members of the club meet at a public house, where they arm themselves with all kinds of household utensils; then, led by concertina players or a tin whistle band, they start out and march along the crowded streets of the district.

One man carries a broom, another a swab, a third a shovel or a coal scuttle or a fender or a poker. Fire tongs, blacklead brushes, washtubs, buckets—everything used in the home, in fact—is carried shoulder high. As they march along to the music in front and the discordant clanging of their baggage they sing snatches of songs in which the name of the victim occurs often.

The mission of the verses, which have been specially composed for the occasion by a local poet, is to hold up the henpecked one to ridicule, the reason for the demonstrators bearing the household goods being, of course, to remind him that, having fallen under petticoat government, he will quickly become the slavey.

When they reach the cottage where their victim resides they form a circle in front of the door and sing and clang their fenders and coal scuttles more loudly than ever.

The man inside is invoked by the president during a halt in the program to "be a man" and join his brethren. Sometimes if he looks upon the affair as more of a joke than anything else he does their bidding, and they reform and march to headquarters with him at their head. Usually, however, his wife appears instead with a bucket of soapy water, which she promptly throws over the demonstrators, or she quickly causes a clearance with a hose pipe.

To the onlooker it is just an exhibition for laughter and nothing more, but behind the scenes there is generally a lot of trouble and heartaching. A good number of these "henpecked" demonstrations have sequels in police courts. Sometimes it is an enraged victim being charged with assaulting a demonstrator, but more often than not the sequel shows a wife appealing to the magistrate for a separation order.—London Tit-Bits.

A Bullet Stopped the Game.

Alfred de Musset, the poet and dramatist, was almost as fond of chess as of poetry. He played nearly every night at the Cafe de la Regence, and even the revolution of February, 1848, did not divert him from his habit. He turned up as usual and, finding no one there to play with, insisted that the waiter should make a game for him. The waiter did so, though a fusillade was raging in the street outside, and all went well until a musket bullet smashed a mirror in immediate proximity to the board. Musset was anxious to continue in spite of the interruption, but his opponent would not. "With monsieur's permission," he said, "we will adjourn the game until after the republic has been proclaimed."—Paris Gaulois.

Sentimental Juries.

Maitre Henri Robert, the most famous advocate in criminal cases at the Paris bar, told an audience almost entirely composed of ladies that before any jury a woman with some youth some looks and a pretty voice has fifty chances out of a hundred of being acquitted, whereas a man would have only one. If she knows how to shed tears at the right moment she need not worry—a verdict of not guilty is a dead certainty.—Paris Letter.

A Rogues' Gallery.

"You know Mrs. Van Gilder's family portrait gallery that she started last year?"

"Yes."

"Well, that great criminal detective office who guarded the wedding presents when Frostie Van Gilder married the oldest De Graft boy told me that he recognized seven of the portraits and they had all done time, whatever that means."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Woes of Wealth.

"Then wealth doesn't bring happiness?"

"No. Since we inherited money my people don't want me to loaf in the grocery. And I can't get no comfort out of loafing in a bank. The hours are too short."—Pittsburg Post.

Honorable industry always travels the same road with enjoyment and duty, and progress is altogether impossible without it.—Samuel Smiles.

GETS BIG CONTRACT

Northwestern Drainage Company Gets a Large Contract In Marshall Co.

Contract Calls For The Removal of 350,000 Cubic Yards of Dirt.

The Northwestern Drainage Company of this city has been awarded the contract for the digging of a ditch in Marshall County which calls for the removal of over 350,000 cubic yards of dirt. The contract also calls for the construction of a highway alongside of the ditch.

The estimated cost for the removal of the dirt has been placed at 11 cents per cubic yard and to make the highway will cost $120 per mile.

The ditch is known as Ditch No. 16.

A Boost For Our City.

Last Sunday's issue of the Minneapolis Tribune contained a full page descriptive article on Thief River Falls and Pennington County. It was prepared by Mr. J. H. Hay, Superintendent of Schools of this city and is by far the best production of it's kind we have ever seen.

Mr. Hay did not deem it necessary or advisable to misrepresent or exaggerate, but gives a plain statement of facts and conditions as they are. The article contains a lot of information and is well written. Some of our citizens have purchased several hundred copies of the paper, which will be mailed to various points south and east so that good advertising results should follow.

Mr. Hay deserves our thanks.

Seed For Burned Districts.

Twenty-five thousand dollars will be appropriated for the purchase of timothy, clover and red top seed for settlers in the burned over districts in Northern Minnesota, if the House accepts the recommendations of the Senate committee on finance and the Senate acts favorably on the bill.

The measure was introduced by Representative Mattson and passed the House. The Senate committee, however, has recommended an amendment of the measure so that destitute settlers only shall be entitled to the seed and that a certain portion of it shall be used on state lands.

Degree of Honor Lodge.

By the assistance of Cathryne Helm, deputy grand chief of honor, D. of H., of Minneapolis, the organization of a Degree of Honor Lodge was perfected for this city in the I. O. O. F. hall last Thursday evening. About 21 members were up to that time put on record. At the meeting that evening the most important officers were elected and installed and committees appointed. The next meeting, which as yet has not been designated, will see the rest of the offices filled and the membership is expected to increase two fold by that time.

Day Goes To Montana.

Butte, Mont., Feb. 10.—Frank A. Day, once the democratic Warwick of Minnesota and John E. King, late state librarian of Minnesota, are in Butte closing a deal for the plant of the Butte Evening News, which suspended publication last week. They will move the plant to Missoula and there found the Sentinel, named after Mr. Day's little daily paper at his home town at Fairmont, Minn.

The Sentinel at Missoula will be printed daily and will stand firmly for the principles of the unterrified democracy. Messrs. Day and King are hopeful that Montana can be kept in the democratic column for many years to come. They will fight the party's battles and on many public questions are expected to take an advanced position. Just what will be their attitude on the pending senatorial contest, the bitterest known in Montana for some time, is as yet problematical.

The desertion of Minnesota by Day and King is taken to mean that they have given up all hope of electing another democratic candidate for governor in that state.—Minneapolis Journal.

Sunday School Convention.

Minnesota's Fifty-Third Sunday School Convention to be held in Mankato, March 8-9-10 next will be Minnesota's greatest. It will consider methods for all Divisions and Departments of the Sunday School, special studies in the problems of Elementary, adolescent and adult periods, Bible Study, Missions, Pedogogy, music, Adult Bible Class work and special emphasis will be placed on the spiritual side of the work. Every sunday school in our county is expected to send the pastor, superintendent and department superintendents and as many others as can be induced to attend. A great parade on Friday night, March 10th. 2000 men in line of march. A great Men's Bible Class Demonstration. Program will be ready for distribution February 20th. Apply to Minnesota S. S. Dedicatory Address—Governor Adolph O. Eberhardt
Music—City Orchestra

DEDICATORY READINGS:

Supt.—To the cause of learning, the advancement of knowledge, the encouragement of enthusiastic civic spirit, the creation of lofty ideals and the promotion of unselfish American patriotism.

All—We dedicate this building.

Supt.—To the truest manhood and womanhood—the highest culture for which education stands.

All—We dedicate this building.

Supt.—That the fine arts—music, painting and poetry may be more highly appreciated and their beauties revealed.

All—We dedicate this building.

Supt.—To the liberal arts and sciences, to manual training, agriculture and domestic economy.

All—We dedicate this building.

Supt.—To the boys and girls of Thief River Falls and surrounding territory, as a temple and a workshop devoted to their development into men and women, sane of mind and sound of body, skilled in learning, trained for work; firm in the belief that man is master of his fate and with the hope that this school may tend to make the young people more useful to themselves, their city, their country and mankind—to these purposes and aims.

All—We dedicate—we consecrate this building.

The date of dedication of the Lincoln High School building has been set by the Governor for Monday February 27th, one week later than was first announced. This change was made to suit the convenience of the chief executive and other state officials who desired to be present at the exercises.

Monday afternoon will be devoted to an inspection of the building by citizens and visitors. High School students will be delegated to lead parties of inspection and explain the purpose of the different rooms and apparatus. The schools will be in session all day. The dedicatory program will begin at the Lincoln assembly room at 7:30 sharp, and will be continued at the Auditorium at 8.30. This will permit everybody the opportunity of hearing the dedicatory address of Governor Eberhart, which will be delivered in the latter building. The official program appears in another column and will be followed exactly as announced. A sufficient number of programs will be prepared so that all who attend may be supplied. Invitations have been issued to all school boards and teachers in neighboring towns and to all state educational institutions. It is expected that the citizens will assist by their presence in making this ceremony an epoch marking event in the history of Thief River Falls. Everybody in town and surrounding country is cordially invited.

GOVERNOR EBERHART.

Last of The Indians.

Little Falls Herald—In a recent number we called attention to the removal of Chief Andu So Ge Shig (Daily) from Mozomona Point, on Mille Lacs lake, to White Earth Indian Reservation says the Onamia Lake Breeze. And now his son-in-law George Nikabone (We Shay Mah) with his family, have followed the old Chief to White Earth. Nikabone is one of the most progressive Indians that remained around the lake; he was a good worker and always made a good living for his family, and sent his children to school. He had horses, wagons, sleighs, etc.

Commissioner Dar Hall hired a car for him and shipped horses, wagons and all his belongings by rail to Ogema on the White Earth reservation.

This for the first time in history, cleans Mozomona Point of Indians. This tract of land has long been the center of Indian activity. A great Indian village was once located here. The wisest men of the tribe, the greatest warriors, medicine men and jugglers once radiated from this locality, carrying their orders and instructions from Mozomona Point. Here Father Hennepin was a prisoner, the first white man to gaze upon this great lake; here are the evidences of prehistoric Indians who lived in mud huts and were driven into them and destroyed by the hordes of prairie Indians who swarmed in from the Northwest. What a story of pomp, love, war and distress old Mozomona Point could tell, but the advance of the tidal wave of civilization stops not for tradition, as it has grappled with other localities, so has it engulfed Mozomona Point.

EXTENSION OF TIME

Extension of Time For Payment on Red Lake Indian Reservation.

Involves Save Length of Time in Making Final Proof.

The following letter from the department of the interior, general land office at Washington, D. C., was received by L. M. Hoag the first of the week.

Mr. L. M. Hoag,

Dear Sir: In reply to your letter of January 30, 1911, you are advised that by the Act of March 20 1910, settlers on lands in the Red Lake Indian Reservation, opened under the Act of February 20, 1904, (33 Stat., 46) were granted an extension of time to make payment for two years from the date of the passage of said Act of March 20, 1910. The extension of time for payment involves a corresponding extension of time for making proof.

Very Respectfully,
S. W. Proudfit,
Assistant Commissioner.

Have Your Seeds Tested.

One of the greatest sources of weeds on the farm is the sowing of impure seed. Too much impure seed is sown, and too much seed that will not germinate is put into the ground. One should know just how much pure seed he is sowing and what per cent of it will grow when planted. This information can be obtained only through a purity and germination test of the seed.

The seed laboratory at the Minnesota Experiment Station makes both purity and germination tests free of charge for the farmers of this state, and every farmer should avail himself of this opportunity of having their seeds tested.

Any sample addressed to the Seed Laboratory, Experiment Station, St. Paul, Minn., will be tested both for purity and germination. In sending seed, get a good average sample from the bin or sack, and send a large handful.

Do not wait until it is too late. Have your seeds tested at once.—L. Osborne, University Farm.

For Sale—Lumber in carload lots and fence posts very cheap. For particulars address Box 119. City.

Dr. Tupper Heard From

The following article taken from the Daily News, at Mount Vernon, Ill., will be interesting news to Dr. Tupper's many friends in this city:

"A fine audience greeted Dr. Tupper and H. Martin Williams at the court house last night to hear the discussion of the question, 'Resolved, that Socialism is the Only Remedy for Poverty.'

The debate was opened by Dr. Tupper in the affirmative in a speech of 30 minutes in which he presented and explained the doctrines of Socialism as they are generally advocated by Socialists in this country, which he did in a very attractive way.

"Dr. Tupper was followed by Mr Williams in a speech of 45 minutes, in which he endeavored to show that the Socialistic program would prove ineffective as a remedy for poverty. While favoring the public ownership of public utilities, he declared himself an individualist and believed in leaving to individual initiative all businesses and enterprises that are subject to competition.

"As an antidote for poverty, Mr. Williams advocated the Single-Tax, which would free natural opportunities and enable the unemployed to employ themselves and earn natural wages.

In his closing argument of 15 minutes, Dr. Tupper presented arguments to show how Socialism would improve industrial conditions.

Each speaker then answered questions for a half hour. These questions and answers proved to be the most interesting part of the evening's exercises.

Undoubtedly the debate has set many people to thinking and reading on new lines and aroused an interest in social and economic questions that has hitherto lain dormant."

Swedish Steel Stands Foremost in Quality in the World's Production.—Old Home of Henrik Ibsen at Grimstad, Norway, for Sale—Danish Sailor Has Extraordinary Experience While Crossing Atlantic.

SWEDEN.

✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠ ✠

Swedish steel stands foremost in quality in the world's production. This is partially due to the long history of steel and iron making in Sweden and to the government supervision and fostering of the industry. The superiority is mainly due to the excellent quality of ore produced, which averages 68.05 per cent iron. Another reason is that all the smelting is done with charcoal, which being practically free from phosphorus and sulphur, has a beneficial influence on the quality of the iron. The small charges which are necessary, owing to the small capacity of the average steel works in that country, coupled with extreme care and good judgment, enable them to produce a better quality of steel. The Swedish iron industry extends back to the Twelfth century and Sweden is really the place where the industry was cradled. The development of the industry in Sweden went hand in hand with the perfecting of the steel blast furnace, which is such an essential part of steel making today. The country's first steel company was founded about 1225, but the year 1400 marks the real beginning of iron making in Sweden. The personality of kings entered into its progression. Gustavius I. and Charles IX., who fully appreciated the value of the iron deposits of their country, fostered the industry and soon put it in first place in iron producing. Gustavius I. personally owned and operated the famous Finspongs works and blast furnace and manufactured the first iron cannon there in 1555. In the early stage of the industry most primitive methods were used. Ore was mined by burning wood on the rocks, after which the ore could be broken loose with a hammer. In 1729 gunpowder and hand drills were introduced. Pneumatic tools are now used. Generally, at this time, steam engines are the hoisting power, displacing horse and water power. The first blast furnaces were very rude, being made of clay, timber and fireproof material. The blast came from a common blacksmith's bellows which was operated by water power. Charcoal was and is still used altogether in steel making. Sweden exported 3,065,000 tons of iron ore in 1904. Bessemer steel achieved its present high reputation in Sweden. It was produced there as early as 1858.

A Stockholm correspondent says: "Among the future queens of the Old World it will be difficult to find one more charming or more womanly than the crown princess of Sweden, nee Princess Margaret of Connaught. She has completely captivated high and low in her adopted country and in her own suave and delightful manner she has made her influence felt in many directions. She is, for instance, a strong believer in temperance—which the Swedes proverbally are not—and the gentle example set by herself and the crown prince has already worked wonders. Princess Margaret is the best and happiest of mothers and her determination to nurse her own babies was greeted with general approval. She takes profound interest in everything concerning Sweden, its history, the welfare of the poor, etc., and the last year or two her royal highness has arranged for a series of lectures to be held in her salon at the palace in Stockholm, which are attended by the members of the royal family and some of their more intimate friends, among whom may frequently be seen the American wife of Herr Laurin. There are generally about forty persons in all. The king is present when no other engagement prevents him and so is the queen. Princess Carl is nearly always an attentive listener and that the crown prince and crown princess always attend goes without saying. The crown princess is also an enthusiastic sportswoman, more particularly where winter sports are concerned. She skates, skis and goes ice yachting whenever an opportunity offers itself and she looks very charming in her short violet leather costume, her kindly brown eyes peeping out from beneath an old fashioned, good sized and very comfortable looking bonnet. Although it is only three years since the princess left London she has acquired the Swedish language and speaks it almost fluently."

The Svea theater caught fire in Stockholm the other day and had it not been for the prompt response on the part of the fire department the beautiful structure would have been doomed. The loss entailed is estimated at less than 50,000 crowns.

In the little town of Grimstad, on the southern coast of Norway, stands an ancient, dilapidated and empty house. It is only one-story and was formerly a chemist's shop. The present proprietor is thinking either of selling the old place or rebuilding it. The empty house in question was once occupied by Henrik Ibsen. The alternative would almost amount to sacrilege, for it was in this unpretentious structure that the great playwright served his apprenticeship and afterwards carried on his business as a chemist. During the agitated period of 1848 and the time of the first war between Prussia and Denmark he passed his time here. Against the alternative proposal of the destruction of Ibsen's house George Brandes, a great admirer of the dramatist, appeals to the storthing to buy the house and preserve it as a national memorial. "Within the walls," writes M. Brandes, "Ibsen perceived the resplendent fame before him, both in poesy and glory. Grimstad, when Ibsen lived there, possessed but 800 inhabitants, and this little structure was the 'bourse' of the town. People gathered there to transact their business and discuss passing events. The souvenirs of Ibsen are rare in Norway," concludes M. Brandes. "Let us preserve this treasure."

The International Ski tournament, which is now in progress in Christiania, is attracting a great deal of attention and hundreds of people are flocking to Voxenkollen, where the contests are taking place. There are large delegations from Denmark, Finland and Sweden and there are scores of winter tourists from Germany and England who are taking in the event. The International Ski tournament, which is an annual event, has grown to such proportions that the hotels of the city make extra preparations to care for foreign guests.

Miss Anna Rogstad, the prominent suffrage leader in Norway, has been appointed a member of the military commission of the storthing. She replaces Commissioner General Bratlie, and is the first woman in the country who has ever occupied a seat in the legislative assembly. She was formerly a school teacher in Christiania and is now fifty-four years old. She is a strong speaker and has also won a reputation as a clever debater.

The Norwegian army budget has been made up by the judiciary commission and presented to the storthing. The expenditures estimated amount to 15,000,000 crowns, which is an increase of over 950,000 crowns over last year's budget. The increase is due the fact that army reorganization has practically been decided upon by the government.

The population of Norway is increasing in the country districts and decreasing in the coast cities of the country.

Henrik Andersen, a twenty-three-year-old Danish sailor who has for several years done service on the English steamer Milton, had a most strange experience a few weeks ago while on the way from Rosario, in the Argentine Republic, to England. When in the center of the Atlantic Andersen fell overboard without any of his shipmates paying any attention to it, for none of them were around when it happened. When the Milton arrived at Southampton, Eng., the captain of the ship reported to Andersen's relatives in Copenhagen that he had fallen overboard and been drowned and that his body could never be recovered. On Dec. 28, however, the selfsame Andersen who fell overboard from the vessel in question bobbed up at the Danish consulate in Buenos Ayres. He related at the consulate that after he had fallen overboard he had succeeded in keeping himself above water by means of swimming for five hours, when he was picked up by the English trawler Notisement from Cardiff, which finally landed him in Buenos Ayres. One might well imagine the happiness and the joy which was evinced when Andersen came to visit his old mother and brothers and sisters between Christmas and New Year's.

During the past ten years Iceland, Denmark's far away dependency, has been making rapid progress, especially insofar as the fishing industry is concerned. Hitherto the whaling industry has been in the lead, but of latter years the fishing industry has been making as rapid and even more rapid strides. The general trade conditions of the islands have also vastly improved. Some time ago an English-American syndicate offered to build a harbor in Reykjavik, on the condition that the syndicate in question would be allowed to receive all the big income and the profits from the harbor for a period of thirty years. The city council, however, rejected the offer and has decided to erect its own harbor at a cost of 2,000,000 crowns.

Director Rudolph Wiese, for a number of years the manager of the large shoe factories at Roselund, in Odense, has been placed under arrest for embezzlement. The other day he made a confession that his embezzlements involved at least 75,000 crowns and that his operations in this line have been carried on for a period of five years. Some time ago he was compelled to make an assignment, when it was learned that his debts amounted to 150,000 crowns. The director in question has been engaged in vast speculations in South America and is also reported to have been an exceedingly high liver when in Copenhagen.

good faith, within six months from the date of entry, that such residence was maintained for such period, or periods as, when added to the period intervening between the date of entry and the establishment of residence equals fourteen months; and that the purchaser was actually residing on the land on the date of submitting such proof.

The case cited differed from the one hereunder consideration in that the land there involved was purchased at public sale, whereas that here involved was appropriated by subsequent entry. This difference is not material. A provision of said Act of February 20, 1904, reads as follows:

That after the first sale hereunder shall be closed, the lands remaining unsold shall be subject to sale and entry at the price of four dollars per acre by qualified purchasers, subject to the same terms and conditions as herein prescribed as to the lands sold at first sale.

The lands here in question, therefore, are subject to sale and entry on the same terms and conditions as were those involved in the Nesland case, and of necessity, the same rule of administration should apply.

It appearing that Halvorson established his actual residence upon this land within six months from the date of his entry, that such residence was maintained for such period as, when added to the period intervening between the date of the entry and the establishment of residence, equals a period of more than fourteen months, and that he was actually residing upon the land at the time of submitting such proof, it will, in the absence of other objections, be accepted.

A Rogues' Gallery.

"You know Mrs. Van Gilder's family portrait gallery that she started last year?"

"Yes."

"Well, that great criminal detective office who guarded the wedding presents when Frostie Van Gilder married the oldest De Graft boy told me that he recognized seven of the portraits and they had all done time, whatever that means."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Woes of Wealth.

"Then wealth doesn't bring happiness?"

"No. Since we inherited money my people don't want me to loaf in the grocery. And I can't get no comfort out of loafing in a bank. The hours are too short."—Pittsburg Post.

Some sixty years ago a writer in the Cornhill Magazine described a rat trap by means of which it was claimed that 3,000 rats were caught in a large warehouse in a single night. Briefly the plan consisted in attracting the rats on to the tops of barrels covered with thick brown paper and there feeding them for several nights. When they had become accustomed to this procedure a cross was cut in the paper, and thereafter as many rats as stepped upon it fell into the barrels and were easily disposed of. The same feature has been carried out by many since in the equipment of barrels with light covers supported by a rod extending across the middle, easily turned, so that the weight of a rat would operate it.

ABOUT GETTING AHEAD.

In the face of a good deal of criticism leveled at what are alleged as unjust and unequal economic conditions by a large class of folks who sled along on bare ground financially year after year it is well to take account of one or two factors which played an important part in the endeavors of those who do get on in the world in a material way. In the first place, even in the case of many who have achieved great wealth, there has been a period at the start when they had to count their pennies and exercise prudence and thrift in their expenditures and the management of their affairs. With a vast majority of those who are today moderately well fixed there has been a similar period in which the saving habit had to be cultivated and when there was a definite purpose to have the receipts exceed the expenditures year after year. The achievement of a condition of financial independence and competence, therefore, is not a matter of luck or chance, but of definite purpose and design. Often so simple a thing as the disposition of 40 cents a day by an individual or family, whether the saving of it or the spending of it for useless or harmful things, will spell thrift or poverty in the course of a few years. With many, in fact, the surplus above actual cost of living, wisely or unwisely handled, is not more than 20 or 25 cents per day. Forty cents a day saved means $125 for the year, counting 313 working days. Figuring interest at 6 per cent on the accumulation of an annual saving of $125 for a period of ten years and leaving the accumulated interest in the fund gives the snug sum of $1,625, the reward of saving four dimes a day. If 25 cents were saved per day it would mean about $1,012 for the same period. There is no money so easily earned as that which one's money wisely invested will earn, yet how many of the rank and file fail to profit from this source simply by neglecting the first steps—the saving of relatively small sums from day to day. This plan really embraces the philosophy of getting ahead. More who have been wont to bewail their lot should take stock of it and put it into practical operation.

CERTIFIED MILK.

The term "certified" is properly applied to milk which contains 3½ per cent or more of butter fat and contains less than 10,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter. The milk must be produced under conditions of greatest cleanliness, and the cows producing it must be pronounced in perfect health by an authorized veterinarian. Milk produced under average farm conditions costs from 4 to 5 cents per quart, while that produced under the conditions existing in a certified plant would probably cost twice as much. One of these certified dairies is located near Duluth, Minn. It is under the direct supervision of the dairy department of the University of Minnesota, and in the management of it every detail laid down is carried out. The precautions taken are not only instructive to the dairyman, but instructive as well from the standpoint of the general reader. The health of the cows is looked after by a competent veterinarian, and any animals not showing the best condition of health are at once removed. The barns are well lighted, well ventilated and kept scrupulously clean. The cows are carefully brushed before each milking, and their udders and under parts are kept clipped short to prevent dirt clinging thereto. The milkers are dressed in clean white suits, and each carries a damp cloth to wipe off the cow's udder. Covered milk pails are used, and the milk is strained in a separate room. It is then removed to the dairy, where it is aerated and cooled to a temperature of about 40 degrees. The milk is then bottled and put on ice. The owner of this particular dairy is not taking all of these pains for his health. He gets 14 cents per quart for his product from city customers and cannot begin to supply the demand.

THEY'RE GETTING TIRED.

If northwestern fruit growers had not decided on the move before, the beggarly prices which they have been able to realize on their best fruit the past season, when trash not fit for hog feed has been shipped from 2,000 to 3,000 miles and sold at retail at $2 per box, will furnish the last argument needed to unite them into an effective organization whose prime object will be the systematic and co-operative marketing of their fruit, which will cut out two or three classes of jobbers that have been gouging them with the one hand and robbing the consumer with the other. The jobbers got soaked in the apple deal they tried to pull off four or five years ago, and they have been taking heavy toll of the producers ever since. The latter are getting wise.

Shelled corn, grits and water may be all right for the bunch of old biddies that are being fattened for pie, but if eggs are wanted something that will furnish a protein element will have to be provided—bran, oilmeal, tankage, bran, clover or alfalfa.

An investigation into the probable cause of rust spots appearing on apples shipped from some Pacific coast points made by Professor D. J. O'Gara, fruit disease expert, leads him to the conclusion that the spots in question are due to impurities contained in the arsenate of lead used in spraying the trees and not to any fungous or scale pest.

While they may not be able to analyze the philosophy of it, it is remarkable at how early an age little children seem to acquire a sense and appreciation of what is right, just and fair. Many a parent ignores this faculty in the early years, only to wake up later to a realization of the fact that both the respect and confidence of the child have been forfeited.

The jungle fowl of India, supposed to be a distant cousin of our modern breeds of domestic fowls, follows out her natural instinct and lays a clutch or two of eggs a year, as many at one time as she can effectively cover and incubate. It is because of this natural habit of their early ancestors that the modern flock of hens incline under average conditions to produce 60 rather than 200 eggs in a year.

Until recently plaster was seldom used in the interior finishing of Pacific slope houses, owing to the fact that it so frequently became loose and fell off during the rainy weather. Instead, the rooms were finished with matched sheathing, heavy building paper or cloth and the paper put on over this. Since the introduction of wood fiber plaster it is being quite generally used in the section mentioned.

In a recent statement published by Chief Forester Graves the estimate is made that 84 per cent of the loss from forest fires during the year 1909 was directly traceable to carelessness on the part of settlers in burning their timber clearings and similar carelessness on the part of the railroads through failure to use effective spark arresters. Here is a type of conservation of natural resources that can be put into practice without the necessity of legislative deliberation or executive decree to make it effective.

As the result of a law passed by congress last year it will hereafter be unlawful to offer for sale in territory under federal jurisdiction adulterated or misbranded insecticides or to ship such articles from one state to another. The act specifically mentions paris green and arsenate of lead, the two chemicals most widely used by orchardists. The new law will be a real boon to fruit and vegetable growers, as it will compel manufacturers to properly label their products and enable the purchaser to know exactly what he is paying for.

An extensive hog raiser of whom we heard the other day attributes his freedom from loss by cholera to the practice he follows of removing well hogs from any pen or lot in which sick ones have been noticed rather than removing and isolating the ailing ones, a practice quite generally followed. The plan he has adopted seems to be based on sound principle, for it means the removal of uninfected animals to entirely clean and wholesome surroundings, where there could not be any possibility of contamination from disease germs.

There is no doubt good profit in the poultry business if the same degree of brains and energy is devoted to it as would make success possible in other lines. Many novices launching into the business make the common mistake of taking it up on too large a scale at the start. They naturally argue that if ten hens will net $20 a year 100 hens will net $200 and 1,000 hens $2,000. More money than this has been made off 1,000 hens, but it was by men of long experience and wide information in the poultry business. If one wishes to go into chicken raising it is far better to work into it gradually, increasing the size of the flock as experience is gained. Such a course would likely avert not only disappointment, but serious loss.

If it were not for the small boy with ferret, trap and gun there would be many localities literally cursed and overrun with the rabbit pest. Like rats, they are prolific breeders, and no amount of extermination during any winter season seems to prevent multiplication of the pest the following season. Notwithstanding the fact that the young trees in the orchard may have been amply protected with this or that trunk covering, it is well to make a trip of inspection through the orchard every few days to see that everything is all right. Often snow will drift higher than the coverings, in which case the upper trunk and branches will be exposed to attack. The writer remembers just such an occurrence in his own orchard following a big storm when there were drifts six feet deep, which enabled the rabbits to go at will among the lower branches. Where such a condition exists about the only safeguard, aside from trapping and shooting, is putting out pieces of apples on the exposed surfaces of which powdered arsenic has been rubbed.

Cream Shippers Object.

Two petitions reached the Senate from Pelican Rapids protesting against the enactment of S. F. 81, relating to the shipment of cream. One of the documents said there are more to follow.

The bill provides that cream shall not be shipped a distance greater than thirty miles without first having been pasteurized, or unless shipment be made in refrigerator cars. The measure was amended by the committee to which it was referred, to read fifty miles instead of thirty.

Roads For Settler.

Senator J. T. Elwell of Minneapolis has introduced a bill providing for the construction of "state rural highways", designed principally for use in the northern part of Minnesota, where long and continuous roads are necessary for the protection of settlers from forest fires and the improvement of conditions in that section of the state.

A road of any cost may be built under this law to conform to the needs of the locality, where such road is to be built. The county will finance the entire deal on a ten-year certificate of indebtedness plan, payments to be made one-tenth each year and the state is to pay one-half of the entire cost of the road; the county one-fourth and the benefitted property the other one-fourth, each of these payments to be made one-tenth each year. This makes an optional law, which may be used in any part of the state where a new road is required, or may be applied to the improvement of an existing road.

It is further provided that donations may be made by interested parties, or the state, to the county or individual, who is to be assessed here-under for any portion of the cost of this road. The machinery for carrying out the provisions of this bill are the same as in the "ditch laws".

Steenerson's Sharp Shot.

Congressman Steenerson made quite a telling speech in Congress, last week, in support of the tariff commission bill, and, as a progressive upon that as well as other propositions, took occasion to fire a shot into the ranks of the standpat members of his own party, who disregard warning and are forced into the support of proper measures only by disaster. As far back as 1907 he proposed a tariff commission along lines quite similar to those of the bill now awaiting action by the Senate, and argued his measure before the Ways and Means committee; but his argument, now warm in the mouths of friends of the present measure, was then scouted just as the opponents of the bill now reject the reasoning which prevailed in the House. A military commander who occupies an intrenched position and loses the battle to an inferior foe, he taunted the standpat leaders, should at least abdicate; in some countries suicide is expected of him. But the leaders who lost the Republican battle, occupying breastworks that should have been impregnable, now come up smiling and adopt tactics that were urged upon them before the conflict and the use of which would have saved the day.

It is not difficult to picture the relish with which the broad-shouldered Congressman from Minnesota larruped those House leaders. He did not receive a particularly cordial reception, when he went to Speaker Cannon three years ago and urged a commission as a sane and scientific solution of the tariff question and there is enough of human nature in him to permit full enjoyment of his opportunity to get back.—St. Paul Dispatch.

SCHOOL NOTES

The dedication of the Lincoln high school building will take place according to program as announced in other columns of this paper. The date was changed at the suggestion of the Governor and to suit the convenience of other state officials who wish to attend the ceremonies.

The band concert last Monday evening was of a high standard and the various selections were executed with a precision which marks a confident knowledge of the subject. This splendid exhibition shows what a little effort intelligently directed may accomplish, for nearly all the performers have received their musical instruction in this city since joining the band. This is mentioned in School Notes, because the members of the two bands, with hardly an exception, are school boys and their development educationally is of interest to the teachers. Why do not two dozen more boys in the schools join the band and receive this musical instruction free? Possibly, later in life, it may open doors of employment to them which would otherwise be closed.

The Knox and Central students are preparing to play basket-ball on their own grounds. Several hundred children cannot be given sufficient opportunity for playing the game in the Lincoln gymnasium.

The Lincoln floors have received a coat of oil and the dust will now be a nuisance no longer.

The Crookston high school basketball team will try conclusions with the local boys in the gymnasium next Saturday evening. A good crowd should be present and see this first contest with an outside team this season.

The normal students are teaching nature study this week in the Washington building. They will soon be given charge of a whole room to care for it as the ordinary teacher and at the same time teach the class.

A Babcock tester has been added to the agricultural equipment and arrangements are being made to test the milk of several cows and determine the percentage of butter fat contained therein. The process is simple and the cost of the tester is so low that the machine is within the reach of every farmer. Farmers who desire to have their cows' milk tested regularly can have it done free by notifying the superintendent and sending a sample of the milk once a week.

Out of an enrollment of about 200 high school students, there are not over half a dozen who are failing to make pass marks in their studies. This is a low percentage of failure, and even this might be materially lowered if parents of the delinquent children would take the matter in hand and see that the home studies are prepared.

Taken To Asylum.

Alfred Orrid Davidson, a young man who resides 7 miles southwest of St. Hilaire was brought to this city by Dr. Swanson last Monday and taken before Court Commissioner L. M. Hoag and was upon examination found to be in a demented condition. He was taken to Fergus Falls that evening by Sheriff LaBree and placed in the detention hospital at that place.

He is twenty-seven years of age and his case is described as melancholy insanity.

Articles of Incorporation

We the undersigned do hereby associate ourselves together for the purpose of becoming incorporated under Chapter 58 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota for 1905, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and to that end do sign and adopt these Articles of Incorporation.

Art. I.

The name of this corporation shall be Tessum, Temanson Company, and its principal place of business shall be at Thief River Falls, in the County of Pennington and state of Minnesota, with branches at other points within the state.

Art. II.

The general nature of the business of such corporation shall be the buying, selling, receiving, storing and forwarding of all kinds of grain, flour, feed, seeds, twine, implements and farm machinery, salt and cement, coal and wood, and building material of every description, as well as all kinds of farm supplies; to purchase, erect, maintain and control warehouses and elevators for the storage of wheat and other cereals and products thereof; to act in the capacity of a general commission merchant; to purchase and retail, sell, convey, lease, mortgage, encumber or improve such real estate, buildings and personal property as the business of the corporation may require within the state of Minnesota.

Art. III.

The amount of Capital Stock of such corporation shall be Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000) and shall be divided into Two hundred shares (200) of the par value of One Hundred Dollars ($100) each, but such corporation shall be authorized to commence business when stock to the amount of One Hundred shares shall have been subscribed.

Art. IV.

The indebtness of the said corporation shall at no time exceed the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000)

Art. V.

The government of this corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of directors composed of not less than three members who must be stockholders of the corporation, from whom shall be selected a President, vice President and a Secretary-Treasurer; no person shall be entitled to hold more than one office at the same time. The first board of directors of the corporation shall be Oluf Tessum, Gilbert K. Temanson and Teman Temanson who shall hold office until the first annual meeting of the corporation to be held on the first Monday of March, and the annual meeting shall be held on said day each and every year afterwards. Immediately after the election of directors, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the directors shall meet and elect from their number a President, a vice President, and a Secretary-Treasurer, who shall hold office for the ensuing year, and transact such other business as to them seem fit. The directors and officers of this corporation shall hold their respective offices until their successors have been duly elected and qualified. Vacancies on the board of directors shall be filled by the remaining directors for the unexpired term. The board of directors shall have full power to make and adopt such rules and regulations as they may consider necessary from time to time.

Art. VI.

Said corporation shall commence on the First day of March, A. D. 1911, and shall continue for a period of twenty years.

Regarding Red Lake Lands.

Thief River Falls, News—As a result of a conference I had recently in the Interior Department, relative to Commutation Proof on Homestead entries made subsequent to the first sale of the Eleven Towns land, the Secretary of the Interior has rendered a decision reversing the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in rejecting commutation proof on these lands, a copy of which I inclose for your information with a view to enlightening those settlers who were burned out, or for any other reason are unable to make a living on the land at the present time. Yours very truly, H. Steenerson.

Under date of November 14, 1910, the Commissioner of the General Land Office rejected the Commutation proof of Halvor K. Halvorson, submitting upon his homestead entry for lots 2 and 7, Sec. 2, T. 151, N. R. 39 W., and the W. 1-2 of SE. 1-4, Sec. 35, T. 152 N., R. 39 W., 5th P. M., Crookston land district, Minnesota.

Halvorson's entry for said land was allowed November 10, 1908, and he submitted commutation proof thereon February 15, 1910, making payment of the remaining amount due on the purchase price of four dollars per acre.

The lands are a part of the ceded portion of the Red Lake Indian Reservation, opened to entry under the provisions of the Act of February 20, 1904 (33 Stat., 46), which fixed the price of four dollars per acre for such lands as were not purchased at public sale. That act provided, among other things, that entries were to be made subject to the provisions of the homestead laws, including Section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which grants the right of commutation by paying the purchase price after fourteen months residence and cultivation.

The proof shows that Halvorson established residence on the land on May 15, 1909, and that he had resided there continuously for a period of nine months next preceding the submission of his proof on February 15, 1910.

The action of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was put mainly upon paragraph one of the circular of October 18, 1907 (36 L. D., 124), which reads as follows:

Commutation proof offered under a homestead entry made on or after Nov. 1, 1907, will be rejected unless it is shown thereby that the entryman has, in good faith, actually resided upon and cultivated the land embraced in such entry for the full period, of at least fourteen months.

Inasmuch as the entry here in question was made after November 1, 1907, it not being shown that the entryman had resided upon and cultivated the land embraced in such entry for the full period of fourteen months, and the regulation seemingly applying to all homestead entries, no reason was perceived by the Commissioner's office why such proof should be allowed.

In the essentially similar case of Tollef B. Nesland (Unreported), decided by Mr Secretary Garfield, December 17, 1907, referring to said Act of February 20, 1904, it was said:

While the act provides that purchasers of this land at public sale shall make final proof conformable to the homestead laws, it is nevertheless manifest from its provisions that the primary purpose of the act was to create from the sale of this land the largest possible fund for the benefit of the Indians, the act even going so far as to provide that persons who had exhausted their rights under the homestead law might become purchasers under the act, and that all such lands as remained unsold after five years from the date of the first sale shall be offered for sale "without any conditions whatever except the payment of the purchase price" at a rate of not less than four dollars per acre. In view thereof and of the large price paid by the purchasers of these lands at public sale, the Department is of opinion that the reasons existing for the rule applied in ordinary cases of Commutation proof in the matter of residence do not exist with respect to entries made by purchasers at public sale under this act. It is therefore held that as to such purchasers at public sale who have submitted or may submit, commutation proof on their entries, the requirement of the statute as to residence are sufficiently met where such proof shows that actual residence was established on the land, in

Chas. A. Robbecke Passes Away at St. Joseph's Hospital, St. Paul.

After a lingering illness of over a year and a half Mr. Charles A. Robbecke passed away at St. Joseph's Hospital in St. Paul. Mr. Robbecke suffered from cancer of the stomach and this was the cause of his death.

Mr. Charles A. Robbecke was born in Meerane, Saxony, Germany in 1852. He moved to this country and served five years in the regular army of the U. S. Mr. Robbecke opened the first restaurant in Crookston, in which town he married Miss Louisa Myer, of New Ulm. Later, they moved to St. Hilaire and there built a hotel, which he afterward moved to Thief River Falls, taking a homestead in section 33. Those who have enjoyed the hospitality of "Mine Host" need not be told of his genial and happy disposition.

Mr. Robbecke always had the best interests of the city at heart and was ever ready to assist any cause which was for its good. He served on the city council several times.

Left to mourn his loss are a wife and eight children; Mrs. Frank Lawrence, of Fergus Falls, Mrs. George Booren, of this city, Mrs. Hugo Anderson, of Lake City, Elsabeth, Florence and sons Walter, Phillip and Morris; an aged father and a sister and two brothers in Germany, also a brother, William Robbecke of Chicago.

The funeral services were held at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Reverend Smith officiated. The Odd Fellows of which Mr. Robbecke was a member had charge of the ceremony.

His remains were laid to rest in Greenwood cemetery, Messers. Phil Zoh, August Brown, Michael Burns, John Burgrum, C. O. Jackson, Math Barzen acting as pall bearers.

Besides being a member of the Odd Fellows lodge, Mr. Robbecke also belonged to the Masons, Knights of Phythias, Elks and Woodmen.

Lost—A lady's pocketbook, containing the sum of about $1.75 and a key. Finder please return key and pocketbook to this office and keep change.

For Sale—300 bushels clean seed oats at 40 cents per bushel. Phone to S. O. Finhart, Rocksbury, Minn.

Prof. J. H. Hay was in attendance at the North Central Educational Association meeting at Bemidji the latter part of last week.

A farewell smoker was given by the Antlers at the Club rooms last Sunday evening in honor of Edgar Irvine.

Mr. and Mrs. Almen returned last Tuesday morning from Grand Forks; where they had been guests at the home of Dr. Westin's.

Olaf Snustad who is teaching school near Bemidji was in the city last Saturday enroute to Hendrum, where he will visit his parents.

Ed. Rude, who is employed on the Erie Eleven Towns, spent Sunday and Monday with his parents in this city.

A recent letter to the Eleven Towns from its owner Alex. F. Lattimore, who is now in California for the benefit of his health, states that he is now located on a fruit farm in the foot hills, eighteen miles miles from Los Angeles.

The postoffice at Kuehnel is to be discontinued on the 15th of the present month. The mail will be carried over the same route after that date and those who desire can put up boxes accessible to the carrier and their mail will be placed therein. We understand that since the Brunkeberg postoffice was moved several new patrons have been added to the Kuehnel office and that they will protest against the office being discontinued.—Erie Eleven Towns.

There will be but two eclipses during 1911, and both of these will be of the sun. It is an unusual year in that there will be no eclipse of the moon whatever. The first eclipse of the sun, which will take place April 28 will be visible in this section of the country just before sunset. The second annular eclipse of the sun will be invisible in America. The Easter season will come comparatively late this year. March 1 will be Ash Wednesday. Palm Sunday will be on April 9, Easter Sunday on April 16. Hence Pentecost day will be on June 4.

Edgar Irvine left last Monday morning for Bemidji where he has accepted a position in the offices of the Bemidji Lumber company. During his stay in this city Mr. Irvine has won for him a large circle of friends and has been numbered among the most prominent young men in the business and social circle of this city. His decision to leave our midst is accepted with the keenest dissappointment but all our well-wishes go with him to his new location.

Des Monda.

Mrs. L. E. Bowie, professionally known as Des Monda who so successfully appeared at the Lyceum Theatre Monday night was unable to finish the engagement owing to a severe cold. Mrs. Bowie has been under doctor's care for the last three months and as she comes from the west the change of climate resulted in a relapse and therefore she had to break her engagement.

Badly Scalded.

Morris, the one and one-half year old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ralson suffered a very painful accident last Tuesday when the safety valve in the radiator in their residence was blown off. A stream of boiling water struck the child squarely in the face scalding his face in a terrible manner and his suffering as a result has been intense.

His right eye was badly effected but it is hoped and believed that his eyesight will be saved.

Two Masquerades.

The Antlers Club gave a masquerade ball last Friday evening at their club rooms. The attendance was large and included a number of outsiders who arrived here that day for the occasion. Some elaborate costumes and otherwise (mostly otherwise) took part in the dance, and we acknowledged seeing among those present such familiar characters as Jens Jensen, Happy Hooligan, Hiram Hayseed and others.

The music for the occasion was furnished by the Thief River Falls Concert Orchestra.

Another masque ball was given at the roller rink in the early part of that same evening.

Several prizes were offered for the different make ups and all had a jolly good time.

Giant Grapplers Meet Feb. 17.

George Turner, the popular South Dakota champion and John Gordon of Minn., champion police wrestler of the world will meet Feb. 17 at Auditorium or (Opera House) to settle an old dispute, as to the ability of the two men on the mat. The match will be to a finish best two out of three falls. Turner has never appeared in this city, but as Gordon is well known here the match will be of great interest to lovers of the sport. Turner is training hard on his farm in Dakota and is confident of winning the match. Turner has met several of the leading men of this country and still has high aspirations.

Kick the Printer

BULLETIN
LATEST NEWS
BOOM

In the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., there has been for many years a conspicuous signboard outside an office which reads, "KICK THE PRINTER."

Bibulous persons sometimes go inside to carry out the apparent request, but they discover that the printer is a gentleman by the name of Kick.

In every town there are persons who, if they do not actually feel like kicking the printer—the newspaper man—at any rate do a lot of kicking at the way he conducts his paper.

Please DON'T kick the printer; he is doing the best he can.

And what he does for the town and community, despite his occasional mistakes, may be a great deal more than the kickers themselves are doing. Did THAT ever occur to you?

We are all neighbors in this town. What helps one helps the others. What hurts one hurts the others. Every community is a mutual benefit association, whether organized or just running wild. The printer is a charter member.

If you had no printer—no newspaper—how would you like that? Do you know what happens to towns that don't support a newspaper? Nothing happens. Nothing ever happens in a town like that. As soon as things begin to happen in a town the newspaper comes along and tells about them.

The newspaper boosts the town. It records progress and offers suggestions, by the editor or the readers, as to further progress. Every copy of every issue advertises the town. This is all free advertisement. It costs the town nothing. It costs the people nothing. It is a part of the business.

In view of this fact, which nobody can dispute, it is much better to pat the printer on the shoulder now and then or to speak kindly of him than to kick him.

NO; DON'T KICK THE PRINTER.

THE BIENNIAL FRUITING HABIT.

That the tendency of fruit trees to bear every other year is the result of an unconscious effort on the part of the tree to adjust itself to its own capacity to produce and to the stores of fertility in the soil and not to a fixed biennial fruiting habit is a view which is now held by a number of orchardists who have had opportunity to do some experimenting along this line on their own account. One with whom we had opportunity for an exchange of ideas recently stated that for a number of years he supposed that this tendency of trees to bear every other year was fixed and that there was no way in which he could get around it. But he decided to take a block of mature bearing trees and test the thing out for himself. He gave the soil under those trees a good dressing of barnyard manure, followed this with clover, thinned the apples to a moderate number on trees which carried an overload and [illegible] if at all. The results were all that he could ask. He found that instead of fruiting every other year the trees thus handled bore good crops annually. In other instances which have been noted the same truth has been demonstrated—that trees will bear annually if the soil is renewed with proper fertilizers and if the trees are not allowed to set such an amount of fruit as will exhaust them and require the following season for recuperation. While under conditions which usually prevail this biennial fruiting habit is [illegible] to a certain extent [illegible] a number of wild and tame tree fruits, it is particularly true of the apple. The orchardist who has somehow got the idea that just because his trees were deep rooted they didn't need fertilizing and has been putting up with this alternate bearing habit as a natural law which he couldn't [illegible] around may derive some benefit from the instances narrated above. Apples take considerable amounts of fertilizing elements from the soil, and it follows that if fruit is to be picked year after year these elements must as regularly be returned in the shape of fertilizers.

SHOULD GROW POSTS.

It goes without saying that, with the forests of the country falling prey to tooth of flame and sawmill, posts, along with other forms of timber products, are bound to advance in price. For this reason every farmer who has fences which will need repairing or building during the coming years may well consider the wisdom of a small timber lot on which his post timber may be grown. Conditions of temperature, moisture and soil will be largely determining factors. The adaptability of trees of a given kind to such conditions can readily be determined from some nearby reliable nurseryman or from the horticultural department of one's state experiment station. The federal government has also issued a large number of leaflets on the planting of different varieties of trees, and these would also be helpful. Of trees grown for posts perhaps the catalpa (speciosa) is the most satisfactory. For sections where the winters are not unduly severe the Russian mulberry makes an excellent post timber, while the locust is very satisfactory if the borers do not bother. Where conditions of soil or moisture make the growing of any of the above impossible substitutes may be found in the cottonwood, Norway and Carolina poplar, rapid growing soft woods. However, if such timber is used the posts should be cured before setting and treated with creosote or other wood preservative, which will make them as durable as untreated hardwood posts. A feature in the care of the wood lot that should be kept in mind is that to make the most rapid growth the little trees, for two or three years at least, should be given thorough and regular cultivation. This will mean not only more vigorous growth, but straighter and more uniform trunks.

THOUSANDS OF LOAFERS.

Figures which have lately been published by Hugh Van Pelt, state dairy expert of Iowa, show that of the [illegible] cows kept in the state there are at least [illegible] which not only do not return [illegible] any profit during the year, but [illegible] the farmers who milk and care for these cows [illegible] for the privilege of [illegible]. Iowa's showing in this regard may be poorer than Wisconsin's or New York's, but it is a fair guess that in many other dairy states the percentage of "loafers" is as large. This situation should be remedied, and the only cure there is lies through the use of the Babcock test to determine butter fat content of milk and a careful weighing of milkings at intervals to determine the volume given in the course of a year.

More often than not warm air in house or stable means foul air and is usually more conducive to lung and stomach troubles than the cold fresh air which is viewed by so many persons as worse than a pestilence.

There is no rule more helpful in the solving of what our duty toward our fellows may be in any particular instance or occasion than that of turning the thing around—of putting oneself in the other's place. It enables one to determine at once what is just and kind and fair and, put into practice, would prevent more strife and trouble—personal, family and community—than can well be imagined.

An entirely new impetus has been given the rat killing campaign because recent investigations prove conclusively that it is a prolific spreader of the germs of the bubonic plague, spotted fever and other maladies. This is said to be due to the fact that the fleas which infest rats laden with disease germs later bite and infect human beings. The question of rat extermination would thus seem to have passed from the realm of expediency to that of necessity.

After forty years of endeavor to establish the Chinook salmon of the Pacific coast in eastern waters, where it is not indigenous, success seems to have been achieved in one instance at least. In his annual report to the department of commerce and labor United States Fish Commissioner Bowers states that this species has been established in Lake Sunapee, New Hampshire, where numerous specimens running from three to five pounds have been taken with line by anglers.

Just so long as the handlers and distributers of the products of the soil are able to so manipulate the situation as to get 65 cents out of every dollar's worth of produce raised, so long will there exist a most powerful influence toward the formation of co-operative enterprises which will cut cross lots to the consumer and leave the jobber and middleman out of the deal. Standing all the expense and risk involved in production, it is only fair that the producer should receive more than 35 per cent of the market value of the crop for his labors.

Somewhat exhaustive tests in digestion and nutrition which have been conducted by the agricultural department at Washington go to show that, contrary to a generally accepted view, cheese requires no more energy to digest than a corresponding amount of meat. This would indicate that as a source of protein it may be eaten in quantity without ill effect instead of being nibbled as an indigestible delicacy largely for its agreeable flavor. There is soon to be issued by the department a pamphlet giving numerous recipes for the use of cheese in more liberal quantities.

The writer recalls with considerable amusement a time, when he was nine or ten years old, when he was badly affected with the "chicken business" microbe. So solicitous was he of the progress of the business that he used to hang around the nook where the setting hens were located during the warm spring months in much fear lest the eggs should chill if the old hens stayed off the nests more than three or four minutes. They seemed to resent the small boy's interrupting them in their enjoyable dust baths, and naturally enough, for, as he learned later, they were on to their job a great deal better than he was.

A striking demonstration of the effectiveness of the new serum treatment for the cure of hog cholera has lately been made at the stockyards in Kansas City under the direction of officials of the bureau of animal industry. Of a bunch of thirty-five hogs twenty-two were given an injection of the cholera serum, four more inoculated with the blood from hogs affected with the disease, and the remaining nine animals were not treated with anything, but were put in with the rest. In the course of a few days the four pigs died, also the group of nine, but the twenty-two animals which had been given the serum treatment were not affected by the disease in any way.

While the desire of the residents of the common small school district to have a school property of their own and maintain a school therein may be commendable in a way, it can hardly be called good school management. Especially is this true if there are not enough children of school age in the district to warrant the payment of a wage sufficient to secure the services of a really competent teacher and a school equipment that is effective and up to date. In many localities a far more sensible plan is for all taxpayers and school patrons in the township to unite in the establishment of a central school where practically all of the advantages in the way of instruction and equipment may be provided that are to be found in the town schools. The tendency of the day is toward consolidation. In no realm is there more urgent need for it than in the case of country schools.

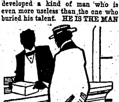
V.—Where Is Your Talent?

Remember the case of the man who took his talent, wrapped it in a napkin and buried it?

Not only did his master punish him for his folly, but his conduct has become a byword.

The world has progressed since his time. Modern conditions have developed a kind of man who is even more useless than the one who buried his talent. HE IS THE MAN



WHO SENDS HIS MONEY OUT OF TOWN TO BUY FROM MAIL ORDER HOUSES.

The man who buried his talent at least had the talent to show for it. If we all spent our money out of town in a short time we would have nothing to show for it except BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

The man who patronizes home industries benefits the people he deals with and benefits himself. His conduct is like that of the good and faithful servant who so used the talents intrusted to him that they greatly increased. He is a good and faithful citizen who is worthy of the success he is sure to win.

The next time you see an attractive advertisement of a mail order house go to your local merchant and try to buy the article of him. IF HE HASN'T IT ASK HIM WHY. If he has it ask him why he never told you about it in your local paper.

That will be a boost for us. But we'll stand for it. And we'll boost back; remember that.

Do your share of the boosting and you'll get your share of the prosperity.

LET US BOOST!

The Filial Chinaman.

Many examples of Chinese filial piety strike the occidental reader as ridiculous. There is the famous story of Lao Laitsu, which Mr. R. F. Johnston repeats in his "Lion and Dragon in Northern China." Lao's parents lived to such extreme old age that he was himself a toothless old man while they were both still alive. "Conceiving it his duty to divert their attention from their weight of years and approaching end, he dressed himself up in the clothes of a child and played about in his parents' presence with the object of making them think they were still a young married couple contemplating the innocent gambols of their infant son."

A similar case is that of Wang P'ou, whose mother had an unconquerable dread of thunder and lightning. When she died she was buried in a mountain forest, and thereafter, when a violent thunderstorm occurred, Wang P'ou, heedless of the wind and rain, would hurry to her grave and throw himself to his knees. "I am here to protect you, dear mother," he would say. "Do not be afraid."

Making a Gunstock.

A party of men were out hunting, and an old woodsman who was with them broke his gunstock in some way or other. It was just about nightfall when the accident occurred, and inasmuch as he was very anxious to do some shooting early the next morning he decided to fix up his shooting iron. Finding a walnut fence rail, he set to work. His only tools were an ax and a big pocket knife. All night long he labored vigorously at his task, and by morning the gunstock was finished and back in place and worked like a charm.

"How did you do it?" asked one of the number, greatly surprised.

"Very easy," was this old hunter's reply. "No trouble at all. Just get a piece of wood about the size and kind that you want and then whittle away all that you want whittled away. When you have all the wood cut off that you don't want you have a gunstock."—Kansas City Journal.

The exports of cotton from the United States during 1910 represented an aggregate value of $[illegible], exceeding by $[illegible] the highest record ever before made. The quantity, however, was less by [illegible] pounds than the exports of [illegible], the value of which was but $[illegible].

While San Jose scale is more frequently observed on the limbs and trunks of trees which it infests, it often appears on mature fruit. In the case of apples like the yellow Newtown its presence is indicated by small deep red spots slightly raised in the center where the scale is established and shading to a thinner color in much the same way as would a boil or sore on one's hand. Often these scale spots may not appear at the time the fruit is packed, but develop by the time it reaches its destination or is taken from storage.

Import statistics gathered by the department of commerce and labor show that of the coffee imported into the United States in the year ended July, 1910, 97.2 per cent came from South and Central America and Mexico. Of the small remainder, 0.1 of 1 per cent came from Aden and was sold as Mocha, and 1.3 was Java coffee and came from the East Indies. It is interesting to note that, while the import price of all the coffee shipped in from American countries averaged but a small fraction over 8 cents per pound, it cost the consumer from 20 to 35 cents per pound.

While the raising of horses is attended with greater risk than the raising of cattle or sheep, the fact remains that when properly conducted the horse business is one of the most profitable lines of animal husbandry. With prices continuing at present levels one can count on from 10 to 12 cents per pound at from two to three years old, depending upon individuality and type. In this connection it is well worth remembering that it costs no more to raise a fine, well bred animal than it does a scrub, while the returns may be from one and a half to two times as large, and the satisfaction to be had is many times as great.

That bountiful crop production is very closely associated with what we understand as "good times" and prosperity may be realized in the case of the two leading products of the country—corn and cotton. The value of the first in round numbers for 1910 was $1,500,000,000, which is said to be sufficient to pay the interest bearing debt of the United States and exceed by a considerable value all the gold and silver dug out of the earth in the year 1909. The value of the cotton crop for the year just past is placed at $[illegible], which would be enough to just about wipe out the national debt. When these and numerous other crops aggregating values correspondingly large are produced from the soil of the United States annually it is realized the more readily why our country is one of the wealthiest and most prosperous in all the earth.

PRACTICAL GAME PROTECTION.

Of the common game birds there is none that is more valuable to the farmer as a destroyer of insects than the quail or bobwhite. All too often, however, in the northern states, where winter snows are deep and usual sources of food supply are cut off, the pretty little fellows die of exposure or starvation or more likely of both. A most effective method of protecting them during the winter season we read of the other day, and we give it in brief for the benefit of other readers who would like to protect the quail on their premises, but don't know just how to go at it. The farmer referred to had for several years past made a practice of putting out feed for the quail and gradually attracting them to the vicinity of the feed sheds. One of these adjoining the barn was sheltered, opening to the south, and was connected by a good sized passageway to the haymow. The quail were first attracted to this shed and fed regularly every morning. As the colder weather came on they took refuge in the haymow, which became their permanent roosting place. When the owner went to the mow to feed them they would fly to the nearest rafters, but as soon as he retreated would fly down and eat the grain he scattered for them. In previous years he found that when spring came these birds mated in the vicinity of the barn and sought nesting places in nearby brush and weed covers, hatched their broods of little ones and were thus able to carry on the war against the insect pests about the place with increased forces.

WOEFULLY SHORTSIGHTED.

Recently the daily papers contained dispatches to the effect that the dairymen of the state of Illinois are opposed to the passage of a tuberculin test law because they contend it would reduce the number of cows in the state by one-tenth. Granted that it would, wouldn't this loss be preferable to a loss once or twice as large which is bound to come if the disease is not thoroughly stamped out, and this entirely aside from any consideration of the hundreds of thousands of people who are consumers of the milk from these same dairy cows? In this connection we recall the case of a young farmer in whose herd of dairy cattle of some eighty head there were twenty animals slightly affected by tuberculosis, as indicated by the tuberculin test. He temporized and monkeyed with the matter, as the dairymen referred to seem inclined to do. The result was that some two years later, when he was compelled by law to do what he knew was his duty to do at first, he lost sixty-five animals instead of twenty. This was good policy? Not by a jugful, and it won't be for any man who owns beef or dairy animals that are afflicted with tuberculosis.

NATURE'S PROTEST.

As in the case of many other plant pests, the damage wrought by the Hessian fly is likely to be most severe in localities where little or no attention is given to the matter of crop rotation. Loss by both insect and fungous pests seems to be nature's way of protesting against a wrong and wanton system of handling the soil, and all too often the tiller of the soil must sustain a severe loss in the above manner before he is willing to mend his ways and adopt a sensible system of crop rotation. Cotton after cotton encourages the boll weevil; corn after corn, the wireworm, corn root worm and corn root louse; wheat after wheat, the blights, smut and Hessian fly; potatoes after potatoes, scab and blight. Virtually all of these pests are reduced to a minimum if crops are grown in rotation, for under such arrangement before the insect or fungous pest gets a good foothold the land is devoted to some other crop which is not affected by it.

BEFRIENDING THE BIRDS.

There is no other single agency which renders as great a service to the farmer, the fruitman and gardener in their fight against insect pests as do birds. Because of this fact tillers of the soil might well take in hand measures not only to give birds greater protection from their enemies, but where possible to give encouragement along the line of providing shelter and nesting places. The first can be accomplished by leaving a little thicket of plum thorn or other trees by roadside, in fence corner or pasture lot. To encourage the presence of birds like the woodpecker, wren, bluebird and martin, that nest in cavities rather than in trees, much can be done by providing artificial nesting places in the shape of bird houses, boxes, tin cans, old stumps and the like. If these places are provided the birds will be attracted to garden and orchard areas, where their services are most valuable.

New Mexico supports a population of 327,000 on its area of 122,000 square miles, while Arizona numbers 200,000 to 113,000 square miles. With the completion of the irrigation projects now under way it is to be expected that the population of both states will be greatly increased by home seekers within the next decade.

The per capita consumption of sugar in England is eighty-six pounds per annum. In the United States it takes during the year eighty-one and a half pounds to sweeten the average consumer's ration. In Switzerland the yearly consumption is sixty-four pounds and in Germany and Holland about forty-three and one-half pounds.

A Missouri agricultural college professor was asked not long ago at a farmers' meeting how to solve the question of a scarcity of farm help. His answer was suggestive, if not in every case feasible. He said to his questioner, "Sell your farm and hire out to your neighbor." The stick with this would likely be that a fellow's neighbor isn't paying quite enough for hired help. There's the rub.

The case was related to the writer the other day of a stingy old landlord who "couldn't afford" to bear half the expense of a repairing of the hog houses on the place to make them wind and water proof and yet who later on was "well enough off" to bear half the expense of a loss of virtually all of the spring pigs because the sows were not provided proper shelter at farrowing time. It verily beats the band what some fellows think they can and can't afford.

On the average farm there is no other food for laying hens which as a furnisher of protein has the value of skimmilk. It should be fed sweet in all but the warmest weather, when it is better to sour it beforehand, and the dishes in which it is fed should be cleaned frequently. Experiments lately made by the Kansas station along the line of using skimmilk showed that it was not only a cheaper but more effective ration than beef scraps when fed in the same proportion.

The rental system long in vogue on many a southern plantation in which the negro renter mortgaged his coming season's crop to buy corn and bacon for himself and family and feed for his mules while getting the new crop ready for market has been not only disastrous from the standpoint of the negro, but even more so from that of the welfare of the soil and the financial returns to the landlord. Many of the latter are slowly waking up, and a more wholesome order of things is being ushered in.

Among other large projects being undertaken in the west, the state of Arizona has launched one which might well be copied by other states—that is, the building of a territorial highway, a roadway twelve feet wide, surfaced in places with disintegrated granite, costing $4,000 per mile, and in other places partly with granite, gravel and oil, costing $900 per mile. The completed system, which will cost $1,250,000, will show 1,043 miles of boulevard connecting the principal cities and towns of the state with that marvelous scenic attraction the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

The trouble with the central and eastern state orchardist is that in a majority of cases he does not have his work arranged so that he has the time to give his orchard the painstaking care which the western fruit rancheman gives his. He would better reduce his orchard area by four times and increase the care in the same ratio. This, coupled with proper organization, which will insure favorable results in marketing, will give profitable and satisfactory returns. Unless he is willing to adopt the methods above referred to he would better yank out his trees, plow up the ground and grow corn, oats or clover.

Following the unusually dry summer of last season the coming spring would seem to be an especially favorable time for the proper tiling of the low acres which under the short rainfall of last summer proved so rich and productive. Moreover, if there is anything in the contention that we have entered upon an era of dry years the coming season will be an especially favorable one for making the improvement. The laying of a system of tile is no boys' play, and this, coupled with the further fact that it is to serve a good many years, makes it imperative that the system should be laid out by a man who knows his business and who will do the work most effectively and thoroughly.

The theory that yellow fever is transmitted by mosquitoes is now fully established. The matter has been further sifted, and it has been found that of the hundreds of kinds of the pest only the female of a single variety carries the disease. To infect a person the mosquito twelve days before or earlier must have bitten a yellow fever patient during the first three days of illness. As can be readily seen, the difficulties experienced by men of science in tracing the origin and cause of this terrible disease have been of the greatest. The discovery, however, is well worth all the pains and risks taken in that it has enabled physicians to handle the malady intelligently and thus effectively to check its ravages.

The formal opening of the new British parliament was marked by gorgeous ceremony and was attended by King George and Queen Mary and their suites, most of the dignitaries of the empire, many members of the diplomatic corps and all others who could crowd within the doors of Westminster. The speech from the throne was brief and formal and made small reference to the great issues that underlie the assembling of the members for the present session.

Two more names were added to the death roll of the aeroplane at Douai, France. Aviators Noel and Delatorre were killed while conducting a trial of a military aeroplane before experts from the war department previous to its delivery to the army. Noel was the pilot and Delatorre a passenger.

Figures compiled from the 1910 imperial German census show there are forty-seven cities in the empire having a population in excess of 100,000. The thirteenth census of the United States shows fifty cities with this population. Berlin, Germany's largest city, without its suburbs, has 2,064,154.

The Montreal Star, the largest and most influential newspaper in Canada, devotes an entire page to a denunciation of the proposed reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada and an appeal to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to secure the defeat of the agreement.

Admiral Lord Charles Beresford is sixty-five years of age and by virtue of the age limit clause is retired from the active list of the British navy. He has held no appointment since his surrender on March 24, 1909, of the command of the channel fleet.

Frederick Archibald Vaughan Campbell, third earl of Cawdor and the greatest railway authority in Great Britain, is dead after a long illness.

General Millionard, the head of the Haytien revolutionists, and five other rebel generals were taken from the prison at Trou and shot to death.

In the first division of the new British parliament the house of commons, by a majority of 102, reaffirmed adherence to free trade principles.

The first battle at Juarez, Mex., between federal troops and insurrectionists lasted about an hour and no one was hurt on either side.

Baron Albert Rothschild, head of the Austrian branch of the famous family of bankers, is dead at Vienna.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

Seven members of the family of Herman Berkowitz, the father, mother and five children, were killed by illuminating gas in their home in the Ghetto district of Philadelphia. When their bodies were discovered in the gas filled room by neighbors the father lay fully dressed on one bed with two small boys, while the mother and three girls were in another bed in the same room on the third floor.

In one of the most disastrous explosions ever recorded in Upper Michigan ten men met instant death at the plant of the Pluto Powder company in the outskirts of Ishpeming. Another man was injured. The bodies of the dead were blown to pieces. The explosion took place in the gelatine powder house. Every man in this building perished.

An explosion of gas in the Cokedale mine of the Carbon Coke and Coal company at Trinidad, Colo., caused the death of fifteen men. All the bodies have been recovered and indicate that the victims died of suffocation while attempting to escape from the mine after the explosion.

The Missouri capitol building at Jefferson City has been entirely destroyed by fire. The total loss, including the structure and many records and state papers in the offices of the governor, secretary of state and treasurer, is estimated at $1,000,000, with no insurance.

Ten shop employes of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad were torn to fragments and seven others were injured when an engine under repair exploded in the Smithville (Tex.) yards. Besides the loss of life railroad property valued at $20,000 was destroyed.

Three women were drowned when a street car went through an open draw into the Sheboygan river at Sheboygan, Wis., and became submerged. These were the only passengers inside the car when it toppled into the river.

Four men were crushed to death and five others were perhaps fatally injured when the roof of a brick shed of the Illinois Brick company in Blue Island, Ill., collapsed, burying the men beneath it.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

COUNTY OPTION BILL KILLED

Lower House of State Legislature Puts Measure to Rest by a Vote of 69 to 50.

County option was handed a sleeping potion in the house of representatives by a vote of 69 to 50. The roll call followed an even three hours of uninterrupted debate, during which not a vote was changed, as there were a good many on the floor who knew within one or two of what the roll call would reveal. In spite of the certainty that nothing was to be gained by it the debate was arranged, talked out and finally finished to the entire satisfaction of the county optionists. The antis participated with vigor and put up a fine show and kept their ranks intact.

John Saugstad of Climax will retain the seat in the senate voted him by electors of the Ninth district. This was decided by unanimous vote following a test vote which showed the supporters of A. D. Stephens to be hopelessly in the minority.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT DATE

Minnesota Senate Passes Resolution to Quit April 1.

The upper branch of the state legislature decided, 53 to 8, to fix April 1 as the day for final adjournment. The consent of the house is necessary to the concurrent resolution adopted.

Repeal of the 1909 law forbidding the sale of cigarettes in Minnesota is proposed in a bill offered by Representative G. A. Congdon of Duluth. Mr. Congdon says that the law is a dead letter because of nonenforcement and ought to be wiped off the statute books, as it is bad for public morals to have such disregard for law.

Senator W. S. Dwinnell's resolution, providing for an investigation of the state agricultural society, passed the house by a vote of 87 to 3.

Senator S. A. Nelson of [illegible] introduced a bill in the senate calling for a tax of 1 cent on every $100 or fraction of the sales made in any grain or other exchange which deals in merchandise for present or future delivery.

BANDIT GETS LONG SENTENCE

Youth Who Terrorized St. Paul Given Sixty Years.

Sixty years for William Koehn—"Shaggy Eyebrows"—at hard labor in the state penitentiary at Stillwater was the sentence imposed by Judge Orr in the Ramsey county district court on the boy—he is only twenty-two years old—who put on a personally conducted reign of terror in St. Paul from Dec. 12 last to the beginning of the new year. To the best information obtainable at the office of Attorney General Simpson this is the longest definite sentence ever passed on a criminal in Minnesota.

In return "Shaggy Eyebrows" got $178 from his victims, according to the six indictments to which he pleaded guilty.

LOSES LIFE IN CABIN FIRE

Homesteader Perishes in Effort to Save Valuables From Flames.

Peter Anderson, a homesteader of Lind, Roseau county, lost his life in an attempt to recover valuables from his burning cabin.

He was at work a distance from the building when he discovered the fire and, running back, wrapping a gunny sack around his head, he went into the building, which by this time was filled with smoke.

Neighbors, arriving a few minutes later, found him lying just inside the door. He was taken into the open air, but life was extinct.

INJURY AT DANCE IS FATAL

High School Girl's Foot, Stepped On, Is Poisoned.

Although her foot was only slightly bruised by being stepped upon at a dancing party held at St. Charles a month ago, Miss Agnes Holland, a young woman aged seventeen, a member of this year's St. Charles high school graduating class, is dead of blood poisoning. The girl first noticed the effects of the bruise a week after the dance.

Youths Accused of Burglary.

Seven young men, between the ages of eighteen and twenty, under arrest at Waverly on burglary charges, are said to have confessed to a series of thefts in that village, committed within the last six months. All of the seven are expected to plead guilty before Judge Giddings at Buffalo.

Big Mill City Firm in Court.

Creditors of Tibbs, Hutchings & Co., wholesale merchants, formerly of St. Paul, now of Minneapolis, filed a petition in the office of the clerk of the United States district court at Minneapolis asking that the company be adjudicated bankrupt.

HOUSE FAVORS RECIPROCITY

Minnesota Lawmakers Kill Resolution in Opposition.

The state house of representatives has declared for the ratification of the Canadian reciprocity treaty. By a vote of 63 to 50 the house killed the S. M. Lee resolution directing the Minnesota representatives in congress to oppose the agreement. The result was due to a solid affirmative vote of the Democratic members, with several Republican members from the rural districts who took a broad view of the question, reinforced by a solid vote of the city members.

The iron ore tonnage tax question, fought in many previous sessions, was raised in the present legislature for the first time. A bill which is almost identical with Henry O. Bjorge's bill of two years ago was offered in the house by Thomas Frankson of Spring Valley, J. N. Johnson of Canby and J. J. Moriarity of Belle Plaine.

INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE

Bill Providing for Legislative Reapportionment.

The house reapportionment committee has introduced the legislative reapportionment bill in the house. The plan calls for sixty-one senators, two less than the present number, and 125 house members, an increase of five.

Senator Wallace of Minneapolis held up the confirmation of J. W. Nash, appointed by Governor Eberhart to be surveyor general of logs and lumber for the upper Mississippi river district. He served notice from the senate floor that he is opposed to Mr. Nash's confirmation and a war is on.

The State Historical society's request for a $500,000 appropriation for a building to house the society and its collections and records was approved by the house committee on general legislation after a hearing.

FRANK A. DAY IS GOING TO MONTANA

Minnesota Democrat Will Run Newspaper at Missoula.

Frank A. Day and John E. King, chief boosters for the Democrats of Minnesota, have pulled out for a "new frontier." They have established a daily Democratic newspaper in Missoula, Mont., the Sentinel, and will try to do to Montana what they did to Minnesota.

It was said Mr. Day, late chairman of the Democratic state central committee, and Mr. King, for six years state librarian, his able coadjutor, intended starting somewhere in Minnesota a Democratic state daily, but somehow their plans fell through.

Messrs. Day and King have purchased the outfit of the Butte Evening News, which recently suspended publication, and they will transfer it to Missoula and issue from there the Missoula Sentinel, an afternoon paper.

CORONER SUSPECTS MURDER

Investigation of Burned Cabin Brings Gruesome Facts to Light.

While Deputy Coroner H. G. Seeley of Duluth does not say so directly his conduct in the investigation of the death of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Newman, the Minneapolis couple whose charred bodies were found in the burned ruins of their cabin two miles from Allen Junction, establishes the belief that he thinks the couple were murdered and robbed.

Mr. Newman had his clothes on when he died in the cabin. The clothing was all burned, but the buckles of his vest were under the remains, and other facts establish the fact that he was not in bed when the cabin burned.

Some of the kitchen utensils of the Newman house were found hidden near the cabin. Articles of jewelry which bore marks of identification are the only ones that have not been recovered.

NEAR DEATH FROM SMOKE

Four Men Taken Unconscious From Minneapolis Hotel.

Four men were rescued from the Mankato House at Minneapolis in an unconscious condition when smoke from a fire in a poolroom and barber shop beneath filled the lodging place. They were revived by a police surgeon. Fifty other roomers escaped in their night clothes.

Victim of Jealous Husband.

Mrs. Joseph Sauro of St. Paul, twenty-two years of age, shot by her husband when he discovered her with Giuseppe Messacappa, a boarder, in a shed at the rear of the house Dec. 6, is dead at the city hospital from the effects of the wound. Joseph Sauro is being held at the county jail on a charge of assault with intent to kill. A charge of murder will now be preferred against him.

Tree Kills Woodsman.

While acting in the capacity of undercutter at the Crookston Lumber company's camp No. 5, near White Fish spur, Itasca county, Ole Johnson, aged forty-eight, was instantly killed when a tree falling hit on the side of a dead tree, throwing it in such a manner that it struck Johnson, cracking his skull the whole length of his head.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

The state supreme court has sustained the verdict given to Tillie Ominsky of St. Paul recently for the loss of her hair as the result of fright from an accident in the factory of Charles Weinhagen & Co. The court says that the verdict of the jury involving a finding that fright and nervous shock resulting from an accident caused the particular ailment for which damages were awarded is sustained by the evidence.

The boundary line between Minnesota and Wisconsin is changed by a decision of Judge Page Morris in United States court at Duluth. Judge Morris holds that riparian rights attaching to land on the shores of St. Louis river extend to the new channel established by the government in 1899. The old channel was the boundary between the states and the difference at some points is 1,000 to 2,000 feet.

At the election at Faribault to determine whether or not the city should adopt a new charter the commission plan of government was voted in by a majority of 188 votes. According to the new charter there will be four commissioners and a chairman, the commissioners to receive $600 per year and the chairman $900. The latter official will fulfill the duties which at present devolve upon the mayor.

Two hundred students attending the farmers' short course at the state college of agriculture, many of them veteran farmers of the state, were presented with graduation certificates for satisfactory work during the month's stay. The diplomas were conferred by Dean Albert F. Woods, after a short address.

A bill calling for approximately $5,000,000 for maintenance and improvements at state institutions under the state board of control for the biennial period from Aug. 1, 1911, to July 31, has been introduced in both branches of the legislature.

A large timber wolf of the Siberian variety was killed in the vicinity of Ponce, Roseau county. These wolves are found only in Northern Canada and Alaska and have never been known to come this far south.

Many of the contagious disease patients treated in Duluth contract diseases in unsanitary lumber camps and a county medical inspector is proposed by Health Commissioner Webster of Duluth in his annual report.

The heavy snowfall in Northern Minnesota insures a good stage of water for the drives and the lumbermen are happy. Last year millions of feet never reached the mills owing to lack of water.

Minneapolis won the contest from a half dozen contending cities as the seat of the next general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, which convenes in May, 1912.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

S. D. Peterson, postmaster of New Ulm, is dead. Mr. Peterson was nearly sixty-two years old. He had been an active Republican all his life and entered the state senate in 1881 and served ten years in that body. In the nineties he was a representative from Brown county for eight years.

Mrs. Patrick Doran, an old resident of Duluth, was stricken with paralysis at her home in that city and died after speaking a few words. The Doran family is well known in Northern Minnesota. Mrs. Doran was fifty-two years old.

L. M. Conkey, only survivor of the firm of Conkey Bros., pioneer merchants and millers of Southeastern Minnesota, is dead at Preston. He was about seventy-five years old and located at Preston in the middle fifties.

Mrs. G. W. Morehead, the first child born in Mankato, died recently at Howell, Ida., where she had gone for her health, having been afflicted with tuberculosis for some four years. She was fifty-eight years old.

Orlan O. Cullen, retired capitalist, and several years ago prominently identified in St. Paul business affairs and politics, is dead at Los Angeles, Cal.

Magdalena Roedler, a resident of St. Paul since 1853, is dead. Mrs. Roedler was born in Germany and came to America in 1851.

Thomas L. Fitzgerald, proprietor of the Gilbert hotel at Gilbert, was killed by a train.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Paul Oreskovich, aged twenty-six, was asphyxiated in a culvert on the Canadian Northern extension north of Duluth. He crawled into the culvert and encountered gas which had formed from a dynamite explosion.

A bullet intended for a pigeon, fired by Sam Sloan, eighteen years old, killed Robert Nieff, forty-five years old, at the dairy farm of L. H. Pinska, near St. Paul. Both were employed at the farm.

Fire practically destroyed the plant of the Lino Floor Covering Manufacturing company at St. Anthony Park. The damage amounts to $30,000, one-third covered by insurance.

John Antonsich, employed as skip tender in the Pioneer mine at Ely, was found dead at the bottom of the shaft. He had fallen down the shaft, a distance of 200 feet.

Kick the Printer

BULLETIN
LATEST NEWS
"BOOM"

In the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., there has been for many years a conspicuous signboard outside an office which reads, "KICK THE PRINTER."

Bibulous persons sometimes go inside to carry out the apparent request, but they discover that the printer is a gentleman by the name of Kick.

In every town there are persons who, if they do not actually feel like kicking the printer—the newspaper man—at any rate do a lot of kicking at the way he conducts his paper.

Please DON'T kick the printer; he is doing the best he can.

And what he does for the town and community, despite his occasional mistakes, may be a great deal more than the kickers themselves are doing. Did THAT ever occur to you?

We are all neighbors in this town. What helps one helps the others. What hurts one hurts the others. Every community is a mutual benefit association, whether organized or just running wild. The printer is a charter member.

If you had no printer—no newspaper—how would you like that? Do you know what happens to towns that don't support a newspaper? Nothing happens. Nothing ever happens in a town like that. As soon as things begin to happen in a town the newspaper comes along and tells about them.

The newspaper boosts the town. It records progress and offers suggestions, by the editor or the readers, as to further progress. Every copy of every issue advertises the town. This is all free advertisement. It costs the town nothing. It costs the people nothing. It is a part of the business.

In view of this fact, which nobody can dispute, it is much better to pat the printer on the shoulder now and then or to speak kindly of him than to kick him.

NO; DON'T KICK THE PRINTER.

THE BIENNIAL FRUITING HAB

That the tendency of fruit trees bear every other year is the result an unconscious effort on the part the tree to adjust itself to its own c pacity to produce and to the stores fertility in the soil and not to a fix biennial fruiting habit is a view whic is now held by a number of orchardis who have had opportunity to do som experimenting along this line on the own account. One with whom we ha opportunity for an exchange of idea recently stated that for a number o years he supposed that this tendenc of trees to bear every other year wa fixed and that there was no way which he could get around it. But h decided to take a block of mature bea ing trees and test the thing out fo himself. He gave the soil under tho trees a good dressing of barnyard ma nure, followed this with clover, thinne the apples to a moderate number o trees which carried an overload an summer pruned if at all. The resul were all that he could ask. He foun that instead of fruiting every othe year the trees thus handled bore goo crops annually. In other instance which have been noted the same trut has been demonstrated—that trees wi bear annually if the soil is renewe with proper fertilizers and if the tree are not allowed to set such an amoun of fruit as will exhaust them and re quire the following season for recu peration. While under conditions whic usually prevail this biennial fruitin habit is noticeable to a certain exten
in a number of wild and tame tre fruits, it is particularly true of the apple. The orchardist who has some how got the idea that just because hi trees were deep rooted they didn' need fertilizing and has been puttin up with this alternate bearing habit a a natural law which he [illegible] around may derive some benefit from the instances narrated above. Apples take considerable amounts of fertilizing elements from the soil, and it follows that if fruit is to be picked year after year these elements must as regularly be returned in the shape of fertilizers.

SHOULD GROW POSTS.

It goes without saying that, with the forests of the country falling prey to tooth of flame and sawmill, posts, many other dairy states the percentage of "loafers" is as large. This situation should be remedied, and the only cure there is lies through the use of the Babcock test to determine butter-fat content of milk and a careful weighing of milkings at intervals to determine the volume given in the course of a year.

More often than not warm air in house or stable means foul air and is usually more conducive to lung and stomach troubles than the cold fresh air which is viewed by so many persons as worse than a pestilence.

There is no rule more helpful in the solving of what our duty toward our fellows may be in any particular instance or occasion than that of turning the thing around—of putting oneself in the other's place. It enables one to determine at once what is just and kind and fair and, put into practice, would prevent more strife and trouble—personal, family and community—than can well be imagined.

An entirely new impetus has been given the rat killing campaign because recent investigations prove conclusively that it is a prolific spreader of the germs of the bubonic plague, spotted fever and other maladies. This is said to be due to the fact that the fleas which infest rats laden with disease germs later bite and infect human beings. The question of rat extermination would thus seem to have passed from the realm of expediency to that of necessity.

After forty years of endeavor to establish the Chinook salmon of the Pacific coast in eastern waters, where it is not indigenous, success seems to have been achieved in one instance at least. In his annual report to the department of commerce and labor United States Fish Commissioner Bowers states that this species has been established in Lake Sunapee, New Hampshire, where numerous specimens running from three to five pounds have been taken with line by anglers.

Just so long as the handlers and distributers of the products of the soil are able to so manipulate the situation as to get 65 cents out of every dollar's worth of produce raised, so long will there exist a most powerful influence toward the formation of co-operative enterprises which will cut cross lots to the consumer and leave the jobber and middleman out of the deal. Standing all the expense and risk involved in production, it is only fair that the producer should receive more than 35 per cent of the market value of the crop for his labors.

Somewhat exhaustive tests in digestion and nutrition which have been conducted by the agricultural department at Washington go to show that, contrary to a generally accepted view, cheese requires no more energy to digest than a corresponding amount of meat. This would indicate that as a source of protein it may be eaten in quantity without ill effect instead of being nibbled as an indigestible delicacy largely for its agreeable flavor. There is soon to be issued by the department a pamphlet giving numerous recipes for the use of cheese in more liberal quantities.

The writer recalls with considerable amusement a time, when he was nine or ten years old, when he was badly affected with the "chicken business" microbe. So solicitous was he of the progress of the business that he used to hang around the nook where the setting hens were located during the warm spring months in much fear lest the eggs should chill if the old

V.—Where Is Your Talent?

Remember the case of the man who took his talent, wrapped it in a napkin and buried it?

Not only did his master punish him for his folly, but his conduct has become a byword.

The world has progressed since his time. Modern conditions have developed a kind of man who is even more useless than the one who buried his talent. HE IS THE MAN

WHO SENDS HIS MONEY OUT OF TOWN TO BUY FROM MAIL ORDER HOUSES.

The man who buried his talent at least had the talent to show for it. If we all spent our money out of town in a short time we would have nothing to show for it except BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

The man who patronizes home industries benefits the people he deals with and benefits himself. His conduct is like that of the good and faithful servant who so used the talents intrusted to him that they greatly increased. He is a good and faithful citizen who is worthy of the success he is sure to win.

The next time you see an attractive advertisement of a mail order house go to your local merchant and try to buy the article of him. IF HE HASN'T IT ASK HIM WHY. If he has it ask him why he never told you about it in your local paper.

That will be a boost for us. But we'll stand for it. And we'll boost back; remember that.

Do your share of the boosting and you'll get your share of the prosperity.

LET US BOOST!

While San Jose scale is more frequently observed on the limbs and trunks of trees which it infests, it often appears on mature fruit. In the case of apples like the yellow Newtown its presence is indicated by small deep red spots slightly raised in the center where the scale is established and shading to a thinner color in much the same way as would a boil or sore on one's hand. Often these scale spots may not appear at the time the fruit is packed, but develop by the time it reaches its destination or is taken from storage.

PRACTICAL GAME PROTECTION.

Of the common game birds there is none that is more valuable to the farmer as a destroyer of insects than the quail or bobwhite. All too often, however, in the northern states, where winter snows are deep and usual sources of food supply are cut off, the pretty little fellows die of exposure or starvation or more likely of both. A most effective method of protecting them during the winter season we read of the other day, and we give it in brief for the benefit of other readers who would like to protect the quail on their premises, but don't know just how to go at it. The farmer referred to had for several years past made a practice of putting out feed for the quail and gradually attracting them to the vicinity of the feed sheds. One of these adjoining the barn was sheltered, opening to the south, and was connected by a good sized passageway to the haymow. The quail were first attracted to this shed and fed regularly every morning. As the colder weather came on they took refuge in the haymow, which became their permanent roosting place. When the owner went to the mow to feed them they would fly to the nearest rafters, but as soon as he retreated would fly down and eat the grain he scattered for them. In previous years he found that when spring came these birds mated in the vicinity of the barn and sought nesting places in nearby brush and weed covers, hatched their broods of little ones and were thus able to carry on the war against the insect pests about the place with increased forces.

WOEFULLY SHORTSIGHTED.

Recently the daily papers contained dispatches to the effect that the dairymen of the state of Illinois are opposed to the passage of a tuberculin test law because they contend it would reduce the number of cows in the state by one-tenth. Granted that it would, wouldn't this loss be preferable to a loss once or twice as large which is bound to come if the disease is not thoroughly stamped out, and this entirely aside from any consideration of the hundreds of thousands of people who are consumers of the milk from these same dairy cows? In this connection we recall the case of a young farmer in whose herd of dairy cattle of some eighty head there were twenty animals slightly affected by tuberculosis, as indicated by the tuberculin test. He temporized and monkeyed with the matter, as the dairymen referred to seem inclined to do. The result was that some two years later, when he was compelled by law to do what he knew was his duty to do at first, he lost sixty-five animals instead of twenty. This was good policy? Not by a jugful, and it won't be for any man who owns beef or dairy animals that are afflicted with tuberculosis.

NATURE'S PROTEST.

As in the case of many other plant pests, the damage wrought by the Hessian fly is likely to be most severe in localities where little or no attention is given to the matter of crop rotation. Loss by both insect and fungous pests seems to be nature's way of protesting against a wrong and wanton system of handling the soil, and all too often the tiller of the soil must sustain a severe loss in the above manner before he is willing to mend his ways and adopt a sensible system of crop rotation. Cotton after cotton encourages the boll weevil; corn after corn, the wireworm, corn root worm and corn root louse; wheat after wheat, the blights, smut and Hessian fly; potatoes after potatoes, scab and blight. Virtually all of these pests are reduced to a minimum if crops are grown in rotation, for under such arrangement before the insect or fungous pest gets a good foothold the land is devoted to some other crop which is not affected by it.

BEFRIENDING THE BIRDS.

There is no other single agency which renders as great a service to the farmer, the fruitman and gardener in their fight against insect pests as do birds. Because of this fact tillers of the soil might well take in hand measures not only to give birds greater protection from their enemies, but where possible to give encouragement along the line of providing shelter and nesting places. The first can be accomplished by leaving a little thicket of plum thorn or other trees by roadside, in fence corner or pasture lot. To encourage the presence of birds like the woodpecker, wren, bluebird and martin, that nest in cavities rather than in trees, much can be done by providing artificial nesting places in the shape of bird houses, boxes, tin cans, old stumps and the like. If these places are provided the birds will be attracted to garden and orchard areas, where their services are most valuable.

New Mexico supports a population of 327,000 on its area of 122,000 square miles, while Arizona numbers 200,000 to 113,000 square miles. With the completion of the irrigation projects now under way it is to be expected that the population of both states will be greatly increased by home seekers within the next decade.

The per capita consumption of sugar in England is eighty-six pounds per annum. In the United States it takes during the year eighty-one and a half pounds to sweeten the average consumer's ration. In Switzerland the yearly consumption is sixty-four pounds and in Germany and Holland about forty-three and one-half pounds.

A Missouri agricultural college professor was asked not long ago at a farmers' meeting how to solve the question of a scarcity of farm help. His answer was suggestive, if not in every case feasible. He said to his questioner, "Sell your farm and hire out to your neighbor." The stick with this would likely be that a fellow's neighbor isn't paying quite enough for hired help. There's the rub.

The case was related to the writer the other day of a stingy old landlord who "couldn't afford" to bear half the expense of a repairing of the hog houses on the place to make them wind and water proof and yet who later on was "well enough off" to bear half the expense of a loss of virtually all of the spring pigs because the sows were not provided proper shelter at farrowing time. It verily beats the band what some fellows think they can and can't afford.

On the average farm there is no other food for laying hens which as a furnisher of protein has the value of skimmilk. It should be fed sweet in all but the warmest weather, when it is better to sour it beforehand, and the dishes in which it is fed should be cleaned frequently. Experiments lately made by the Kansas station along the line of using skimmilk showed that it was not only a cheaper but more effective ration than beef scraps when fed in the same proportion.

The rental system long in vogue on many a southern plantation in which the negro renter mortgaged his coming season's crop to buy corn and bacon for himself and family and feed for his mules while getting the new crop ready for market has been not only disastrous from the standpoint of the negro, but even more so from that of the welfare of the soil and the financial returns to the landlord. Many of the latter are slowly waking up, and a more wholesome order of things is being ushered in.

Among other large projects being undertaken in the west, the state of Arizona has launched one which might well be copied by other states—that is, the building of a territorial highway, a roadway twelve feet wide, surfaced in places with disintegrated granite, costing $4,000 per mile, and in other places partly with granite, gravel and oil, costing $900 per mile. The completed system, which will cost $1,250,000, will show 1,043 miles of boulevard connecting the principal cities and towns of the state with that marvelous scenic attraction the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

The trouble with the central and eastern state orchardist is that in a majority of cases he does not have his work arranged so that he has the time to give his orchard the painstaking care which the western fruit rancher gives his. He would better reduce his orchard area by four times and increase the care in the same ratio. This, coupled with proper organization, which will insure favorable results in marketing, will give profitable and satisfactory returns. Unless he is willing to adopt the methods above referred to he would better yank out his trees, plow up the ground and grow corn, oats or clover.

Following the unusually dry summer of last season the coming spring would seem to be an especially favorable time for the proper tiling of the low acres which under the short rainfall of last summer proved so rich and productive. Moreover, if there is anything in the contention that we have entered upon an era of dry years the coming season will be an especially favorable one for making the improvement. The laying of a system of tile is no boys' play, and this, coupled with the further fact that it is to serve a good many years, makes it imperative that the system should be laid out by a man who knows his business and who will do the work most effectively and thoroughly.

The theory that yellow fever is transmitted by mosquitoes is now fully established. The matter has been further sifted, and it has been found that of the hundreds of kinds of the pest only the female of a single variety carries the disease. To infect a person the mosquito twelve days before or earlier must have bitten a yellow fever patient during the first three days of illness. As can be readily seen, the difficulties experienced by men of science in tracing the origin and cause of this terrible disease have been of the greatest. The discovery, however, is well worth all the pains and risks taken in that it has enabled physicians to handle the malady intelligently and thus effectively to check its ravages.

The formal opening of the new British parliament was marked by gorgeous ceremony and was attended by King George and Queen Mary and their suites, most of the dignitaries of the empire, many members of the diplomatic corps and all others who could crowd within the doors of Westminster. The speech from the throne was brief and formal and made small reference to the great issues that underlie the assembling of the members for the present session.

Two more names were added to the death roll of the aeroplane at Douai, France. Aviators Noel and Delatorre were killed while conducting a trial of a military aeroplane before experts from the war department previous to its delivery to the army. Noel was the pilot and Delatorre a passenger.

Figures compiled from the 1910 imperial German census show there are forty-seven cities in the empire having a population in excess of 100,000. The thirteenth census of the United States shows fifty cities with this population. Berlin, Germany's largest city, without its suburbs, has 2,064,154.

The Montreal Star, the largest and most influential newspaper in Canada, devotes an entire page to a denunciation of the proposed reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada and an appeal to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to secure the defeat of the agreement.

Admiral Lord Charles Beresford is sixty-five years of age and by virtue of the age limit clause is retired from the active list of the British navy. He has held no appointment since his surrender on March 24, 1909, of the command of the channel fleet.

Frederick Archibald Vaughan Campbell, third earl of Cawdor and the greatest railway authority in Great Britain, is dead after a long illness.

General Millionard, the head of the Haytien revolutionists, and five other rebel generals were taken from the prison at Trou and shot to death.

In the first division of the new British parliament the house of commons, by a majority of 102, reaffirmed adherence to free trade principles.

The first battle at Juarez, Mex., between federal troops and insurrectionists lasted about an hour and no one was hurt on either side.

Baron Albert Rothschild, head of the Austrian branch of the famous family of bankers, is dead at Vienna.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

Seven members of the family of Herman Berkowitz, the father, mother and five children, were killed by illuminating gas in their home in the Ghetto district of Philadelphia. When their bodies were discovered in the gas filled room by neighbors the father lay fully dressed on one bed with two small boys, while the mother and three girls were in another bed in the same room on the third floor.

In one of the most disastrous explosions ever recorded in Upper Michigan ten men met instant death at the plant of the Pluto Powder company in the outskirts of Ishpeming. Another man was injured. The bodies of the dead were blown to pieces. The explosion took place in the gelatine powder house. Every man in this building perished.

An explosion of gas in the Cokedale mine of the Carbon Coke and Coal company at Trinidad, Colo., caused the death of fifteen men. All the bodies have been recovered and indicate that the victims died of suffocation while attempting to escape from the mine after the explosion.

The Missouri capitol building at Jefferson City has been entirely destroyed by fire. The total loss, including the structure and many records and state papers in the offices of the governor, secretary of state and treasurer, is estimated at $1,000,000, with no insurance.

Ten shop employes of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad were torn to fragments and seven others were injured when an engine under repair exploded in the Smithville (Tex.) yards. Besides the loss of life railroad property valued at $20,000 was destroyed.

Three women were drowned when a street car went through an open draw into the Sheboygan river at Sheboygan, Wis., and became submerged. These were the only passengers inside the car when it toppled into the river.

Four men were crushed to death and five others were perhaps fatally injured when the roof of a brick shed of the Illinois Brick company in Blue Island, Ill., collapsed, burying the men beneath it.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

COUNTY OPTION BILL KILLED

Lower House of State Legislature Puts Measure to Rest by a Vote of 69 to 50.

County option was handed a sleeping potion in the house of representatives by a vote of 69 to 50. The roll call followed an even three hours of uninterrupted debate, during which not a vote was changed, as there were a good many on the floor who knew within one or two of what the roll call would reveal. In spite of the certainty that nothing was to be gained by it the debate was arranged, talked out and finally finished to the entire satisfaction of the county optionists. The antis participated with vigor and put up a fine show and kept their ranks intact.

John Saugstad of Climax will retain the seat in the senate voted him by electors of the Ninth district. This was decided by unanimous vote following a test vote which showed the supporters of A. D. Stephens to be hopelessly in the minority.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT DATE

Minnesota Senate Passes Resolution to Quit April 1.

The upper branch of the state legislature decided, 53 to 8, to fix April 1 as the day for final adjournment. The consent of the house is necessary to the concurrent resolution adopted.

Repeal of the 1909 law forbidding the sale of cigarettes in Minnesota is proposed in a bill offered by Representative G. A. Congdon of Duluth. Mr. Congdon says that the law is a dead letter because of nonenforcement and ought to be wiped off the statute books, as it is bad for public morals to have such disregard for law.

Senator W. S. Dwinnell's resolution, providing for an investigation of the state agricultural society, passed the house by a vote of 87 to 3.

Senator S. A. Nelson of Lanesboro introduced a bill in the senate calling for a tax of 1 cent on every $100 or fraction of the sales made in any grain or other exchange which deals in merchandise for present or future delivery.

BANDIT GETS LONG SENTENCE

Youth Who Terrorized St. Paul Given Sixty Years.

Sixty years for William Koehn—"Shaggy Eyebrows"—at hard labor in the state penitentiary at Stillwater was the sentence imposed by Judge Orr in the Ramsey county district court on the boy—he is only twenty-two years old—who put on a personally conducted reign of terror in St. Paul from Dec. 12 last to the beginning of the new year. To the best information obtainable at the office of Attorney General Simpson this is the longest definite sentence ever passed on a criminal in Minnesota.

In return "Shaggy Eyebrows" got $178 from his victims, according to the six indictments to which he pleaded guilty.

LOSES LIFE IN CABIN FIRE

Homesteader Perishes in Effort to Save Valuables From Flames.

Peter Anderson, a homesteader of Lind, Roseau county, lost his life in an attempt to recover valuables from his burning cabin.

He was at work a distance from the building when he discovered the fire and, running back, wrapping a gunny sack around his head, he went into the building, which by this time was filled with smoke.

Neighbors, arriving a few minutes later, found him lying just inside the door. He was taken into the open air, but life was extinct.

INJURY AT DANCE IS FATAL

High School Girl's Foot, Stepped On, Is Poisoned.

Although her foot was only slightly bruised by being stepped upon at a dancing party held at St. Charles a month ago, Miss Agnes Holland, a young woman aged seventeen, a member of this year's St. Charles high school graduating class, is dead of blood poisoning. The girl first noticed the effects of the bruise a week after the dance.

Youths Accused of Burglary.

Seven young men, between the ages of eighteen and twenty, under arrest at Waverly on burglary charges, are said to have confessed to a series of thefts in that village, committed within the last six months. All of the seven are expected to plead guilty before Judge Giddings at Buffalo.

Big Mill City Firm in Court.

Creditors of Tibbs, Hutchings & Co., wholesale merchants, formerly of St. Paul, now of Minneapolis, filed a petition in the office of the clerk of the United States district court at Minneapolis asking that the company be adjudicated bankrupt.

HOUSE FAVORS RECIPROCITY

Minnesota Lawmakers Kill Resolution in Opposition.

The state house of representatives has declared for the ratification of the Canadian reciprocity treaty. By a vote of 63 to 50 the house killed the S. M. Lee resolution directing the Minnesota representatives in congress to oppose the agreement. The result was due to a solid affirmative vote of the Democratic members, with several Republican members from the rural districts who took a broad view of the question, reinforced by a solid vote of the city members.

The iron ore tonnage tax question, fought in many previous sessions, was raised in the present legislature for the first time. A bill which is almost identical with Henry O. Bjorge's bill of two years ago was offered in the house by Thomas Frankson of Spring Valley, J. N. Johnson of Canby and J. J. Moriarity of Belle Plaine.

INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE

Bill Providing for Legislative Reapportionment.

The house reapportionment committee has introduced the legislative reapportionment bill in the house. The plan calls for sixty-one senators, two less than the present number, and 125 house members, an increase of five.

Senator Wallace of Minneapolis held up the confirmation of J. W. Nash, appointed by Governor Eberhart to be surveyor general of logs and lumber for the upper Mississippi river district. He served notice from the senate floor that he is opposed to Mr. Nash's confirmation and a war is on.

The State Historical society's request for a $500,000 appropriation for a building to house the society and its collections and records was approved by the house committee on general legislation after a hearing.

FRANK A. DAY IS GOING TO MONTANA

Minnesota Democrat Will Run Newspaper at Missoula.

Frank A. Day and John E. King, chief boosters for the Democrats of Minnesota, have pulled out for a "new frontier." They have established a daily Democratic newspaper in Missoula, Mont., the Sentinel, and will try to do to Montana what they did to Minnesota.

It was said Mr. Day, late chairman of the Democratic state central committee, and Mr. King, for six years state librarian, his able coadjutor, intended starting somewhere in Minnesota a Democratic state daily, but somehow their plans fell through.

Messrs. Day and King have purchased the outfit of the Butte Evening News, which recently suspended publication, and they will transfer it to Missoula and issue from there the Missoula Sentinel, an afternoon paper.

CORONER SUSPECTS MURDER

Investigation of Burned Cabin Brings Gruesome Facts to Light.

While Deputy Coroner H. G. Seeley of Duluth does not say so directly his conduct in the investigation of the death of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Newman, the Minneapolis couple whose charred bodies were found in the burned ruins of their cabin two miles from Allen Junction, establishes the belief that he thinks the couple were murdered and robbed.

Mr. Newman had his clothes on when he died in the cabin. The clothing was all burned, but the buckles of his vest were under the remains, and other facts establish the fact that he was not in bed when the cabin burned.

Some of the kitchen utensils of the Newman house were found hidden near the cabin. Articles of jewelry which bore marks of identification are the only ones that have not been recovered.

NEAR DEATH FROM SMOKE

Four Men Taken Unconscious From Minneapolis Hotel.

Four men were rescued from the Mankato House at Minneapolis in an unconscious condition when smoke from a fire in a poolroom and barber shop beneath filled the lodging place. They were revived by a police surgeon. Fifty other roomers escaped in their night clothes.

Victim of Jealous Husband.

Mrs. Joseph Sauro of St. Paul, twenty-two years of age, shot by her husband when he discovered her with Giuseppe Mezzacappa, a boarder, in a shed at the rear of the house Dec. 6, is dead at the city hospital from the effects of the wound. Joseph Sauro is being held at the county jail on a charge of assault with intent to kill. A charge of murder will now be preferred against him.

Tree Kills Woodsman.

While acting in the capacity of undercutter at the Crookston Lumber company's camp No. 5, near White Fish spur, Itasca county, Ole Johnson, aged forty-eight, was instantly killed when a tree falling hit on the side of a dead tree, throwing it in such a manner that it struck Johnson, cracking his skull the whole length of his head.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

The state supreme court has sustained the verdict given to Tillie Ominsky of St. Paul recently for the loss of her hair as the result of fright from an accident in the factory of Charles Weinhagen & Co. The court says that the verdict of the jury involving a finding that fright and nervous shock resulting from an accident caused the particular ailment for which damages were awarded is sustained by the evidence.

The boundary line between Minnesota and Wisconsin is changed by a decision of Judge Page Morris in United States court at Duluth. Judge Morris holds that riparian rights attaching to land on the shores of St. Louis river extend to the new channel established by the government in 1899. The old channel was the boundary between the states and the difference at some points is 1,000 to 2,000 feet.

At the election at Faribault to determine whether or not the city should adopt a new charter the commission plan of government was voted in by a majority of 188 votes. According to the new charter there will be four commissioners and a chairman, the commissioners to receive $600 per year and the chairman $900. The latter official will fulfill the duties which at present devolve upon the mayor.

Two hundred students attending the farmers' short course at the state college of agriculture, many of them veteran farmers of the state, were presented with graduation certificates for satisfactory work during the month's stay. The diplomas were conferred by Dean Albert F. Woods, after a short address.

A bill calling for approximately $5,000,000 for maintenance and improvements at state institutions under the state board of control for the biennial period from Aug. 1, 1911, to July 31, has been introduced in both branches of the legislature.

A large timber wolf of the Siberian variety was killed in the vicinity of Pencer, Roseau county. These wolves are found only in Northern Canada and Alaska and have never been known to come this far south.

Many of the contagious disease patients treated in Duluth contract diseases in unsanitary lumber camps and a county medical inspector is proposed by Health Commissioner Webster of Duluth in his annual report.

The heavy snowfall in Northern Minnesota insures a good stage of water for the drives and the lumbermen are happy. Last year millions of feet never reached the mills owing to lack of water.

Minneapolis won the contest from a half dozen contending cities as the seat of the next general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, which convenes in May, 1912.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

S. D. Peterson, postmaster of New Ulm, is dead. Mr. Peterson was nearly sixty-two years old. He had been an active Republican all his life and entered the state senate in 1881 and served ten years in that body. In the nineties he was a representative from Brown county for eight years.

Mrs. Patrick Doran, an old resident of Duluth, was stricken with paralysis at her home in that city and died after speaking a few words. The Doran family is well known in Northern Minnesota. Mrs. Doran was fifty-two years old.

L. M. Conkey, only survivor of the firm of Conkey Bros., pioneer merchants and millers of Southeastern Minnesota, is dead at Preston. He was about seventy-five years old and located at Preston in the middle fifties.

Mrs. G. W. Morehead, the first child born in Mankato, died recently at Howell, Ida., where she had gone for her health, having been afflicted with tuberculosis for some four years. She was fifty-eight years old.

Orlan O. Cullen, retired capitalist, and several years ago prominently identified in St. Paul business affairs and politics, is dead at Los Angeles, Cal.

Magdalena Roedler, a resident of St. Paul since 1853, is dead. Mrs. Roedler was born in Germany and came to America in 1851.

Thomas L. Fitzgerald, proprietor of the Gilbert hotel at Gilbert, was killed by a train.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Paul Oreskovich, aged twenty-six, was asphyxiated in a culvert on the Canadian Northern extension north of Duluth. He crawled into the culvert and encountered gas which had formed from a dynamite explosion.

A bullet intended for a pigeon, fired by Sam Sloan, eighteen years old, killed Robert Neff, forty-five years old, at the dairy farm of L. H. Pinska, near St. Paul. Both were employed at the farm.

Fire practically destroyed the plant of the Lino Floor Covering Manufacturing company at St. Anthony Park. The damage amounts to $30,000, one-third covered by insurance.

John Antonsich, employed as skip tender in the Pioneer mine at Ely, was found dead at the bottom of the shaft. He had fallen down the shaft, a distance of 200 feet.

THE HENPECKED CLUB.

Queer Methods of a Queer Society In Lancashire, England.

Of all the queer clubs that exist in the world you will find some of the queerest in Lancashire, England. One of these is called the Henpecked club. As the title indicates, its members are all males, and you can come across a club in almost every Lancashire town of any size.

The meetings are held, as a rule, in some bar parlor, and the discussions are about members and often nonmembers who have the reputation of being henpecked. When evidence has been brought to show that a particular man has allowed himself to come under his wife's thumb they tax him with it in the place of meeting. The president delivers a lecture on the danger of a husband permitting his wife to usurp his position as master, and when the others have indorsed his remarks the person to whom the speeches are addressed is warned that if he continues to stand the henpecking he will be made the subject of a demonstration.

The announcement that a "henpecked" club demonstration is to take place is received in the district with mixed feelings. The men applaud it, and the local police, recalling similar displays that led to trouble, become a little anxious. On the evening appointed the members of the club meet at a public house, where they arm themselves with all kinds of household utensils; then, led by concertina players or a tin whistle band, they start out and march along the crowded streets of the district.

One man carries a broom, another a swab, a third a shovel or a coal scuttle or a fender or a poker. Fire tongs, blacklead brushes, washtubs, buckets—everything used in the home, in fact—is carried shoulder high. As they march along to the music in front and the discordant clanging of their baggage they sing snatches of songs in which the name of the victim occurs often.

The mission of the verses, which have been specially composed for the occasion by a local poet, is to hold up the henpecked one to ridicule, the reason for the demonstrators bearing the household goods being, of course, to remind him that, having fallen under petticoat government, he will quickly become the slavey.

When they reach the cottage where their victim resides they form a circle in front of the door and sing and clang their fenders and coal scuttles more loudly than ever.

The man inside is invoked by the president during a halt in the program to "be a man" and join his brethren. Sometimes if he looks upon the affair as more of a joke than anything else he does their bidding, and they reform and march to headquarters with him at their head. Usually, however, his wife appears instead with a bucket of soapy water, which she promptly throws over the demonstrators, or she quickly causes a clearance with a hose pipe.

To the onlooker it is just an exhibition for laughter and nothing more, but behind the scenes there is generally a lot of trouble and heartaching. A good number of these "henpecked" demonstrations have sequels in police courts. Sometimes it is an enraged victim being charged with assaulting a demonstrator, but more often than not the sequel shows a wife appealing to the magistrate for a separation order.—London Tit-Bits.

A Bullet Stopped the Game.

Alfred de Musset, the poet and dramatist, was almost as fond of chess as of poetry. He played nearly every night at the Cafe de la Regence, and even the revolution of February, 1848, did not divert him from his habit. He turned up as usual and, finding no one there to play with, insisted that the waiter should make a game for him. The waiter did so, though a fusillade was raging in the street outside, and all went well until a musket bullet smashed a mirror in immediate proximity to the board. Musset was anxious to continue in spite of the interruption, but his opponent would not. "With monsieur's permission," he said, "we will adjourn the game until after the republic has been proclaimed."—Paris Gaulois.

Sentimental Juries.

Maitre Henri Robert, the most famous advocate in criminal cases at the Paris bar, told an audience almost entirely composed of ladies that before any jury a woman with some youth some looks and a pretty voice has fifty chances out of a hundred of being acquitted, whereas a man would have only one. If she knows how to shed tears at the right moment she need not worry—a verdict of not guilty is a dead certainty.—Paris Letter.

Tuberculosis is often induced by damp and filthy surroundings and badly ventilated sleeping quarters; hence the removal of these causes, if they exist, will contribute to the health of the herd.

A poser for those fond of making fine ethical distinctions: Does the egg laid by your neighbor's hen in your barn or woodshed rightfully belong to him or yourself, provided your garden and back yard furnish her food and your flower beds a dusting place?

Nine times out of ten it does not pay to monkey with really sick poultry. It is better to knock them on the head with a [illegible] than to allow them to run indiscriminately with and infect the rest of the flock. Should the sick fowls recover they seldom pay their keep for months.

LAYING BRICKS.

How Scientific Methods Raised the Standard of a Day's Work.

There are now eminent consulting engineers who are engaged by industrial heads to study their establishments from top to bottom with a view to finding by scientific study the methods of working, accounting and handling labor which will improve on the old traditional habits. Some extraordinary results have been attained. What scientific management means is admirably illustrated by the story of bricklaying, as told by an expert.

Ordinarily a brick mason makes eighteen different sets of motions in laying a single brick. He bends over, in the first place, to pick up one brick, and in lifting it he lifts ten pounds of brick and about a hundred pounds of brick mason—the upper part of his own body. In laying 1,000 bricks in a day's work he lifts 100,000 pounds of brick mason. This was an obvious waste of labor. So a common laborer was hired to put the bricks where the masons would not have to stoop for them. Another thing is that when a mason picks up a handmade brick, which is always a little thicker at one side than on the other, he tosses the brick up, turning it over until his touch tells him which side is the top before he puts it in place in the wall. The cure for this was to have all the bricks piled top up before they were brought to the masons. Then, further, every one has seen the mason tap his brick several times to settle it into the mortar—more waste of time. The cure was to make the mortar thinner, so that the weight of the brick would settle it into the right position. This was scientific management, "motion study." It raised the day's work for the average brick mason from 1,000 up to 2,700 bricks a day and in individual cases to much higher figures. The mason made only six motions where he used to make eighteen.—American Review of Reviews.

WHISTLER WAS INDIGNANT.

The Idea of Buying His Pictures and Then Demanding Possession.

A certain eminent English lady, the proud possessor of a title of fairly high degree, who admired Whistler's genius to the extent of purchasing one of his pictures, never was able to obtain possession of her property. One day she drove to the studio in her victoria. Mr. Whistler went to greet her.

"Mr. Whistler," she said, "two years ago I bought one of your pictures, a beautiful thing, and I have never been able to hang it on my walls. It has been loaned to one exhibition or another. Now, today I have my carriage with me, and I would like to take it home with me. I am told it is in your possession."

"Dear lady," returned Whistler, "you ask the impossible. I will send it to you when I have it again, but it is not here. You have been misinformed." And so forth, and so forth, to the same effect, and the lady drove off without her picture.

After she had departed Whistler commenced to poke around his studio and, to the great astonishment of a friend who had been an involuntary listener to the above conversation, he brought forth a canvas.

"Here it is," he said. "She was right about one thing—it is beautiful." And it was beautiful.

"But the impudence of these people," he continued, "who think that because they pay a few paltry hundred pounds they own my pictures. Why, it merely secures them the privilege of having them in their houses now and then! The pictures are mine!"

A Medical Sherlock Holmes.

A physician was knocked down and robbed while on his way to see a patient. His pockets were rifled, and one of the articles stolen was a clinical thermometer with which he had earlier in the evening taken the temperature of a patient. He remembered the temperature registered and also that he had not shaken down the mercury before putting the thermometer in his pocket. He communicated these facts to the police. Some time afterward a thermometer registering the identical temperature was discovered in a pawnshop, and the police were enabled thereby to track the doctor's assailants and to arrest them.

The Wicked Majority.

A new gardener had been employed on a Long Island estate. This man was raking leaves off the lawn one fall day when a neighbor, passing by, inquired of him, "Where's the gardener who used to work here?"

"Dead, sir," was the reply.

"Dead!" said the astonished neighbor. Then, musing, he added, "Joined the great majority, eh?"

"Oh, sir," the gardener interrupted in a shocked voice, "I wouldn't like to say that. He was a good enough man as far as I know."

Caution.

"Shall I have this prescription filled without further consultation?" asked the patient.

"Certainly," replied the physician. "Why not?"

"I thought maybe I'd better call in a handwriting expert."—Washington Star.

Reciprocity.

There is one word which may serve as a rule of practice for all one's life—that word is reciprocity. What you do not wish done to yourself do not do to others.—Confucius.

Pretty Narrow.

Mrs. Hoyle—Is there much room in your flat? Mrs. Doyle—I should say not! There isn't room to give anybody a broad hint.—Judge.

Arbitration is a whole lot cheaper than lawing and makes better neighbors.

The dairy barn should be kept well ventilated not only to insure the good health of the cows, but the sweetness and freedom from odor of the milk.

It is a pretty safe plan to keep an eye on a neighbor if the family dog hikes under the corncrib or back kitchen every time he puts in an appearance.

The worth of boy or girl is just as often due to the handicaps which they have to overcome as to the favorable conditions or environment under which they may be reared.

If the nesting boxes are kept supplied with clean material there will be no need of washing the eggs before putting them down to keep—in fact, they will keep much better if no water touches them.

The trouble about every first class country school teacher is that some industrious young fellow of the neighborhood is likely to learn of her ability as a homemaker as soon as the director appreciates her worth as a pedagogue.

Those who have traveled through eastern Oregon and down the Columbia river have noticed with much interest the barriers erected along the track in many places to stop the shifting sands and keep them from blocking the track. Notwithstanding this precaution not infrequently trains have to stop until the sand drifts have been removed.

There is no enterprise along agricultural lines that can be set afoot in a community that will do more to contribute to its material wealth, contentment and prosperity than dairying. Fundamentally this is because it means the establishing of a system or type of farming which means soil replenishing instead of soil robbing and impoverishing.

Sago and tapioca are two food products used extensively in American cooking. The first is prepared from the starch secured from the pith of several species of East Indian palm trees. Tapioca is made by heating in a moist state the starch made from the root of the cassava or tapioca plant, which is a native of several South American countries.

Research work which has been conducted by the biological survey in the Blue Ridge apple district in Virginia shows that some twenty-five species of native birds prey upon the codling moth, and it is estimated that they destroy from 50 to 85 per cent of the hibernating pupae. This means that birds are a more effective means of keeping this pest in check than all the rest of their natural enemies combined.

An eastern florist is said to be getting remarkable egg returns by screening off a portion of one of his greenhouses and keeping the flock of hens there within view of the growing and blossoming flowers. The secret of his success, and there would seem to be no good reason to doubt it, lies in the fact that he has in large measure reproduced for the hens springtime conditions, which are very favorable to egg production.

More often than is the case life insurance should be viewed as a systematic and regular method of saving than as mere insurance against death. There are many men who take this view and who put practically all of their surplus earnings into insurance premiums. Payments must be made at regular intervals, are anticipated and a definite plan made to meet them. In the matter of being able to afford the carrying of life insurance it is more often true than not that the fellow who says he is too poor to carry insurance is the one whose family is in need of just such protection and who would be left destitute and unprovided for in case of his death.

Failure to use the Babcock test in the determining of the butter fat product of each member of the dairy herd not only prevents an effective elimination of the loafer, but also prevents adjusting the grain ration of the individual to her actual needs—that is, to the amount of butter fat produced. A feeding rule based on this test which is followed by many dairymen is to give each cow as many pounds of grain per day as she produces in butter fat per week. For instance, a cow giving twelve pounds of butter fat per week is given twice as much grain as the cow producing but six pounds. Yet how many dairymen continue in the same old rut, giving a cow so many quarts of feed, whether she is producing much or little butter, just because she is a cow and is giving some milk!

Shippers of the country and especially growers of perishable fruits will note with interest the outcome of a case brought by Dumas, a Columbia river valley fruit grower, against the Oregon Railroad and Navigation company for loss sustained because of a failure of the transportation company to provide cars at specified intervals as per terms of a special contract. In giving its ruling on the case the court—the United States court of appeals for the Ninth district—held that such contract was not invalid as discriminatory and contrary to public policy and that the carrier's liability to furnish cars at specified times, as agreed, owing to an unusually heavy traffic at the time they were demanded, constituted no defense to an action seeking to recover damages sustained because of such failure.

LANDS ARE OPENED

Congressman Steenerson's Bill Passed Both Houses Last Saturday.

Remaining Lands on the Eleven Towns Now Open for Entry.

A telegram was received from President Taft Saturday noon announcing his approval of the Steenerson bill, which had passed both houses, for the opening of the remaining lands on the Eleven Towns—ceded Red Lake Reservation. The bill is as follows:

An Act, authorizing homestead entries on certain lands formerly a part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that hereafter all lands ceded under the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the sale of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in Minnesota," approved February twentieth, nineteen hundred and four, and undisposed of, shall be subject to homestead entry at the price of not less than four dollars per acre, payable as provided in section three of said Act, for all lands not heretofore entered; and for all lands embraced in canceled entries, the price shall be the same as that at which they were originally entered: provided, that where such entries have been or shall hereafter be canceled pursuant to contests, the contestant shall have a preference right to enter the land embraced in such canceled entry, as prescribed in the Act of July twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two: Provided further, that all lands entered under this Act shall, in addition to the payments herein provided for, be subject to drainage charges, if any, authorized under the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May twentieth, nineteen hundred and eight. (Twenty-seventh Statutes, page two hundred and seventy.)

Passed the House of Representatives February 7, 1911.

DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Heyduk's Tailor Shop Almost Completely Destroyed Sunday Morning.

Loss Is Estimated at About $700, Covered By $500 Insurance.

The tailor shop of Lewis Heyduk, located just off LaBree avenue on 2nd street, east, was almost completely destroyed by fire last Sunday morning.

The fire was discovered by T. P. Hornseth about 1 o'clock Sunday morning as he was just about to close up his store, and a hasty alarm was sent in but the fire had gained such headway before being detected that the building was in a mass of flames when the fire department arrived on the scene and but little of the building was saved.

Most of the clothes had been delivered the evening before, and what remained of them were saved before any great deal of damage was done, which consequently, lightens the loss somewhat.

The total loss is estimated at about $700, which was covered by about $500 insurance.

Mr. Heyduk will either erect or rent a building for the purpose of opening up a tailor shop again in the near future, and intends to leave for the Twin Cities to purchase a new outfit and select a new stock and patterns.

The fire is supposed to have originated from an overheated stove.

Child is Getting Better.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ralston will be glad to learn that their son, Morris, who was so badly scalded last week that it was feared that he would lose the sight of his right eye, is now seemingly out of danger and it is believed he will retain his eyesight.

The child was taken to Crookston last week by Mr. and Mrs. Ralston and an operation was performed on the eye by Dr. Morley, the Crookston specialist, who was assisted by Dr. Smith. The child withstood the operation nicely and is at present doing as well as could be expected.

Mr. Ralston returned to this city yesterday but Mrs. Ralston will remain at Crookston, until the child has recovered sufficiently to admit of his being removed to this city, which may not be for a couple of weeks yet.

PASSED HOUSE

Reapportionment Bill Passes House By a Vote of 85 to 31.

The Only Amendment Proposed Was Rearrangement of Districts Nos. 9 and 16.

A telegram from Representative O'Neill was received last Tuesday announcing the passage of the reapportionment bill in the Minnesota house by a vote of 85 to 31, that day.

The only amendment proposed was a rearrangement of districts Nos. 9 and 10. In the original bill No. 9 was composed of Watonwan and Martin counties and No. 10 of Jackson, Cottonwood and Murray counties. The amendment joins Martin and Jackson counties and places Watonwan in the tenth. The bill provides that the fifty-ninth district shall be composed of the counties of Clearwater, Norman, Mahnomen, Pennington and Red Lake and shall be entitled to elect one senator and three representatives. The representative district shall be divided as follows:

The counties of Clearwater and Mahnomen shall constitute one district and shall be entitled to elect one representative.

The county of Norman shall constitute one district and shall be entitled to elect one representative.

The counties of Pennington and Red Lake shall constitute one district and shall be entitled to elect one representative.

SNOW IS PLENTIFUL

Railroads Report Conditions For Planting Favorable Over Northwest.

Great Preparations Were Made Last Fall For This Spring Work.

Minneapolis, Feb. 21—The northwest has sufficient moisture in the ground to insure the planting, germination and early growth of the wheat crop, to a date past the time when spring rains will be due, according to reports from many sources, received at the Chamber of Commerce.

Cold weather, with intermittent rain and snow, has put the ground in good condition. There was more farm work done last fall in preparation for spring seeding than ever before, according to the same advices.

J. B. Johnson was in the city last night enroute to his old home in Redwood Falls, this state.

Harry Schuster returned to this city Tuesday evening from Milbank, S. D., where he had been employed on a paper for the past year.

To Open Candy Kitchen.

As soon as the frost goes out of the ground this spring, A. H. Hornseth will commence the erection of a building back of his store on LaBree avenue and 2nd street in which he will open a candy kitchen.

Mr. Hornseth is now negotiating for the latest and most up-to-date machinery and conveniences which he will install in the building and will be able to produce the finest line of candies.

BADLY BURNED

Five-Year-Old Daughter of Adolph Nelson Meets With Serious Accident.

Is Badly Burned While Attemping to Kindle a Fire In the Stove.

Helen, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Nelson, of Knight Avenue North, met with a very serious accident last Thursday and is in a critical condition as a result.

The child was playing with matches and was in the act of kindling a fire in the stove, when her clothes caught fire, burning her body in a horrible manner.

Mrs. Nelson who was upstairs at the time was attracted by the child's scream, but when she arrived on the scene the child was a mass of flames.

Dr. Swedenberg was summoned and the child is now doing as nicely as could be expected under the circumstances.

Mr. Nelson who was up the Greenbush line at the time arrived home the latter part of last week.

County Exhibit At State Fair.

Would it not be a good idea for this brand new county to advertise itself and its agricultural capabilities by making an exhibit at the State Fair this year?

By forming an organization now to take charge of the matter, and keeping it before the people during the summer, there is no question, but an exhibit can be made, that would attract favorable attention to the county.

City Bonds.

City Attorney Halvorson put in a few days in the Cities last week and while there negotiated the sale of the recent issue of Auditorium bonds, receiving par and accrued interest for the entire issue.

The sale of these bonds as was the case with all bond offerings, owing to the condition of the bond market, during the past few months was difficult at a rate which it was felt such unquestional security should bring, and the council wisely determined that there would be no sacrifice and to wait until matters had adjusted themselves. During the time the bonds have been sold, it is reported, several offers have been received from would be financiers, so ridiculous as to be laughable.

FARMERS' INSTITUTES

The Fourth Meeting for Farmers Will Not Be Held at Lincoln High School

Prof. H. Kirkpatrick, of College of Agriculture, Will Have Charge of Meeting.

The fourth meeting for the farmers under the auspices of the department of agriculture of the high school will not take place at the school. In lieu thereof, an afternoon meeting will be held on March 1st, at 2:30 at the school house in district 73, known as the Sunnyside school. In the evening at 7:30, another meeting will take place at Valhal in the Englestad community.

Prof. Kirkpatrick of the college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park will have charge of the meeting and will be assisted by local speakers. The purpose of changing the meetings to the rural sections is to secure the attendance of more farmers and to prepare for the big two days' institute to be held in this city in March, at which there will be seed contests and prizes awarded. Within a few days announcements will be made of two more rural meetings northwest and northeast of the city, both of which will occur prior to this seed contest. This pure seed competition will be under the direction of the recently organized Upper Minnesota Corn Growers' Association and will be open to all the counties in the northwestern part of the state.

The farmers in the sections where the meetings are to be held next week are requested to make them as public as possible and to secure the attendance of every person in the district.

There was a good attendance of farmers at the meeting of last week in the high school gymnasium and the speakers delivered very valuable and interesting addresses. Local events have interfered with all the three meetings held so far, and it is expected that by having the next one in the country that more farmers may be enabled to attend.

Swedish Baptist Church.

The Young People's Society of the Swedish Baptist Church will hold their meeting in the church at 5 o'clock, which will be conducted in the English language. After the meeting a lunch will be served. Your presence is cordially sought.

Lincoln High School Dedication

The hour of dedication of the Lincoln and Mechanical school buildings is changed from 7:30 in the evening, as announced last week, to 3 in the afternoon. It is discovered that such large numbers of people propose attending the ceremonies, that unavoidable crush and confusion would result by having all the exercises after seven o'clock. So the program will be carried out exactly as planned, except the change noted above.

No children under the seventh grade can be permitted to attend the afternoon ceremonies, as the seventh and eighth grades, the high school students and parents and visitors will more than tax the capacity of the Lincoln. All the grade children, however, and adults who cannot be present during the afternoon, are urged to examine the new buildings some time during the evening. They will be lighted and high school students will be present to direct visitors about. All persons, the grade children included, are also invited to the auditorium at eight o'clock to hear the dedicatory address by Governor Eberhardt.

School will be in session in all the buildings during the whole day, with the exception of the grammar grades and the high school, which will suspend work at 2:30 to permit these students to attend the exercises in the Lincoln assembly at 3.

Professor Retzius, Well Known Swedish Educator, Receives Prussian Order—First Woman Member of Norwegian Storthing to Take Her Seat Shortly—Denmark Fighting the Ravages of Tuberculosis.

SWEDEN.

Professor M. G. Retzius has been awarded the insignia of the Prussian Order Pour le Merite by Emperor William of Germany. There are very few persons who have received this order throughout the world and it is only awarded to persons who have accomplished something which adds to the world's culture. Professor Retzius is one of the best educated men in Sweden and is considered one of the strongest philosophers in the country today. Among those who now are in possession of this order in Stockholm are Oscar Montelius, royal antiquarian. The late A. E. Nordenskiold was also a member of the distinguished order.

It is rumored that the successor to Count Puckler, as Germany's ambassador to Sweden, will be Von Reichenau, at present German envoy in Belgrade. The latter was born in Wiesbaden and is a member of an old family of German nobility. He is characterized as a model diplomat, modern and able, and has been very popular since he entered the German diplomatic service. It is likely that he will soon be appointed to the Stockholm post and if so will arrive to assume charge of his duties about May 1.

Baron Ehrensvard, the newly appointed Swedish minister to Washington; Governor Eberhart of Minnesota and Governor Deneen of Illinois have been invited to deliver addresses at the dedication of the Swedish club at 470 La Salle street, Chicago, next month. The club has just erected a $100,000 clubhouse and is the oldest and most prominent Swedish club in the United States.

According to an amendment presented to paragraph 13 of the Swedish constitution by Representative Wavrinsky the Swedish king will hereafter have no right to declare war without first having the sanction of both the First and Second chambers of the riksdag. It is likely that the amendment will be adopted. It has occasioned a spirited and diversified expression of opinion among the members of the riksdag.

A minister who thinks that his salary should be decreased instead of increased is Rev. Ernst Klefbeck, who has been receiving $162 a year as chaplain of certain insane hospitals in Stockholm. He thinks that $100 a year would be plenty and he has therefore requested the authorities to cut his salary to the aforementioned amount.

The Swedish Singers' union is working hard to raise sufficient funds for erecting a temporary music hall at the Olympic games at Stockholm in 1912. It is proposed to make the hall large enough to seat 3,000 persons. It is also proposed to hold an international sangerfest in connection with the Olympian games.

Selma Lagerlof's "Gosta Berling" has been dramatized by the Swedish playwright, Algot Sandberg, and the story in its new dress will be given at the "Svenska Teatern" in the very near future. That this play will be well patronized by Stockholm audiences goes without saying.

The crown prince and crown princess of Sweden will represent the Swedish royal house at the coronation festivities in London next June. The royal pair will be accompanied by four persons, of whom two are army officers, who will represent the Swedish army and navy.

Rev. K. Gasslander, assistant pastor in the Gustavus Vasa congregation in Stockholm, preached the sermon at the opening of the Swedish riksdag. It was a powerful sermon and was given wide publicity by the Stockholm papers.

After this the lower officers of the Swedish army will be compelled to listen to lectures on agriculture. The department of agriculture has endorsed a proposition to have regular lectures on agriculture for their benefit.

There is at present a strong movement on foot in Malmo to have steps taken toward the construction of a free bather in that city. Malmo is one of the cities in Sweden that has been coming to the front rapidly of late.

According to a telegram from London the Royal Geographical society has appointed Claes Asker secretary for the Chinese imperial customs commission in Shanghai. Mr. Asker is the first Swede who has been honored with a similar distinction.

Dr. Sven Soderman has been selected to succeed the late Professor V. E. Lilfors as a member of the Nobel committee.

NORWAY.

President Bratlie is soon to withdraw as a member of the storthing and his seat will be occupied by Miss Anna Rogstad, his alternate, who will be the first woman member of that body. Though Norwegian women obtained the franchise but recently the movement really commenced in the time of John Stuart Mill—toward the middle of the Nineteenth century—and has been active since 1885, when the first suffrage society was organized. During the past twenty-five years countless resolutions and petitions were forwarded to the storthing asking for votes for women. Strange to relate the suffrage leaders in Norway have had to contend less with opposition offered by men than with the apathy and resistance of the great bulk of their own sex. Naturally the work of agitation has had to be done by a handful of faithful ones who saw the importance of bringing about the reforms they desired. The women who have been most active in this work are Miss Gina Krogh, Mrs. Ragna Nielson and Mrs. Fredrikke Onam. These three suffragettes have devoted their lives to inspiring women to demand their rights and to gather their forces to successfully bombard the citadel of male prejudice. As a result of consistent and conscientious agitation the last twenty-five years have seen most of the sex disabilities removed and the women of Norway admitted to all professions. They have now a representative in the storthing and chances are that at the next election there will be more.

As regards divorce legislation woman's vote is destined to have little effect, for no nation has gone farther than Norway in passing laws calculated to insure woman's matrimonial independence. Today a divorce may be secured by mutual consent and the husband and wife so separated may marry again after a year. If both parties do not agree either the man or the woman may obtain a divorce upon presenting proof of drunkeness, adultery, lunacy, desertion, venereal disease or wasteful extravagance. Either party may secure a divorce if, previous to the marriage, either one had been insane or addicted to the use of alcoholic stimulants or infected with some loathsome disease without having told the other about it prior to the union. Indeed, if the husband or wife merely grows tired of one another a divorce may be secured on the grounds of incompatibility. The laws of Norway make exit from life in double harness equally easy for rich and poor. All proceedings are conducted behind closed doors and there is no publicity of any sort, since the newspapers are not permitted to publish any facts in regard to any case.

Last year was by far the best for the canning industry of Norway. The increase of the output was largely due to the increased demand of foreign markets for canned spring herring and small herring, which goods so far have had a poor reputation. The sales last year were almost 100 per cent larger than in 1908.

DENMARK.

Denmark is one of the countries that is doing a great deal to check the ravages of tuberculosis. Every year shows a distinct gain on the part of the work of the Anti-Tuberculosis society, which just recently celebrated its tenth anniversary. Its six sanitariums now accommodate 600 patients and the total cost of the institutions is about $650,000. About 5,000 patients have been dismissed, 1,285 are on their way to recovery, 1,016 are considerably better and 1,358 are comparatively well. Only sixty-three patients have died. Another series of figures shows that those who were dismissed did not have a relapse and are all doing remarkably well. This society is doing a world of good in the Scandinavian countries and especially so in Denmark.

There has been established in Paris a French-Danish insurance company with a capital of 4,000,000 francs. Of this amount a third is Danish and the balance French capital. The general director of the company will be the Danish consul general, Wilhelm Hansen, who has been taking the initiative in the organization of the new company. The company starts out in good hands and indications are that it has a bright future ahead of itself.

A case of leprosy has been discovered in Svendborg, where it is learned that the wife of a telephone line repairer has pronounced symptoms of leprosy. She is an Icelander and came from that country to Denmark five years ago. It is also learned that her father has leprosy and that he has been confined in the hospital for the lepers in Reykjavik. Plans are under way for removing Mrs. Lund to the same hospital.

Madame Anna Larsen, the well known Danish actress, who some time ago retired from the stage after having joined the so called "speaking in tongues sect," is now appearing publicly again and has recently been giving a series of lectures in Bornholm. She has expressed a desire to return to the stage again and it is very possible that she will appear at one of the Copenhagen theaters in the very near future.

Attorney Thorwald Lund, one of the most prominent lawyers of Copenhagen, disappeared from the city a few weeks ago and there is not a single clew as to his whereabouts. A number of his friends feel that he might have encountered foul play.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The relations of Russia and China are strained to the breaking point. Russia has notified the governments of Great Britain, France and Germany of her intention to make a military demonstration on the Russo-Chinese frontier owing to China's persistent violation of the St. Petersburg treaty of 1881. Russian troops will be sent forthwith to the district of Ili. The extent of the demonstration, it is added in the diplomatic note, will depend entirely upon the attitude assumed by China.

Notes received by the British foreign office from various European chancellories indicate a general belief that China will not submit to Russia's occupation of the Ili province, in Chinese Turkestan, without some show of resistance. It is doubted, however, whether this resistance will be other than diplomatic, involving probably an appeal to other countries.

The viceroy of Manchuria estimates that the fatalities in Manchuria from the bubonic plague already have reached 65,000, while the foreign office believes that inside the great wall there have been 1,000 more deaths. According to the general belief, however, the number of fatalities will be nearer double those of the official estimates.

During the preliminary home rule debate in the house of commons Premier Asquith reiterated his declaration that the government's first task, after the "veto bill" had been disposed of, would be to carry out a policy of full self-government for Ireland.

It is estimated that 500,000 are dead from starvation, fever and exposure in the provinces of Anhui and Kiangsu, China, and that at least 2,000,000 more are in danger of meeting the same fate.

Five men were killed and two severely injured as the result of a premature explosion in a tunnel at Keselas, B. C. A box of powder, left to thaw out, became overheated.

Japan has renounced the Anglo-Japanese convention of 1908, regulating the commercial relations between Canada and Japan. The convention will thus expire in July.

Captain Preuss and three members of the Philippine constabulary have been wounded in an encounter with the Moros. Twenty of the Moros were killed.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

The epidemic of grip at New York shows no signs of subsidence and health department records show a large increase in the number of deaths from grip and pneumonia over last year. Inclement and changeable weather is the cause of the unusual number of cases of grip.

A SUGGESTION TO LAND BUYERS

In view of the millions of dollars, literally, that are being spent by ofttimes greedy and gullible investors in various land promotion schemes it would be a good idea if would be purchasers of land in localities of which they do not possess first hand reliable information would take a little more pains to find out whether the glittering, golden story narrated by the zealous real estate agent needs toning down somewhat to make it tally with actual facts. One of the best ways of securing the desired information would be to address a letter of inquiry to the agricultural college of the state in which the land to be bought is located asking definite questions as to soil, climate, water supply, rainfall or possibility of irrigation, adaptability of the soil to produce the kinds and quantities of fruit, grain or vegetables claimed by the real estate agent, and last, but not least, some queries should be put as to the reliability and integrity of the individual or company backing a given land promotion scheme, upon which perhaps more than anything else depend the safety and advisability of purchasing. The would be buyer may say: "Oh, shucks! This is too much red tape. The agent is genial and gentlemanly, gives me a free ride and a fine Havana cigar, and I think I can believe what he tells me and also save time." We have known of fellows who have thought if not spoken in substance as above and have had an awakening not many months after buying on the real estate agent's representations or misrepresentations who went out into the tall brush, thick dust or deep ooze on the back end of their places and metaphorically kicked themselves every morning at sunrise for being such big suckers and easy marks.

"DRY FARMING" EXPERIENCE.

A friend related to us the other day the experience of a Mississippi valley farmer who went out into eastern Montana a year ago last spring and took up or bought a farm in the "dry" country. The first season, owing to inadequate preparation of the soil, he raised barely enough to carry his few animals through the winter. However, this experience was valuable, and last spring after reading all the government and state bulletins he could get hold of on the subject of dry farming he went at it again. In the fall he came into our friend's office and planked down a sheaf of oats from a field which he said yielded him at the rate of sixty-four bushels per acre, which is just about twice the average yield of oats the country over. The success of this young fellow was not exceptional, we think. It was the direct result of the application of energy and brains and an open mindedness which did not cause him to view with contempt the labors of agricultural college farmers. In fact, he attributes his success largely to the help got from the bulletins.

WATER PIPES EXPLODE.

Several householders of whom the writer has read within the past few weeks have had some narrow escapes as a result of the bursting by steam pressure of water pipes connected with their kitchen ranges. In one case the man of the house had a hand blown off at the wrist, while in another the housewife had a close call from a fragment of the stove which was hurled by the force of the explosion through the panel of the door just back of her. Accidents of this kind are directly due to the freezing of the water in the pipes and a consequent shutting off of any avenue of escape for the steam formed in the stove water front after the starting of the fire in the morning. And in a majority of cases the obstruction will be found in the lead pipe running from the stove to the tank. If water in the receptacles in the kitchen is found frozen in the morning it is a very safe precaution to hold a burning paper or lamp under this connecting pipe to thaw it out before a fire is started in the stove.

THINGS ON A BIG SCALE.

The impression left upon the mind of one who for the first time travels in the west is pre-eminently one of vastness. This is made by the horizon limited plains of Wyoming, the towering peaks and mighty chasms of the Rockies, the unbroken and monotonous deserts of Utah and Nevada. Added to this are the wonderful feats of engineering whereby man tunnels through mountains of solid rock, spans abysses at dizzy heights and triumphs over seemingly impassable barriers; the all but superhuman projects undertaken to transform hundreds of thousands of acres of desert lands into veritable garden spots and homes. These are the factors which make one realize that he is indeed in a land of vastness where vast enterprises are undertaken and accomplished. And in such a country the incentive to individual effort and achievement is correspondingly large.

In Colorado, of mining fame, agriculture today outstrips the mines.

Many daughters of capable mothers is this especially true do not accept household responsibilities because they are neither expected nor allowed to do so.

In latitudes where the cotton plant is not killed by annual freezing it attains an age of several years. It bears freely, sometimes two crops in the long tropical season.

Dry farming has its place doubtless, but the hope of many sections of the west lies in irrigation. By it alone can a number of the states attain greatness agriculturally.

In the majority of cases it is the early hatched pullets—March or early April—that make the best winter layers. They begin laying in October and November and get the habit before the cold weather sets in.

The 1910 imports of silk into the United States totaled 25,000,000 pounds and were valued at $70,000,000. It is estimated that from this amount of silk the mills of the country will turn out products valued at $150,000,000.

Whole hearted appreciation of the service which those about us render, whether in business life or the home circle, doesn't cost a red cent, yet meets a longing which every one has and which money alone cannot satisfy.

If your liver is out of whack, instead of paying a fancy price for some booze stimulant and regulator try a sprig of green parsley now and then and tone your system up still further with a daily draft of clean, fresh buttermilk.

The Roosevelt dam on the Salt river, Arizona, to be dedicated by Mr. Roosevelt next March, is a mass of masonry 240 feet high, built at a cost of $6,000,000, which will retain the waters of a lake covering 17,000 acres. This water will be used to irrigate 200,000 acres, with an additional 40,000 acres to be supplied by pumping.

With hog prices at the present level and likely to continue the same or better for some time to come, it is a mighty shortsighted policy for the man who is in the pig raising business seriously not to provide his brood sows with proper shelter, which will keep them dry and comfortable. Tens of thousands of farmers are able to raise but three pigs per sow when they might raise six if they would provide the sows with proper shelter.

It is well to keep market facilities in mind in buying land in a new locality. We learned of an instance not long ago in which the purchaser failed to do this. The land bought was recommended by the agents as especially adapted to fruit raising when the tract being sold was all of eighty miles from a railroad. It makes one smile to think what apples, pears or peaches would look like after they had been "packed" over that distance. The pulp might be good for marmalade, but little else.

This winter season is just the time to let mother take that much thought of and long delayed visit to the "home folks." It will do her more good than may be imagined to get out of the old ruts and will prove the needed tonic, while the responsibility of the household is the very thing needful to develop the latent ability of Mary, who has no opportunity to show what she can do so long as mother is at home and "knows how to do it so much better," and mother's absence will show plainly to father and the boys what her presence means to them.

There are sections in northern Wisconsin where cut-over pine lands can be had at as low as $5 per acre, and for those who are looking for a home on the land they ought to be worth looking into. The soil is for the most part sandy, and while small grains do not thrive crops of early corn, potatoes, clover and fruits do well. The country is one in which dairying could be carried on with advantage and profit. Usually the land in question can be got for $1 per acre down, the balance in five years. The railroad lands in the same locality usually sell for $5.50 per acre and may be got on easy terms.

In view of the fact that it is an enterprise undertaken by a single state the New York barge canal bids fair to be one of the big transportation enterprises of the present generation. When completed the canal will have a length of 442 miles and will extend from the Hudson river at a point 125 miles from the sea to Tonawanda, near Buffalo, on Lake Erie, where the last stretch of the canal will have an elevation of 565 feet. The masonry structures will require 4,250,000 cubic yards of concrete and 113,000,000 cubic yards of earth and silt, while 11,000,000 cubic yards of rock will have to be moved before the canal is completed.

Many of the abandoned farms of New England are being bought up by Slavic immigrants, in some cases whole communities being settled by these people. While the native New Englander is inclined to be prejudiced against his foreign born neighbors, he cannot deny that they make honest, thrifty citizens. The Slavic farmer usually has a large family, and each member has his or her work to do. Even the mother brings her baby into the field. With so many hands working and no help to hire economic independence is assured. Another generation will see these people thoroughly Americanized and valuable citizens.

Arbitration is a whole lot cheaper than lawing and makes better neighbors.

The dairy barn should be kept well ventilated not only to insure the good health of the cows, but the sweetness and freedom from odor of the milk.

It is a pretty safe plan to keep an eye on a neighbor if the family dog hikes under the corncrib or back kitchen every time he puts in an appearance.

The worth of boy or girl is just as often due to the handicaps which they have to overcome as to the favorable conditions, or environment under which they may be reared.

If the nesting boxes are kept supplied with clean material there will be no need of washing the eggs before putting them down to keep—in fact, they will keep much better if no water touches them.

The trouble about every first class country school teacher is that some industrious young fellow of the neighborhood is likely to learn of her ability as a homemaker as soon as the director appreciates her worth as a pedagogue.

Those who have traveled through eastern Oregon and down the Columbia river have noticed with much interest the barriers erected along the track in many places to stop the shifting sands and keep them from blocking the track. Notwithstanding this precaution not infrequently trains have to stop until the sand drifts have been removed.

There is no enterprise along agricultural lines that can be set afoot in a community that will do more to contribute to its material wealth, contentment and prosperity than dairying. Fundamentally this is because it means the establishing of a system or type of farming which means soil replenishing instead of soil robbing and impoverishing.

Sago and tapioca are two food products used extensively in American cooking. The first is prepared from the starch secured from the pith of several species of East Indian palm trees. Tapioca is made by heating in a moist state the starch made from the root of the cassava or tapioca plant, which is a native of several South American countries.

Research work which has been conducted by the biological survey in the Blue Ridge apple district in Virginia shows that some twenty-five species of native birds prey upon the codling moth, and it is estimated that they destroy from 50 to 85 per cent of the hibernating pupae. This means that birds are a more effective means of keeping this pest in check than all the rest of their natural enemies combined.

An eastern florist is said to be getting remarkable egg returns by screening off a portion of one of his greenhouses and keeping the flock of hens there within view of the growing and blossoming flowers. The secret of his success, and there would seem to be no good reason to doubt it, lies in the fact that he has in large measure reproduced for the hens springtime conditions, which are very favorable to egg production.

More often than is the case life insurance should be viewed as a systematic and regular method of saving than as mere insurance against death. There are many men who take this view and who put practically all of their surplus earnings into insurance premiums. Payments must be made at regular intervals, are anticipated and a definite plan made to meet them. In the matter of being able to afford the carrying of life insurance it is more often true than not that the fellow who says he is too poor to carry insurance is the one whose family is in need of just such protection and who would be left destitute and unprovided for in case of his death.

Failure to use the Babcock test in the determining of the butter fat product of each member of the dairy herd not only prevents an effective elimination of the loafer, but also prevents adjusting the grain ration of the individual to her actual needs—that is, to the amount of butter fat produced. A feeding rule based on this test which is followed by many dairymen is to "give" each cow as many pounds of grain per day as she produces in butter fat per week. For instance, a cow giving twelve pounds of butter fat per week is given twice as much grain as the cow producing but six pounds. Yet how many dairymen continue in the same old rut, giving a cow so many quarts of feed, whether she is producing much or little butter, just because she is a cow and is giving some milk!

Shippers of the country and especially growers of perishable fruits will note with interest the outcome of a case brought by Dumas, a Columbia river valley fruit grower, against the Oregon Railroad and Navigation company for loss sustained because of a failure of the transportation company to provide cars at specified intervals as per terms of a special contract. In giving its ruling on the case the court—the United States court of appeals for the Ninth district—held that such contract was not invalid as discriminatory and contrary to public policy and that the carrier's inability to furnish cars at specified times, as agreed, owing to an unusually heavy traffic at the time they were demanded, constituted no defense to an action seeking to recover damages sustained because of such failure.

It is said to be the intention of the County commissioners to improve, and remodel the Courthouse in the early spring, in such a manner that it will meet all requirements of the County for many years to come. Though the building was not built for Court house purposes it can be readily and cheaply converted into a very good one, from the standpoint of both convenience and safety.

EAST AWAKES TO MINNE'S PROSPERITY.

The Christian Science Monitor, (Boston), in an headed editorial, "Prosperity in Minnesota", has this to say of the way Minnesota is forging ahead:

"Recent reports from Minnesota would seem to call for an answer to the question: What constitutes contentment? Taking a worldly view of things, Minnesota, it might be supposed, should be full of contentment. Prosperity smiles upon her people. We have tangible evidence of the fact that they are making money fast, and they are investing their surplus earnings judiciously. On the other hand there is reason to believe that Minnesota people are not wholly satisfied. Politically, they are inclined at times to be insurgent, although they have held themselves in on this score better than some of their neighbors. But they are restless with regard to certain existing conditions, especially the tariff, and they are strongly in favor of revision except, where it might effect the price of wheat.

"All this aside, the point is that whether political or economic conditions are satisfactory, Minnesota on her own showing is certainly doing very well. The number of her state banks at the close of last year was 696, an increase of forty-eight over the previous year. These institutions had resources amounting to $123,964,668.88, an increase of $17,266,787.11 in the preceding twelve months. This means, putting it in another way, that the state banks of Minnesota were nearly seventeen and a quarter millions stronger at the close of 1910 than they were at the year's beginning. Minnesota state banks are mainly small town institutions, belonging to the people. Deposits of the banks increased by $12,000,000 during the year. We are told by the St. Paul Pioneer Press which must be regarded as an authority on the subject, that this increase represents very largely the balances of those who have opened new accounts and those who have paid off their debts and are just beginning to get into the creditor class. "And", adds the Press, "the present rate of improvement indicates that not many years will elapse before every thirfty Minnesotan should have a generous supply of cash".

"This is a cheerful forecast, and it is not unwarranted. It may be applied with equal force to the Dakotas. It is applicable, indeed, to the entire West. To attempt to assign or to sum up causes now would be hazardous, but it might be profitable to bear the whole matter in memory so that we may look back at it dispassionately, say, five years hence."

ROUGHAGE FOR 1911.

Owing to the 1910 drought, lots of tame grass seeded in the spring failed to get started. This will leave many farms a little short for roughage. Many letters are coming to the Experiment Station regarding the advisability of sowing cow peas, field peas and other crops that will provide protein in place of the clover hay that has been lost. Experience at University Farm does not indicate the advisability of sowing very much of these crops. Soy beans and cow peas make excellent growth here, but our climatic conditions are usually unfavorable for curing them. The stems are very heavy and succulent, and it is exceedingly difficult to get them well cured for hay. The same trouble has been experienced in handling field peas, though they are not as troublesome as the soy beans and cow peas, especially if they are sown together with some grain-crop like oats. However, oats and peas together make a rather bulky form of hay, which is quite difficult to cure, especially from the fact that it is practically impossible to so cock it in the field that it will shed water.

Another serious disadvantage in growing peas very extensively for roughage is the cost of the seed. It requires from two to three bushels per acre for a fairly good stand, and the seed usually costs about $1.50 per bushel.

We think that millet and fodder corn should be used very largely, this coming season, to supply the roughage. Fodder corn can be grown at a cost of about $3.50 per ton, and is worth $6 per ton for feeding when bran is worth $20 per ton. With fodder corn and millet as the roughage portion of a ration, and bran, shorts and oil meal as the grain portion, a very well-balanced ration is secured, and one that is not unreasonably expensive. Of course, if clover hay can be introduced, the ration could be cheapened; but since we haven't clover hay, the problem is to provide feed next winter at the least possible cost; and considering the extra cost and uncertainty of annual legumes for roughage-production in this state, it would seem safer to at least provide plenty of fodder corn and millet, and depend on mill-feeds for the necessary protein.—A. D. Wilson, Extension Division, University Farm.

One More Warning.

An Otter Tail county man wishing to divide his joys and sorrows with some female who was willing to accept a portion of his, not having enough of her own, persumably, advertised for a wife and thereby fell into the hands of a Milwaukee woman. His ardent wooing cost him the munificent sum of $16 and a gold ring, price not stated. Possessed of his affections and the goods above named, she refused to yield on his insistent demand to become his very ownie own, also refusing to return the ring or the plunks.

Referring to this case, the Fergus Falls Journal says: "The plan of sending away for wives is a good deal like sending away for goods. They are not always as the catalogue represents them and after you have paid the freight and have sent your money you can't help yourself. By trading and marrying at home you have a chance to see what you are getting before you pay your money.

We presume that the reason men send away for wives is the same as why people send away for goods. They don't know that they can be had at home. It will pay to advertise.—Little Falls Transcript.

THE TAX LIST

The following is a list of personal property taxes as they will be paid this month by people of Pennington county for State, School, City, Village or town and road tax as levied by Red Lake County. A county tax of 8 mills will no doubt be levied by the commissioners of Pennington county and thus the figures below will only represent a part of your taxes for this year. The entire tax in both counties will, however, not be quite as great as it would have been on the same property had the county not been divided:

Washington, Feb. 15—President Taft today signed the bill designating San Francisco as the city in which will be held in 1915 the exposition signalizing the opening of the Panama canal. With a gold pen made of precious metal mined in the state of California and in the presence of the two senators and a number of the representatives from that state, the president attached his signature to the engrossed bill. Mr. Taft presented the pen to one of the members of the party, and it will be placed on exhibition at the exposition.

County Commissioner Malberg came in from Excel on Tuesday. He informed us that his town is soon to put in the first permanent bridge ever constructed in Marshall county. There will not be a single piece of wood in the bridge, which is to be built wholly of stone, steel and concrete. It will cross Thief River between sections three and four in the "strip" on the state road running north from Thief River Falls and will cost about $2,500. The town voted $300 for its erection, the county board appropriated $700 and several hundred dollars were donated by leading citizens of the town. No difficulty is expected in regard to raising the balance of the two-thirds of the bridge's cost, the other third of which will be borne by the state.—Warren Register.

Christopher Columbus.

Christopher Columbus, of Genoa, Italy, with his three vessels, the Santa Maria, Pinta and Nina, with which he made the voyage when he discovered America, was laying outside of Warroad harbor, Wednesday, unable to get in on account of the ice being about two feet thick. At least the vessels were outside the harbor and Christopher himself was very busy chopping the ice out so as to get the vessels in.

That was the story told to the village marshal, Mr. Dufault, by a well-dressed stranger, who was industriously chopping ice in the harbor, Wednesday afternoon. It took the marshal some little time to figure out whether the fellow was joshing or not, but as he continued his harbor-clearing project with great enthusiasm Dufault suggested that he get some help. This met with favor and he came along up town and wanted to hire a hundred men to assist him in the ice chopping business.

He is now under the care of the marshal and unless someone comes and claims him, he will go before the insanity board for examination.

He registered at one of the hotels as J. S. Lane, Beaudette, and appears to be a man of education and intelligence. The presence of school report cards in his effects would indicate that he is a teacher. His mind seems to be a blank as to his past and he maintains that he is the man, who discovered America and that he must get the harbor cleared of ice.—Warroad Plaindealer.

Editors of State Meet.

The Minnesota Editorial Association met at St. Paul Thursday and Friday of last week, this being the forty-fifth annual meeting.

The following officers were elected:

President, S. Y. Gordon, the Tribune, Brown's Valley; first vice president, F. E. Hadley, the Enterprise, Winnebago; second vice-president, W. F. Mahler, the Advance, Springfield; third vice-president, R. P. Chase, the Herald, Anoka; secretary, C. P. Stine, St. Paul; treasurer, D. Ramaley, St. Paul, and an executive committee composed of C. C. Whitney, the News Messenger, Marshall; F. J. Meyst, the Northwestern Newspaper Union, Minneapolis, and W. E. Easton, the Gazette, Stillwater.

Among the resolutions proposed for adoption were the following:

A resolution advocating the good roads legislation proposed by R. C. Dunn of Princeton and the consolidation of rural schools as provided for in the Holmberg bill.

A resolution urging the legislature to take such action as will prevent railroad companies from making discriminations in rates and to compel them to make tariffs more nearly proportionate for the distance hauled.

The committee on resolutions also went on record as declaring that there can be no doubt that much injustice is done the smaller towns and cities by discrimination as railroad freight rates in favor of the large cities that force all manufacturing companies to locate in the cities at the expense of the smaller towns.

Articles of Incorporation

We the undersigned do hereby associate ourselves together for the purpose of becoming incorporated under Chapter 58 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota for 1905, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and to that end do sign and adopt these Articles of Incorporation.

Art. I.

The name of this corporation shall be Tessum, Temanson Company, and its principal place of business shall be at Thief River Falls, in the County of Pennington and state of Minnesota, with branches at other points within the state.

Art. II.

The general nature of the business of such corporation shall be the buying, selling, receiving, storing and forwarding of all kinds of grain, flour, feed, seeds, twine, implements and farm machinery, salt and cement, coal and wood, and building material of every description, as well as all kinds of farm supplies; to purchase, erect, maintain and control warehouses and elevators for the storage of wheat and other cereals and products thereof; to act in the capacity of a general commission merchant; to purchase and retail, sell, convey, lease, mortgage, encumber or improve such real estate, buildings and personal property as the business of the corporation may require within the state of Minnesota.

Art. III.

The amount of Capital Stock of such corporation shall be Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000) and shall be divided into Two hundred shares (200) of the par value of One Hundred Dollars ($100) each, but such corporation shall be authorized to commence business when stock to the amount of One Hundred shares shall have been subscribed.

Art. IV.

The indebtness of the said corporation shall at no time exceed the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000)

Art. V.

The government of this corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of directors composed of not less than three members who must be stockholders of the corporation, from whom shall be selected a President, vice President and a Secretary-Treasurer; no person shall be entitled to hold more than one office at the same time. The first board of directors of the corporation shall be Oluf Tessum, Gilbert K. Temanson and Teman Temanson who shall hold office until the first annual meeting of the corporation to be held on the first Monday of March, and the annual meeting shall be held on said day each and every year afterwards, immediately after the election of directors, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the directors shall meet and elect from their number a President, a vice President, and a Secretary-Treasurer, who shall hold office for the ensuing year, and transact such other business as to them seem fit. The directors and officers of this corporation shall hold their respective offices until their successors have been duly elected and qualified. Vacancies on the board of directors shall be filled by the remaining directors for the unexpired term. The board of directors shall have full power to make and adopt such rules and regulations as they may consider necessary from time to time.

Art. VI.

Said corporation shall commence on the First day of March, A. D. 1911, and shall continue for a period of twenty years.

Art. VII.

The names and places of residence of the persons forming this association for incorporation are as follows:

Oluf Tessum, Thief River Falls, Minnesota.
Gilbert K. Temanson, Crookston, Minnesota.
Teman Temanson, Crookston, Minnesota.

THIEF RIVER FALLS

The worst part of many a disagreeable job that we look forward to is getting started. From this point on it is often quite easy sailing.

Chemical analysis shows that in an average fifty bushel corn crop there is removed from the land $8.30 worth of fertilizer in the grain, $7 in the leaves and stalks and about 25 cents' worth in the shape of cobs.

The drought of the past season in the middle western states has worked much hardship to stock raisers, many of whom on account of their wells going dry have had to haul water for their stock in below zero weather from neighboring streams or lakes.

The thriftiest and strongest chicks will usually be got from hens that have not been forced in the matter of egg production prior to the laying of the eggs used for hatching purposes. Breeders of pure bred fowls realize this fact and use for breeders hens that have not been laying during the winter season.

Families that had the forethought last summer and fall to provide supplies of canned fruit, sweet corn, kraut and the like have been getting more than face value out of them during the past few weeks. They have furnished a variety to the ration that has not only been appetizing, but very wholesome.

The best sweetener of sour or acid soils is lime in some form, preferably finely ground raw stone. This can be got at about $1 per ton at shipping point and should be ordered in carlots by several farmers of the same locality who are in need of it. Secured in this way, transportation charges can be reduced a half or more.

Where one is located in the vicinity of a good horse market and his tastes incline in that direction there is good money to be made by purchasing raw, thin and unbroken horses, fattening them, breaking them and finishing them for market. And it is often surprising what a few months of this kind will do for a decidedly unpromising piece of horseflesh.

The other day at Fort Worth, Tex., the market was topped by a car of hogs which were fattened largely on rice, and the fact was one that roused much interest on the part of both hog raisers and buyers. In the rice country along the coast cracked rice and what is known as rice polish, a by-product of rice milling, have long been a drug on the market, and, while their food value as a hog ration has not been completely demonstrated, it has been proved that when fed in connection with corn they make an economical fattening ration.

In spite of the efforts of the agricultural department at Washington to arouse interest among farmers in the production and use of denatured alcohol, practically nothing has been attained along the line desired. Dr Wiley, who has charge of the denatured alcohol experimental work, says that a still costing $2,500 would convert into alcohol the products of a territory six miles square and that the cost of production per gallon would be much cheaper in a plant of this size than in one considerably smaller. In Germany and France the smaller individual stills have been in profitable use for the past 250 years.

The other day in passing through eastern Washington the writer noticed what seemed to be a sort of dust storm on the landscape at some distance, the cause of the disturbance not being in evidence. As the train advanced and a view was had from a different angle a "dry" farmer, harrowing with a six horse outfit, proved to be the kicker up of the big cloud of dust. To the farmer used to pastures and roadsides clad in blue grass and tilled soil held firmly down by surface moisture the dry farming condition referred to would be strange and distasteful perhaps, but to offset the drawbacks of dust and summer drought are ideal ripening and harvesting conditions—no hail, no smut, no rust, no floods.

That prepotency is quite as largely an individual matter as of breeding, family and pedigree is nicely shown in some observations which Professor Eckles has made at the Missouri Agricultural college. He found that one of five Jersey bulls in the college herd raised the average annual production of his daughters above their mothers 2,545 pounds of milk and 110 pounds of butter fat, while the daughters of another bull averaged only five pounds more than their mothers. The results in these two instances are striking, and the more so because the bull which made the above exceptional showing was sired by the second whose daughters showed so little improvement over their dams.

A bright young farmer whom the writer ran across a few days ago wished to get a start in the pure bred horse business. It happened to be Percherons, but might have been any other desirable breed suited to a given purpose. He attended a sale of blooded horses at some distance from his home and picked up one of the brood mares offered. The mare is in foal, and this means that in the spring he will have two blooded horses instead of one, and if the youngster is a filly it will mean two producers, while if the foal is of the male persuasion and possesses individuality and merit the animal will probably be worth even more. This method of getting a start is an excellent one not only in the case of horses, but also for cattle, sheep and hogs.

Firm heads of cabbage which are crisp and tender, chopped and served raw or cooked and dressed with milk, make a very acceptable substitute for the variety of vegetables which can be got from the garden during the summer season.

While the chances are that if the seed corn is found spoiled before planting time the damage has already been done, it is just as well to postpone the careful and systematic testing of the seed until some three or four weeks, when the likelihood of subsequent deterioration will be reduced to a minimum.

Cornstalks left to bleach and whiten in the field have a fodder value of from 50 cents to $1 per acre. Put into the silo at the proper time they are worth $11. It is because of the somewhat tardy recognition of this fact that so many farmers put in silos last season and that a good many more will install them the coming year.

Any reader of these notes who may be planning to raise celery on a more extensive scale than needed for family use should have for ready reference a bulletin issued not long since by the agricultural department at Washington under the caption "Farmers' Bulletin No. 133 on Celery Growing." The subject is handled in a direct and practical way, and the most successful methods at present in use by market gardeners are explained in detail.

A friend has a flock of forty fine, thrifty looking hens that are laying about two eggs a day when they ought to be producing two dozen. While we have not inquired into the cause, we rather think the trouble is in the feed and because of a lack of exercise. If instead of the largely corn diet tankage and bran or skim milk were substituted and the small grain fed was scattered in straw so that the hens would have to dig it out it is a fair guess that there would be a whole lot more doing in the egg line.

Cotton, flax and wheat are soil robbers. On this account a rotation of the crops with some legume is necessary to a maintenance of soil fertility. As a result of the adoption of such a system of rotation many an exhausted cotton plantation in Dixieland that was producing a scant one-third of a bale per acre is now yielding a bale and a half. There has been not only this gain, but the growing of other crops and the raising of more live stock have made the section in which the rotation is practiced more independent and self sustaining.

If you have been the victim of an out and out misrepresentation and lost good money on some land promotion scheme and want to get even just drop a few lines to the postoffice department at Washington, narrating the main features of the swindle and giving the name of the firm that perpetrated it, together with a sample of the literature which it sent out. This is sufficient evidence, and the chances are that the firm will be promptly rounded up, for the department has been gathering in a whole lot of fakers of this kind of late—been giving 'em striped clothes and a diet of bread and water with slim trimmings.

There is a splendid opportunity in many fruit growing valleys of the west for a limited class of men who have no taste for fruit growing, but who would prefer dairying, poultry or the growing of alfalfa and the raising of horses. Owing to the almost exclusive use of the land in these valleys for orchard purposes the products mentioned are not only at a high price now, but bid fair to go still higher. Land lying several miles from market centers could be got at a reasonable figure, and, while the haul for some of the products might be long, there would not be injury in transit, as in the case of tender and soft skinned fruits.

Because of a new interest that is from time to time manifested along this or that line of agricultural production many fad contrivances are put on the market, but this charge cannot be laid against the seed corn grader. One of these machines worthy of the name not only eliminates shrunken, broken and misshapen kernels, but separates good kernels of different shapes into grades by themselves so that they can be planted separately, with plates that will give the desired stand. In many instances the past season where these grades were used growers estimated that their yield of corn was increased from eight to twelve bushels per acre.

Not long ago it was stated in some quarters that only those ears of corn should be selected for seed in which the kernels cover the tip as fully as possible, and this theory is followed quite closely today in the selection of seed. Recently, however, one authority of the corn plant expresses the opinion that an ear that is not filled within an inch or so of the tip means that the plant was from seed of exceptional vigor and laid large plans for corn production, but that the conditions of soil fertility, moisture or both were such that the plant was not able to bring these plans to completion. This theory would seem to have considerable to commend it. In any case its truth can be easily demonstrated by any corn grower if he will plant seed from the two types of ears in rows side by side under the same conditions of soil.

DEADLY MINE GASES.

Their Action Upon the Flame of the Safety Lamp.

The safety lamp, a heavy metal lantern shaped object with a circular globe of heavy plate glass, is the only light other than electricity that can be safely carried into a gaseous mine. The lamps are lit before they are taken into the mine and, in addition, are securely locked, that no accident or ignorant intention may expose the open flame to the gases of the mine. Over a small sooty yellow flame which gives a light less bright than that of an ordinary candle are two wire gauze cones fitting snugly inside the heavy globe, and it is through these cones that the flame draws the air which supports it. The presence of black damp, or carbon dioxide, can easily be detected, if not by its odor, by the action of the flame, which grows dim and, if the black damp exists in any quantity, is finally extinguished. White damp, the highly explosive gas which is most feared, has, on the other hand, a totally different effect. In the presence of this gas the flame of the safety lamp becomes pointed, and as the gas grows stronger the flame seems to separate from the wick and an almost invisible blue cone forms beneath it. If the miner continues to advance into the white damp he will pass through a line in which there are nine parts of air to one part gas (the explosive mixture), and the lamp will instantly register this explosive condition by a sudden crackling inside the gauze and the extinguishing of the flame. Were it an open lamp the explosion ignited by the flame would sweep throughout the entire workings, carrying death and destruction before it, but by the construction of the safety lamp the explosion confines itself to the limited area within the gauze cones, and unless the lamp is moved suddenly and the flame is dragged through the gauze at the instant that the explosion occurs within the globe it will not extend beyond the gauze.—Atlantic.

The actual loss in the handling of one "loafer" in the dairy herd in the course of a year will often more than pay for a Babcock milk tester, which can be bought at between $4 and $5.

While many folks lay great store by luck, so called, it is always well to reduce the operation of this uncertain factor to a minimum, which can be done by the use of one's wits, good judgment and careful planning.

While there is some conflict in aim in the attempt to secure a type of cattle having beef and dairy capacity in marked degree, there is in the case of sheep no difficulty in the raising of a type which will do well in the line of both wool and mutton. General thriftiness and vigor are the prime essentials in the case of both meat and wool.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

MESSAGE ON INDIAN "LID"

President Says He Has Set Aside Portions of Several Treaties and Asks Changes in Legislation.

President Taft, in a special message to congress on the Minnesota Indian liquor question, urged legislation withdrawing government control of the sale of liquor from all of the territory covered by the Indian treaties except those portions in which a considerable number of Indians still reside as wards of the government.

The message relates to three separate treaties. One with the Winnebago Indians is to be entirely abrogated as to the liquor provisions. This affects the territory north of St. Peter and west of the Mississippi river, estimated to contain about 897,900 acres

In the case of the treaties with the Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi lands the federal control of the sale of liquor is restricted to a comparatively small territory.

The president also issued orders in those instances where the treaties authorize the president to repeal or modify the control of liquor.

The executive order of President Taft relinquishes all of the territory covered by the treaty of 1848 from the control of the government and withdraws government control of the sale of liquor on all except certain specified portions of the territory covered by the treaties of 1851, 1854 and 1863.

STATE OFFICIAL CRITICISED

Rebuked by Vote of Minnesota House of Representatives.

Julius A. Schmahl, secretary of state, was rebuked by the state house of representatives by a vote of 33 to 81. The vote followed an hour and a half of discussion on the reports of the committee on public accounts, dealing with the publication of the proposed amendments to the state constitution. There were two reports, agreeing to facts but differing as to recommendations. The majority found that the law had been violated and called for its strict enforcement. The house reduced the compensation said to be due the country papers publishing the amendments from $100 to $80.

Election of United States senators by direct vote of the people would be the practical result of the adoption of the Oregon system in Minnesota. A bill embodying this system was recommended to pass by the house committee on elections.

By a recorded vote of 11 to 6 the senate committee on railroads decided to send the Cashman distance tariff bill out with a favorable recommendation.

S. J. Froshaug won in the contest instituted against him by Ray G. Farrington and was declared entitled to the senate seat he holds. The vote stood 31 to 30 in his favor.

EDITORS ELECT OFFICERS

Lieutenant Governor Gordon Head of Minnesota Scribes.

The State Editorial association, in session at St. Paul, elected the following officers:

President, S. Y. Gordon, Browns Valley Tribune; first vice president, F. E. Hadley, Winnebago Enterprise; second vice president, W. F. Mahler, Springfield Advance; third vice president, R. P. Chase, Anoka Herald; secretary, C. P. Stine, St. Paul; treasurer, D. Ramaley, St. Paul; executive committee, C. C. Whitney, Marshall News-Messenger; F. J. Meyst, Northwestern Newspaper Union, Minneapolis, and W. E. Easton, Stillwater Gazette.

The resolutions adopted declare for the formation of district editorial associations; conservation of natural resources and good roads; consolidation of rural schools and extension of agricultural high schools; native material in construction of public buildings; opposition to railroad rate discrimination against smaller towns in favor of larger centers.

HUSBAND HELD FOR CRIME

Verdict of Coroner's Jury in Minnesota Murder Case.

Based on the story of Mrs. Sivert Simpson a verdict was returned by the coroner's jury at Crookston to the effect that Theodore A. Nelson came to his death from a bullet wound from a revolver in the hands of Sivert Simpson, while in the bedroom of Mrs. Simpson at 1 o'clock in the morning.

Killed by Electric Current.

An electric current passing through an extension light cord which he held in his hand killed William F. Moritz, a pipefitter, in the basement of the Northern Heating and Electric company's plant at St. Paul. The wire was said to have carried only 110 volts. Physicians say so small a current could hardly have caused death, and believe the lighting circuit must have been accidentally connected with a high tension wire.

END CAME UNEXPECTEDLY

Supreme Court Justice Jaggard Dies in Bermuda.

Justice Edwin A. Jaggard of the state supreme court died of heart failure in Bermuda, where he went shortly after the first of the year for his health. Letters lately received from him by friends in this city spoke encouragingly of his condition and the announcement of his death comes as a shock to those who knew him.

Justice Jaggard's departure for Bermuda followed a general breakdown, brought on by a severe affliction of the eyes. He had been under the care of physicians for some time and it was thought his condition was improving. An attack of ptomaine poisoning weakened him to such an extent that on the advice of his physician he determined to go to the Bermudas for a month or two.

Justice Jaggard was one of the most lovable men who ever lived in St. Paul. He was always courteous to every one who approached him, though possessing a quiet dignity which befitted one in his position. He was fifty-one years of age and was a native of Pennsylvania.

FATHER AND SON KILLED

Peter Gludt and His Boy Electrocuted at Lake City, Minn.

Peter Gludt, a business man of Lake City, and his son Elmer were electrocuted on a street in that city.

An electric wire broke near their home and fell into the street. It became entangled with telephone wires and young Gludt, who was a lineman employed by the telephone company, went out to fix it. As soon as he touched the wires he received a shock and fell back as though dead. His father saw his plight and immediately went to his rescue.

The older man, when he took hold of the body of his son, was also struck by the electric current and immediately became helpless. The wife and mother then hurried to the scene and managed to detach the bodies from the burning wires. She was not injured. Both men died.

The older Gludt was fifty-five years of age and is survived by his wife and two sons. Elmer, the dead boy, was twenty.

COUNTY OPTION LOSES AGAIN

Minnesota Senate Kills Bill by Decisive Vote.

By a vote of 37 to 24 county option was defeated in the senate following a debate which lasted less than two hours.

Former Justice T. D. O'Brien's substitute for the two employers' liability and workingmen's compensation bills now before the senate was introduced by Senators J. E. Haycraft and M. J. McGrath. A similar bill was introduced Friday in the house. It abolishes common law defenses to personal injury suits, but contains no schedule of compensations.

An agricultural school bill, providing twenty new agricultural high schools in addition to the ten provided by the Putnam act of two years ago, was agreed upon by the house committee on agricultural schools. This will make a total of thirty of these schools.

IN COURT FOR CONTEMPT

St. Paul Member of the Minnesota Legislature.

State Representative John D. O'Brien of St. Paul and his attorney, David F. Peebles, were before Judge Lewis of the Ramsey county district court to answer a charge of contempt of court against Dr. O'Brien. After hearing the proposition argued Judge Lewis took the matter under consideration.

Dr. O'Brien has brought suit for divorce, alleging his wife held him a prisoner for six hours in a locked room, Mrs. O'Brien holding the key. Judge Bunn issued an order Jan. 28 directing the lawmaker to pay his wife $50 a month for her living expenses and $100 attorney's fees during the pendency of the action. Dr. O'Brien refused to obey the order and he was cited for criminal contempt.

ALLEGES UNDUE INFLUENCE

Affidavit by Grand Juror Concerns St. Paul Pastor.

Rev. Dr. Samuel G. Smith, pastor of the People's church of St. Paul, is accused of attempting to influence a member of the grand jury on a matter pending before that body in an affidavit signed by Thomas L. Wann, a member of the grand jury.

Mr. Wann swears that Dr. Smith attempted to influence him to secure a "no bill" as to Dr. Eugene Hubbell, a member of Dr. Smith's congregation, on the charge of having performed a criminal operation on Rose R[illegible], from the alleged effect of which the young woman died at the city hospital.

ATTEMPT AT MURDER FAILS

Minnesotan Wounds Wife and Then Commits Suicide.

Christian Gilbert, aged sixty-three, of Oxford, Isanti county, shot and wounded his wife in the ear and right hand and later shot himself in the right breast, dying instantly.

Gilbert approached his wife with the remark, "Now you must die," and seized her by the neck at the same time shooting off a portion of her right ear. She grabbed him by the arm and he shot again, the bullet hitting her in the hand. Both wounds are slight.

George Jarman returned last Friday morning from an extended trip of about five weeks duration, which time he has spent in West Baden, Indiana, points in Kentucky and Missouri. George states that the climate down in that section is very mild at this time of the year and that rarely on any occasion did he find it necessary to wear an overcoat. He reports the trip as a most enjoyable one and that he feels a whole lot better as a result.

Local Boys Beaten.

The Crookston High School basket ball team had it all their own way in their game with the local high school quintet at the Lincoln High School gymnasium last Saturday evening, and came out victorious by a score of 42 to 19.

While we have a strong team this year, we will have to admit, (altho we hate to) that Crookston has a good deal stronger one. The Crookston boys were evenly matched and showed remarkable skill and team work.

It seemed at times to the ordinary spectator that the visitors were allowed more freedom in shooting baskets than they should have had, but as this is the first contest our boys have played this season they are deserving of credit for putting up as good a game as they did, and with a few more games we prophesy for them a good record.

Gordon the Winner.

In the catch-as-can wrestling contest at the Auditorium last Friday evening John Gordon, the police-wrestler of Minneapolis, proved victorious over his opponent Geo. W. Turner, the husky South Dakotan.

The first fall was captured by Turner; the second two going to Gordon. The last fall was secured by the toe-hold after but a short time of wrestling.

This is reported by many to have been the best match pulled off in this city.

Wm. Kline scored a victory over his opponent, Pat Mahon, in the preliminary match.

Card of Thanks.

To our many friends and neighbors who assisted us in many ways during the long illness of our departed husband and father, Charles A. Robbecke, we tender our most sincere and heartfelt thanks and especially so to the Rev. J. M. Smith, the brothers of orders of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen, Masonic and other fraternal societies and friends who tendered us so many beautiful tributes of sympathy and so kindly assisted us in laying away our Beloved to rest.

Mrs. Charles A. Robbecke & family.

Schools Closed For Holiday.

Yesterday being the 179th anniversary of the birth of George Washington, and a legal holiday, it was observed in the city by the closing of the schools, and banks. The public schools were closed all day as is their custom in commemoration of the birth of the Father of This Country. The postoffice as usual observed holiday hours, all of the stores of the city kept open, however, as usual. In general outside of the closing of the banks business was not suspended on that day.

Tribute of Respect to Chas. A. Robbecke.

To Ogahmah Camp No. 3101, Modern Woodmen of America:

We, the eulogium committee, appointed to prepare a tribute of respect to our departed Neighbor, Charles A. Robbecke, to be presented to his widow and engrossed upon the Records of this Society, have the honor to report the following:

The members of Ogahmah Camp No. 3101 of the Modern Woodmen of America offer these words of consolation to the widow and children of our departed Neighbor, Charles A. Robbecke.

Charles A. Robbecke was a charter member of our Camp and was one of us for more than fifteen years. We knew him as a loving husband, a kind and indulgent father, whose uppermost thought was always for the welfare of his family. He was honorable in his dealings with all mankind; and never turned a deserving fellow man from his door.

We shall miss him at our Camp Fire; no longer shall we hear the sweet accents of love that flowed from his lips, but we may profit by his words of wisdom; and his cheerful face will be cherished in our memories forever.

He who was dearest of all on earth to you and beloved by us has changed his earthly abode for one to which he will one day welcome you and us.

Like swallows we wander from home to home—
We are birds of passage at best—
In many a spot we have dwelt awhile,
We have built us many a nest.
But the heart of the Father will touch our hearts,
He will speak to us soft and low,
We shall follow the Voice to the better land,
And its bliss and its Beauty know."

There is no death. The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And bright in Heaven's jewelled crown
They shine forever more.

There is no death. The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

There is no death. The forest leaves
Convert to life the viewless air;
The rocks disorganize to feed
The hungry moss they bear.

There is no death. An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved ones away;
And then we call them "dead."

Born unto that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them the same—
EXCEPT their sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—THERE ARE NO DEAD

The loved ones of a departed Neighbor may always come to the great Order of Woodcraft with an assurance of a kind and neighborly greeting. The cause of your grief brings sorrow to our hearts; we mourn with you the temporary separation from one whose smile no longer greets us.

Respectfully submitted.

Louis Lonson,
Andrew Smith,

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

The assessed value of the land of the state has grown from $4.39 an acre in 1870 to $15.28 in 1910. This is shown in an abstract of the valuation and taxes paid by each county in the state for all purposes. The total value of personal property in the state, according to the returns by the taxing officials, was $181,419,000 in 1910 and the total assessed valuation of all property in the state was slightly over $1,000,000,000.

A large amount of timber damaged by the forest fires of last summer is being cut and shipped. Already some 50,000,000 feet have been cut in the vicinity of Mesabe, south of Tower, and a cut of 100,000,000 feet is expected before the season closes. It is probable that not half of the damaged timber will be cut this season.

That the state constitution conflicts with federal statutes and that the state has illegally been using the proceeds of the sale of swamp lands granted it by the federal government for school purposes is the charge made by attorneys retained by the Northern Minnesota Development association.

The village of Randall, ten miles north of Little Falls, has been put under quarantine in so far as holding any public gatherings are concerned. Schools have been closed and none of the churches are allowed to hold services, owing to an epidemic of scarlet fever.

Fred N. Dickson, member of the St. Paul board of police commissioners and Mayor Keller's law partner, has been named by Governor Eberhart to fill the vacancy on the Ramsey county district bench created by the elevation of Judge Bunn to the supreme court.

More babies were born in Minneapolis in January, according to city health department reports, than during any other month in the history of the city. The total number of births reported in January was 565, which includes three pair of twins.

Judge George L. Bunn of St. Paul has been appointed a member of the state supreme court to succeed the late Judge Edwin A. Jaggard. Judge Bunn is a Democrat and has been on the bench in Ramsey county for a number of years.

Peter A. Nelson of Red Wing has been elected grand master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for Minnesota.

Postmaster Edward Yanish of St. Paul has been nominated by President Taft for another four-year term.

Iron ore has been discovered on White Earth reservation.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

At a special term of district court at Glencoe called by Judge Morrison to consider the confession of Joseph Fimon, who admitted the killing of Mrs. Fajman at the Fajman farm home near Silver Lake on the night of Dec. 4, Fimon was indicted, pleaded guilty and was sentenced by Judge Morrison to imprisonment for life.

The Mankato police broke into Mathias Stoffel's house at the request of his neighbors, who had not seen him for several days, and found him dead in bed. He was over seventy years old and since the death of his wife a year ago he had lived alone.

A. W. Cameron, lodger at the home of Mrs. Mattie L. Fay of Minneapolis, was probably fatally shot by a burglar who entered his room. The shooting occurred when Cameron was aroused from sleep by the prowler. He started up in bed and was shot.

Joseph Petrience, thirty-five years old, is dead at St. Paul as the result of injuries received when he fell from the third story of the Finch, Van Slyck & McConville building. Petrience was washing windows when he lost his balance and fell.

Charles Stolberg, for twelve years register of deeds of Carlton county, shot and killed himself about half a mile north of Carlton, presumably while suffering from the effects of a severe attack of grip. He was fifty-four years old.

Carl Kienast, aged five years, son of Mrs. Regina Kienast, telephone operator at St. Joseph, Stearns county, was instantly killed when he was run over by a bus. The child's skull was crushed.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

Mrs. Cynthia Richmond is dead at Fergus Falls at the age of eighty-six years. She was born in New York and was one of the earliest settlers of Minnesota. She and her [illegible] settled near Richmond, Stearns county, at the time of the great [illegible] in 1862. The Indians [illegible] their home and the family had a narrow escape from death.

Samuel [illegible], banker and pioneer citizen of Minneapolis, is dead. He was [illegible] years old. Mr. [illegible] was [illegible] of the Northwestern [illegible] and the Union [illegible].

Mrs. [illegible], widow of the late [illegible], farmer at [illegible] county, Minnesota, is dead at St. Paul.

[illegible] eighty-two years old, a resident of Minneapolis for more than half a century, is dead.

School Notes.

Wednesday being a legal holiday, there was no school held on that date.

The Crookston basket ball team defeated the local players last Saturday evening by reason of their superior basket throwing. The Thief River boys could get the ball near the basket often enough, but failed to complete the trick a sufficient number of times to win.

Everything is ready for the dedication of the Lincoln building and the event will prove of more than ordinary interest and importance. Invitations have been issued to all boards of education, teachers and principals and other persons in the northwestern part of the state who are interested in educational work.

Miss Twinam visited the Alexandria schools last Friday. This town is one of the favored ten high school in the state which is presenting special work and which received special aid for same. A bill adding fifteen more high schools to this list was presented in the legislature last week and recommended to pass. This is likely where this city will score again, as Thief River Falls has provided for all this special work and has been carrying it on without any assistance from the state for some time. The last special department was added to the local school this year and the chances of being made one of the fortunate fifteen are more than ordinarily promising.

Next Monday is visiting day in the Thief River schools, particularly at the new Lincoln building. No one in the city should miss examining this splendid building some time during the day.

The Senior class will entertain the Juniors at the Antlers Club rooms next Friday evening. This is an annual event and will be an interesting affair.

A meeting of the mothers and other ladies in the city interested in educational work will be held at the Lincoln assembly room on Thursday afternoon, March 2nd at 3:45. The purpose of the meeting is to perfect some form of organization for the whole city or for the ward schools, whereby the school authorities will the more easily secure the co-operation of the parents in school affairs. Invitations will be sent to all homes by the children.

BIG BENEFIT SOCIAL.

The last of the series of Card parties for the benefit of St. Bernard's church was given at the Evelyn Hotel last Tuesday evening by Mesdames Barns, BonDurand and Mrs. Barnter and about 160 guests were present. The evening was most enjoyably spent in playing cards, there being twenty-six tables.

Music was furnished by the City orchestra and a 11 o'clock lunch was served. A ladies' and men's prize was awarded to the persons winning the most games: Mrs. Frank Effenger capturing the ladies' prize by winning eleven straight games; Leonard Peterson and Howard Gessell taking the lead for the men's prize by capturing nine games each. By getting the largest card in a draw Mr Peterson won the prize.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS
VOL. XXVIII | THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1911 | NUMBER 10

THE DEDICATION OF LINCOLN H. S.

Marks The Biggest Event On Record In City's History.

What was undoubtedly the biggest event ever recorded in this city's history was the dedication of the new industrial high school building in this city which occurred last Monday. The interest that was manifested in this event by the citizens and a great number of outside guests who were present to participate in the affair is unequaled.

The opening of the dedicatory program was held in the Lincoln high school in the afternoon at 3 o'clock and was opened by a selection by the orchestra and a prayer by Rev. Lasseson.

Dr. G. A. Penney, secretary of the board of education, read a brief synopsis of the history of School District No. 18, which showed a remarkable growth since its organization some 25 or 26 years ago.

Lars Backe, president of the board of education, made the presentation address which was responded to by Judge Bishop in behalf of the citizens in their acceptance of the building.

An eloquent address was delivered by C. G. Schulz, state superintendent of schools, in which he was high in his praises about the splendid building this board had deemed necessary to erect and the co-operation they had received in bringing these results about. He voiced the sentiment when he stated that with its rapid growth in population this city would find it necessary some five or six years hence to erect another building of its size.

An enormous crowd was present during the afternoon to be present at the program and to inspect the building

Gov. Eberhart presented the dedicatory address at the Auditorium in the evening to the largest crowd that has ever assembled in this spacious hall, and it is estimated that between 1400 and 1500 persons were present.

The Governor delivered a very fitting and charming address. He spoke of the splendid progress that this city had made along the educational lines in a comparatively short time and the fine building they had at this time constructed, and among other things pronounced this city unequaled in one respect at least, and that was that 37 per cent of our population was attending the city schools.

The school building was opened for inspection by citizens and others in the afternoon from 1:30 to 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

It is equipped with the latest devices in sanitation, ventilation and lighting. The air is washed in steam and the supply controled automatically. A sick room, a museum, baths and, in fact, many modern conveniences are provided. Adjoining the Lincoln is a large brick mechanical building in which all the iron and woodwork is presented. Machinery is provided here and the full equipment of tools and material makes this department popular with all the students. A central heating plant heats these two buildings and the old high school, the three making a pleasing group with a large campus fronting all.

The total enrollment of school children in the city last year was 1,149, of whom 197 were in high school. This will be exceeded this year. Music was furnished both in the evening and the afternoon by several high school choruses.

Broke His Arm.

The five-year-old son of Claud Smith, suffered a very painful accident the first of the week. The youngster had climbed on top of a fence and losing his balance fell to the ground, breaking his arm.

May Run Daily Freight.

Roseau, Minn., Feb. 28.—It is rumored that the Great Northern intends to run daily freights on this line in the near future, as the company is losing a great deal of business at competing points like Red Lake Falls, Thief River Falls and Warroad, through inability to deliver shipments as quickly as the competing roads. A daily freight service would overcome the congestion of freight and the trains would be able to run on schedule time.

Applicants for Citizenship.

The following persons, all residents of Pennington county, have made applications to become citizens before Clerk of Court H. E. Ives up-to-date:

Gunlarg O. Holum, Kratka.
Nels Tollefson, Torgerson, P. O.
Ole Iver Olen, Thief River Falls.
Even Lil, " " "
Ole O. Volstad, Kratka.

These application will be heard at the term which will be held on June 26.

All those who intend to get out second papers had better get their applications in before March 25th.

Taken to Detention Hospital.

Last Friday afternoon Mrs. Marquardt, who resides on the East Side, was taken before Court Commissioner L. M. Hoag, and upon examination found to be in a demented condition. The examining physicians were: Drs. Mellby, Heiber and Swedenberg.

She was taken to Fergus Falls that evening by Sheriff LaBree and placed in the detention hospital.

Opens Hardware Store.

Edward Iverson has opened up his hardware store on Main avenue just south of the big wheel blacksmith shop. Mr. Iverson has put in a fine line of shelf and heavy hardware, and in addition there to will also handle coffins and caskets.

Consumption Claims Two.

The much dreaded disease consumption has added two more victims to its already large list the past week On Tuesday, Feb. 21, occurred the death of Mrs. Ethel Albertina Graves, at the age of 29 years at the home of her parents on the East Side. The funeral took place last Monday afternoon.

Last Monday occurred the death of Ole B. Olson, aged 23 years. The remains were brought to the town of Numedahl yesterday for burial.

MAY EXTEND ITS ROAD

The M. D. & W. Railroad May Be Extended from International Falls to This City.

Doubt as to Soo Purchasing Road from Backus-Brooks Interests.

The oft repeated rumors of civil engineers traversing the territory between this city and International Falls has given rise to considerable railroad talk. That a line would be built to open up the vast tract of land to the northeast of this city has often been prophesied and is bound to be forthcoming sooner or later. The following report sent out from International Falls to the Duluth Herald of yesterday confirms those reports almost to a certainty:

While it has been generally believed that the Soo railroad would eventually take over the Minnesota, Dakota & Western railroad, built last year by the Backus-Brooks interests here to Loman, some twenty miles west of here, it is now the opinion that the present owners of the road will not give up possession, but instead will extend it westward themselves, making Thief River Falls their point of outlet.

When it is considered that the projected line would pass through vast forests of spruce pulpwood, such as is desired for the manufacture of print paper in the big local mills, and that the wheat fields of the Dakotas would be the natural market for much of the lumber which the proposed sawmill at this point will be manufacturing before the year is half spent, it seems but reasonable that the line should follow to a Western outlet, which would naturally be Thief River Falls, and where both Soo and Great Northern connections could be made for all freight destined to points either north, south or west. The country intervening between International Falls and Thief River Falls is largely swamp, but it is being rapidly drained by huge state ditches, and when these water outlets have accomplished their purpose the county will be rapidly cleared up and converted into highly productive farms, thus giving the railroad a local business which would add much to its earning powers. It is known that cruisers have "looked out" the line and that the surveyors in the employ of the Minnesota, Dakota & Western railway have done much work along the line selected, which for a large part of the distance on top of one of the gravel ridges which is holding back the water which the ditches are being built to release.

Did Not Get Meeting.

The next meeting place of the annual conference of the Zion Free church has been designated as Willmar, this state, and not this city as it had been hoped.

The Real choice was between that place and this city while there were quite a number of towns that had extended an invitation to entertain this body. The reason for the choice of the former place is because of it being more centrally located.

IMPORTANT MEETING.

There will be an important meeting of the Commercial Club tomorrow (Friday) evening at 7:30 oclock.

Swedish Baptist Church.

Rev. E. T. Olander of Bagley, Minn., will be here on March 5th to begin a series of meetings in the Baptist Church on the east side. Mr. Olander is a forceful speaker and has been in the evangelistic work for some time. He especially wants the young people and the boys and girls to come and help sing during the coming week. Services at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Young peoples meeting at 5 p. m., at which refreshments will be served.

Friday evening at 7:30 there will be services in the Swedish Baptist Church when Revs. Ekstrom of Karlstad and Jacobson of Argyle will speak. Every one is cordially invited.

WHAT THEY ARE DOING

Northwestern Drainage Company Making Great Preparations for Season's Work.

Local Plant Working Night and Day Getting Machines Ready.

Drainage as handled by the Northwestern Drainage Co. is a big proposition.

A small army of men and teams have been employed all winter hauling supplies building camps, etc.

Large storage tanks located at convenient points, in Marshall and Beltrami counties are being filled with gasoline, coal is being piled along the line of the main ditch, and dredges placed in position for an early start.

The large machine shop located in this city employes a large number of skilled workmen, who work night and day in two shifts, manufacturing dredging machines which, as soon as completed, are hauled out ready to begin work as soon as the season will permit. This summer will see the beginning of a wonderful change in the country northeast of here, and some of the finest prairie lands in the state will soon be ready for the plow.

Creameries Are Growing.

According to figures in the forthcoming biennial report of the State Dairy and Food Commissioner, the number of creameries in the state has grown from 722 to 797 in two years, and the amount of money paid to farmers by the creameries has grown from $18,912,012 to $22,290,095. The latest figures available are those for 1909 and are compared throughout with those for 1907.

Of the total amount paid for butter fat to patrons of creameries the largest sum paid in any one county is paid by Ramsey. For 1909 this amount was $2,452,980, an increase of $250,000 over the two years previous. The county next highest is Freeborn, where co-operative creameries first started.

This showing proves that Ramsey county, or St. Paul, since the creameries are located in that city, pays about one tenth of all the money received by Minnesota farmers for the products of their cows.

The amount of butter produced in the state has grown to 90,821,252 pounds, compared with a total of 87,044,817 produced two years earlier.

The number of co-operative creameries has grown from 527 to 574 during the two years.

Resolutions of Sympathy for The Family of Chas. A. Robbecke Adopted By Young Pine Lodge, I. O. O. F. No. 221.

Whereas, our dearly beloved brother, Chas. A. Robbecke has been removed from us to that land from which no traveler returns; and

Whereas, he has left a widow and large family of children to mourn his early demise; and

Whereas, he was a charter member of this Lodge, and one of its most honored, worthy and faithful member, whose deeds of kindness and nobleness of character will be cherished by us in everlasting remembrance;

Therefore Be it Resolved,

First, That the members of Young Pine Lodge, I. O. O. F. hereby extend to the widow and children of our departed brother their heart felt sympathy in this hour of bereavement and assure them of our earnest solicitude for their welfare;

Resolved, Second, That our Charter be draped in mourning for sixty days;

Resolved, Third, That these resolutions be engrossed upon our records and published in The Thief River Falls News and Thief River Press, and a copy thereof be furnished to the widow of the deceased by the Secretary of this Lodge.

DENIES THE APPLICATION

Attorney General Denies Application of Red Lake Falls Parties.

In a decision reached last Monday Attorney General George T. Simpson in effect gives a flat refusal to J. A. Duffy and others of Red Lake Co., to make application to the supreme court for a writ of quo warranto to test the legality of the organization of Pennington county. In a letter addressed to Mr. Duffy the principal applicant, a copy of which was sent to Attorney Stanton of this city, Simpson says:

In the matter of your request that the Attorney General make application to the Supreme Court for a writ of quo warranto to test in effect the organization of Pennington County, I have come to the conclusion after a very careful consideration of the whole matter, that the same should be and is refused.

Ordinarily an application of this nature is made when requested, if it appears that the public good requires the same, but in this case no fact or argument has been presented to me from which the latter might be reasonably adduced. On the other hand it does appear, on its face at least, that the new county was lawfully created. To attempt at this time to set aside the action thus taken, would, in my opinion, not only not be conducive to the public good, but would rather prolong an agitation which has existed of common knowledge for years and which cannot be considered otherwise than harmful to the public welfare. In other words, from the standpoint of the state, I see no public good that will be subserved in making the application you request. The interests of the state in my opinion are to the contrary.

Oldest Indian of the Chippewa Tribe Dies.

John D. Legard, who perhaps was the oldest Indian settler at the Head of the Lakes, died Monday morning at his home at Fond du Lac, where he has lived for the past fifty five years. Legard was 90 years old.

Legard belonged to the Chippewa tribe and has always lived in Minnesota. Fond du Lac people know little or nothing of his early history, except that he was one of the best hunters and trappers in Duluth or in the up-river district in his younger days.

According to the most reliable information, Legarde was born about 100 years ago on the Red Lake Indian reservation near Thief River Falls. His mother was a full-blooded Chippewa and his father a half breed with a French-Canadian name. In 1834, when about 24 years old, he came with his mother to the Head of the Lakes and settled at the historic John Jacob Astor trading post at Fond du Lac.

Three years later, while trading at Madeline Island, near Bayfield, he met Liola Chievier, a half-breed, whom he afterwards married and brought to Fond du Lac. They lived for years on eighty acres of land, which is now the property of the Steel corporation and will be used as a site for the new steel plant.

There were seven children to this union, but only three are now living. The youngest, aged 55, lived at Fond du Lac with his father. The other two are located on the White Earth reservation. They are Moses and Simon. The old man's wife died about thirty-eight years ago and up to that time the children were all at home. Legarde lived in Fond du Lac about seventy-seven years.

NOTICE TO STOCK HOLDERS OF FARMER'S ELEVATOR.

Thief River Falls, Minn.
March 1, 1911.

A stock-holders meeting of the Farmers' Elevator company will be held at the Armory Hall in the city of Thief River Falls, Minn., on Monday the 13th day of March, 1911, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of ratifying the proposed by laws, or ammending them, and also to elect two directors, to fill the places of the two who have failed to qualify.

Every person who is interested in the success of the enterprise must be sure to attend this meeting for some more shares must be sold before we can build, or go into business.

Stockholders should attend this meeting so as to help decide on what basis profits shall be distributed, as a strong sentiment exists for distribution on the basis of grain sold to this company, and also a strong sentiment favoring distribution on the basis of number of shares held.

Yours for the success of Farmers' Elevator.

The Committee.

Herron—Jansen Wedding.

Last Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock at St. Bernards church occurred the marriage of Miss Mae Herron, of this city, to J. S. Jansen, of Viking. Immediately after the ceremonies a sumptous wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride was attended by Miss Etta Flynn, while Mr. Avillo Herron, a brother of the bride, acted as best man.

The contracting parties have a wide acquaintance and innumerable friends in this city and vicinity.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herron and has made her home here for years and has by her particularly pleasing personality won the closest friendship of everyone who knew her.

The groom had up to a few years ago owned and operated a barber shop in this city, but at present is depot agent at Viking and is widely and favorably known thruout this section.

The happy couple will be at home after March 15th at Viking, Minn.

The News joins in with their many friends in extending congratulation.

Postmaster at Orleans.

Washington, Feb. 27.—(Special to The Herald).—Representative Steenerson today recommended the appointment of John D. Gardiner to be postmaster at Orleans to succeed Allen J. Hunt, resigned.

Former Superintendent Buys Paper.

L. L. Methun, former superintendent of schools of Marshall county, has purchased the Elmore Eye, a newspaper published at Elmore, in the southern part of the state, and will leave with his family for that town the latter part of this week.

C. H. Bronson, editor of the Oaklee Review, was in the city last Monday, while enroute to his home from a trip up in the Roseau country, to inspect some real estate holding, which he has at that place. While in the city Bro. Bronson found time to look over the city and expressed himself well pleased with this city and the county in this part of the state. He left on the Soo Flyer in the evening for his home. Bro. Bronson is one of the most active newspaper men in the state and is not contented to be in the newspaper field alone, but is postmaster and principal owner of the telephone exchange at that place.

Lars Runnestrand, a son of Knute Runnestrand, died the first of the week at his home in the town of Reiner after an illness from pneumonia.

Hauges Synods Church Notice.

I. L. Lasseson, Pastor.

Immanuels congregation (Anton) Service next Sunday 10:30 a. m. Sunday School commences next Sunday at 9:30 a. m.

Zoar congregation (Kjasbo Schoolhouse) Service next Sunday, 3 p. m.

THE TAX LIST

The following is a list of personal property taxes as they will be paid this month by people of Pennington county for State, School, City, Village or town and road tax as levied by Red Lake County. A county tax of 8 mills will no doubt be levied by the commissioners of Pennington county and thus the figures below will only represent a part of your taxes for this year. The entire tax in both counties will, however, not be quite as great as it would have been on the same property had the county not been divided:

We're All Actors.

Mme. Alixandria Viarda, the Polish tragedienne, once propounded the following:

"It is a strange thing, but ask a man to mend a rip in his coat.

"No; he is not a tailor.

"Ask another to stop the faucet from leaking.

"No; he's not a plumber.

"Or another to do a bit of cabinet work.

"No; he is not a carpenter.

"But ask any one of the three or all of them to enact a little part in a play and each will smile in fatuous confidence and instantly acquiesce.

"But watch him act!"

Saintliness Unpopular.

That state of mind which let us call the ignominy of the virtuous is not entirely confined to boys of nine years. I have seen grown men and women, being accused of saintliness, over whose faces passed an expression of mortification. They would accept with more complacency the tribute that they were getting to be devils in their old age.—Atlantic.

Lack of Tact.

"That man is about the most tactless person I have ever known."

"I agree with you. He would have no more sense than to ask a barber to subscribe to a fund for the purpose of providing a monument for the inventor of the safety razor."—Chicago Record-Herald.

She Knew Her Dad.

Smithers—Do you know any one who has a horse to sell? She—Yes; I suspect old Brown has. Smithers—Why? She—Well, papa sold him one yesterday.—London Punch.

Not Homemade.

Defending Counsel (to witness in bandages)—Are you married? Witness—No; I was knocked down by a cab last week.

FARMER'S WIFE IS SLAIN

Supposed Robber Kills Woman In McLeod County.

Mrs. Frank Simon, sixty years old, wife of a farmer living at Swan Lake, McLeod county, was murdered by a robber, who entered her home and demanded money of her and her husband.

Mr. Simon said that the robber came to the door, demanded admittance, pushed by Simon, who advanced to meet him, and immediately went upstairs. The farmer heard a shot, then a sound of a falling body outside and retreating footsteps. Simon rushed upstairs and found his wife lying on the floor unconscious and with a bullet wound in her head. She expired in a few minutes. The robber had fled, leaping from a window. Simon summoned neighbors and the authorities were notified.

Aged Woman Taken to Prison.

Mrs. Eliza Goebel of Moorhead, aged eighty-seven years, recently sentenced to five years for manslaughter in the first degree, has been taken to the penitentiary to begin her term. She was accompanied to Stillwater on what many believe to be her last journey by her son and Sheriff Archie Whaley and wife. Mrs. Goebel was sentenced as a result of the death of Stina Narverud of Hitterdal, upon whom she performed an operation.

An invention which gives promise of being of immense benefit to the orange packing industry has lately been installed in the plant of the Redlands Orange Growers' association. In brief, it is a device in which the fruit is subjected to an alcohol bath, the perfectly sound and solid fruit going to the bottom of the tank and the light and imperfect fruit remaining at the surface, whence it is removed by an endless conveyor. This simple device not only accomplishes what the human hand and eye cannot, but it has been found that fruit given the alcohol bath keeps longer and in a better state of preservation through a destruction of all rot spores on the surface. The cost of the operation is 1½ cents per box for alcohol and 2½ cents for labor.

PIONEER PRIEST IS DEAD

Father John A. Oster, Former Vicar General of St. Paul Diocese.

Father John A. Oster, seventy-six years of age, pioneer priest, died at St. Joseph's hospital at St. Paul from heart disease after an illness lasting over a year.

Father Oster was the best known priest in the diocese of St. Paul and was called monsignore by all who knew him. He was offered this honor by Archbishop John Ireland several years ago, but refused, saying that he wished to die a priest.

Rev. Oster was born in Stronsberg, Alsace, in 1834. He reached St. Paul when a young man, entering the St. Paul seminary. He finished there in 1856 and was ordained a priest by Bishop Joseph Cretin. He was assigned to the parish of Mendota a year later. He served in various parishes after that and was at one time vicar general of the St. Paul diocese.

He was retired two years ago on account of his health.

The Soft Answer.

Two men were occupying a double seat in a crowded car. One of them was a long distance whistler and the other was evidently annoyed. "You don't seem to like my whistling?" said the noisy one after a five minute continuous performance. "No, I don't," was the frank reply. "Well," continued the other, "maybe you think you are man enough to stop it?" "No, I don't think I am," rejoined the other, "but I hope you are." And the whistling was discontinued.—Argonaut.

Town Booming Helps

V.—Where Is Your Talent?

Remember the case of the man who took his talent, wrapped it in a napkin and buried it?

Not only did his master punish him for his folly, but his conduct has become a byword.

The world has progressed since his time. Modern conditions have developed a kind of man who is even more useless than the one who buried his talent. HE IS THE MAN

WHO SENDS HIS MONEY OUT OF TOWN TO BUY FROM MAIL ORDER HOUSES.

The man who buried his talent at least had the talent to show for it. If we all spent our money out of town in a short time we would have nothing to show for it except BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

The man who patronizes home industries benefits the people he deals with and benefits himself. His conduct is like that of the good and faithful servant who so used the talents intrusted to him that they greatly increased. He is a good and faithful citizen who is worthy of the success he is sure to win.

The next time you see an attractive advertisement of a mail order house go to your local merchant and try to buy the article of him. IF HE HASN'T IT ASK HIM WHY. If he has it ask him why he never told you about it in your local paper.

That will be a boost for us. But we'll stand for it. And we'll boost back; remember that.

Do your share of the boosting and you'll get your share of the prosperity.

LET US BOOST!

Weary—Gee! If I kin keep up dis speed till I reaches de pound, me fortune's made.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Difference of Opinion.

"I ought to get a hand on that scene," said the actor proudly.

"Hand, nothing!" ejaculated the critic. "The audience ought to put its foot down on it."—Baltimore American.

A Dangerous Craft.

"Mrs. Yellowbond's houseboat party has broken up."

"Indeed! What was the trouble?"

"All the girls eloped with all the young men."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Goods.

"We live in exacting times."

"As to how?"

"One must deliver the goods and yet not be caught with them."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Warmth Not Wanted.

"This would be a pleasanter world if people put more warmth—genuine warmth—in their letters," said the man of sentiment.

"I don't agree with you," replied his worried friend, "there was a warmth about some of the business letters I got this morning that I didn't at all like."

Didn't Hide His Joy.

Janet—Viola says there was only one drawback to her wedding. Fanny—What was that? Janet—She says her father looked too cheerful when he gave her away.—Boston Globe.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible.—Addison.

A poser for those fond of making fine ethical distinctions: Does the egg laid by your neighbor's hen in your barn or woodshed rightfully belong to him or yourself, provided your garden and back yard furnish her food and your flower beds a dusting place?

Nine times out of ten it does not pay to monkey with really sick poultry. It is better to knock them on the head with a broomstick than to allow them to run indiscriminately with and infect the rest of the flock. Should the sick fowls recover they seldom pay their keep for months.

SOLIDITY

$6,672.90

This amount in silver dollars, piled one on the other, would reach more than fifty feet in the air.

"Quite a bit of money," you say. Yes, indeed, loads of it.

"What about all this money?" Listen.

During the year 1910, this stack of silver dollars was paid by the Citizens State Bank to the people of Thief River Falls and vicinity as interest on their idle money.

Now this is the point we want to make: This money was not working, was not producing a cent. But when the owners loaned it to this bank, it began to work for them.

Then we loaned it to others who had use for it. Straightway it worked for us. In their turn, the borrowers set it to work in their business, and it netted them a profit.

Thus money that was doing nothing for anybody created prosperity for the entire community simply by being deposited in this bank.

Our time certificates, drawing interest at 5 per cent., are an ideal form of investment.

Entered at the postoffice at Thief River Falls, Minn., as second class matter.

President Taft's desire to reduce the cost of living to the city dweller is most commendable, but, it should not be done at the expense of the producer of food stuffs, without giving him something in return.

Congressman Steenerson believes that if the farmer is to be deprived of the protection on his products he now enjoys, he should be compensated by a reduction in the duties on goods he consumes, and which are largely produced in the East.

The milling interests of the Twin City are much agrieved because Senator Nelson does not at once, pledge his support to the reciprocity treaty. He knows that it is not likely to result in benefit to the farmers and Minnesota is first of all an agricultural state.

Steenerson's bill opening the remnant of lands left on the Eleven Towns is a good thing, and comes at a most opportune time. The demand for lands in this section will be greater this season than for some years. People are beginning to discover that they have been passing by a mighty good thing, when they neglected the lands here with their certain results, for the uncertainties of the semi-arid West.

James J. Hill is an advocate of reciprocity, and claims it will have no effect on the price of wheat, as that is governed by the price in Liverpool. Let us see, was it not about two years ago, that Mr. Hill made a speech in which he claimed we would in a very few years cease to be an exporter of wheat, that we were in fact on the verge of starvation. If this were true—would'nt protection then help the farmer?

Would Learn of Grimm Alfalfa.

The farmers of Minnesota and surrounding states, desirous of learning about the Grimm variety of alfalfa indorsed by the college of agriculture as the hardiest variety of alfalfa known and one which will make the growing of the forage plant possible in Canada and the northern part of the United States, are flooding the extension division with letters daily requesting information.

The scores of letters are not the only indication that Minnesota farmers are bent upon trying alfalfa this year. Experts at the short courses and corn and grain shows through the state are being plied with questions as to how the plant can be grown. Special interest was shown at the corn show at Marshall last week, and the extension corps reports that there were few of the hundreds of farmers who attended who did not ask concerning the best varieties and methods of growing.

"There is danger", said O. M. Olson, extension division expert, "that farmers in Minnesota in their enthusiasm over alfalfa will give it a too hasty trial and having wholly or partialy failed because they do not know how it should be grown, ascribe its failure to an unsuitability to conditions. It should be tried out on a small scale by each farmer and in an experimental way. Farmers must learn how to grow it, prepare the seed bed, cut it and adjust its value as a ration before they go into it too heavily. The growing of alfalfa does not fit into the rotation system as does clover, but produces the best results when grown in the same field for a series of years, which is another fact that may be disregarded. It is not too soon to give warning about going slow".

A. D. Wilson, head of the extension division, also strikes a note of warning about going into the growing of alfalfa without a full knowledge of its fitness as a feed and the best way of growing it. "It is possible for it to be unsuccessfully grown", said Mr. Wilson. "Conditions might be so that it would be difficult to obtain a good stand. The seed is expensive, and for that reason is not a good rotation crop. Most farms need to grow so much clover to maintain soil productivity that the problem is more live-stock and not more feed. For intensive farming, where a small farm is run with lots of stock, alfalfa is well suited, as the soil can be maintained by manures and clover is not essential".

A. O. Arny believes farmers starting on a small scale may learn all about alfalfa, and that the Grimm variety will be grown with great success. "The first requirement for success", said Mr. Arny, "is that the alfalfa grown in Minnesota possesses the hardiness or ability to stand a severe winter without winter killing. If there were a good snow-covering each winter, ordinary alfalfa would give good results. There would be no winter killing. However, no such conditions are assured, and anyone raising alfalfa now commonly grown in the western and southwestern states and in the warmer countries of Europe and Asia, takes chances of winter killing.

"The Grimm variety has proved its hardiness and should be given preference, if good seed can be obtained at a reasonable price. Commercial Turkestan alfalfa cannot be recommended for Minnesota conditions, but some hardy strains might be planted.

"The seed of a hardy alfalfa should be bought when possible, even though the price is much higher than the common alfalfa of equal grade, especially where the crops are left over for a series of years, or seed is to be raised. It is worth more because a bigger percentage of plants will live through the winter. It is advisable to grow the seed and extend the crop in this way. There is not enough Grimm seed grown in Minnesota to supply the demand. The Montanas, Dakotas, and western states are now producing seed of the Grimm varieties in considerable quantities. This makes it possible to obtain seed practically as good as that grown in Minnesota, provided the seed is true to the variety for which it is sold.

"The germination power of all seed is an important point. The purity, amount of dirt, and extent of adulteration of the seed bought should also be taken into consideration. A germination and purity test should be insisted upon. When a good stand is secured, a field is profitable for four or five years. As it does not fit into the rotation scheme commonly employed, farmers should plant it where it will not be in the way, until a different rotation scheme has been worked out.

"To get more practical knowledge about alfalfa in Minnesota we are going to conduct co operative experiments for representative sections of the state. We are going to experiment also in connection with the demonstration farms, some seventeen in number. Spring seeding is advisable until we learn otherwise. It is best not to plant alfalfa with a nurse crop. If a nurse crop is used, barley is the best.

"One of the most essential things in most instances in starting to grow alfalfa is inoculation, though this is unnecessary in some cases. By this is meant the introduction of alfalfa bacteria in the soil where the plant is first planted. Like clover bacteria, the alfalfa bacteria are essential to its growth. When alfalfa seed is first sown, soil from a field where it is growing should be sown with it to insure success. It is advisable to sow from 200 to 600 pounds of soil to the acre. Sweet clover soil may be sowed with success, though there is danger that the sweet clover seed may be contained in the soil".—Minneapolis Journal.

Gross Earnings $23,458,548.41.

The Great Northern Railway company last week reported its gross earnings in Minnesota for 1910 to the state auditor and railroad commission. The total earnings were $23,458,448.41, covering state business and the Minnesota proportion of interstate business. The 4 per cent tax will be $939,337.94, a good increase over last year. The tax for 1909 was $905,843 03.

All the large companies have now reported but the Soo, and State Auditor S. G. Iverson estimates that the receipts from railroad taxes will come to $3,800,000, compared with $3,640,000 last year. Several small companies are yet to report, and it is possible that the total will come close to $4,000,000.

The Minneapolis & Western, a switching road, reported its 1910 earnings today. They amounted to $40,955.02, and and the tax will be $1,634 20, compared with $1,587.40 last year.

The ladies of the Presbyterian society surprised Mrs. George E. Smith at her home on the east side last Tuesday afternoon. The Smith family departed for Sunnyside, Washington yesterday, where they expect to make their future home. Mrs. Smith has been a great worker in the Presbyterian church ever since its organization here and will be greatly missed, both in the church and out.

Big Judicial Ditch Sold.

Last week the county auditors of Marshall and Beltrami counties sold the contract for the construction of Judicial Ditch No. 12, to the J. B. Arpin Dredging company, of Grand Rapids, Wis., at $0.1285 per yard. There is 526,427 yards of earth to be excavated, and the ditch contract will amount to $67,615 87 approximately, to which will be added $120 per mile for the amount of roadway to be graded, which will be approximately 30 miles.

The bid of Forlestal and Seyen, of St. Paul, was but half a mill per yard higher, $0.129 per yard.

The big ditch is mostly in Beltrami county, but takes a corner of Marshall county, and was established by Judge Grindeland. It drains a large acreage lying mostly north of Red Lake.

The work will be started early next spring and 40 per cent of it must be finished this season and as much more as possible, and the entire contract finished inside of two years.

Both the quality and quantity of the fruit from the average home garden strawberry bed could be greatly improved were the number of plants allowed to set for bearing reduced by half or more. This would give the plants remaining more room, more light, more fertility to draw on and would also greatly increase their thriftiness and bearing capacity. Some of the best yields of strawberries on record have been made by beds in which the plants were set closely in the original bed, but allowed to send out no runners whatever, being cultivated according to the hill system, as it is usually known. It is too late now to help beds that are ready to bear, but the bed set this spring for fruiting next year can be so handled as to prevent this crowding and stunting of the plants, while beds that are bearing their first crop this season can be so thinned after the bed is renovated as to bring about the right conditions for next season. If the row system is to be followed in the new bed no more new plants should be allowed to take root than will comfortably fill the row, each plant being allowed a space of seven or eight inches square.

Local Mill to Bring Logs By Rail.

The Thief River Falls Lumber company recently made a large purchase of logs, which are to be converted into lumber at the local plant. These logs will be brought here by rail over the Soo's Duluth line in the early summer, and will meet any difficulty that might be experienced in getting a supply early in the season by river owing to low water.

One of our fellows who poses as one who is wise above that which is written, recently answered the following advertisement in an eastern 25 cent paper: "We will send 11 cents for 1902 pennies." He scraped around until he got fifty of the 1902 mintage and forwarded them in a registered letter. He received immediate reply saying that when he sent 1852 more pennies, sufficient to make up the number—1902—he would receive his 11 cents. He gave himself a kick, borrowed enough to subscribe for this paper and proposes in the future to keep posted on these little graft games.

The Soo railroad has offered to make a practical demonstration of what can be done with one hundred and sixty acres of land in North Dakota when scientifically cultivated. They ask that the land can be furnished them free of charge for ten years, in return for which they will bear all the expenses of cultivating it according to the most approved methods, with a view to introducing better and more scientific farming along their line. The Minot Commercial Club is now trying to secure a suitable quarter section of land on which the efforts of the Soo line to increase the productiveness of North Dakota soil will be watched with interest.—Lankin, (N. D) Reporter.

Last Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the home of the brides parents in the town of Rocksbury occurred the marriage of Miss Ida Randorf to Mr Gustaf Wilken, both popular young people of the town of Rocksbury. The marriage was performed in the presence of immediate friends and relatives and was followed by a sumptuous wedding feast. The young couple will make their home on the Wilken farm in that town.

Mary had a little lamb, its fleece was white as snow; it strayed away one summer day where lambs should never go. And Mary sat her quickly down and tears streamed from her eyes; she never found the lamb because she did not advertise. And Mary had a brother who kept a village store; he sat him down and smoked a pipe, and watched the open door. And as the people passed along but did not stop to buy, John still sat and smoked his pipe, and blinked his sleepy eye. And so the sheriff closed him out, but still he lingered near, and Mary came along to drop a sympathetic tear. "How is it, sister, can you tell, why other merchants here, sell all their goods so readily and thrive from year to year?" Remembering her own bad luck, the maiden then replies. "These other fellows get there, John, because they advertise".—Ex.

Wm. Moeller, of St. Hilaire, was in the city last Saturday and brought back to his farm a registered Choice Chester White sow which he had received from Luverne, this state, on that day. Mr. Moeller purchased the animal for a consideration of $46.30 from a Luverne stock raiser who makes a specialty of raising this brand of hogs, and he considers this one of the best investments he has made in his various purchases of registered stock. Mr. Moeller is a staunch believer in registered stock and already has quite a collection of them, among them being four Chester White hogs that are the finest in this part of the state.

State Convention Next Week.

All things are now ready for the greatest Sunday School Convention in the history of Minnesota's Sunday School work. It will be held in Mankato, March 8, 9, 10, 1911. Among the speakers and instructors are W. C. Pearce, Chicago, Herbert Moninger, Cincinnati, Ohio, Judge McKenize Cleland, Chicago, Dr. M. S. Rice, Duluth, Dr. A. C. Stevens, St. Paul, Dr. Stanley B. Roberts, Minneapolis, Dr. Harold Pattison, St. Paul, and a host of others.

The features of the Convention will be its institute character, an extension bazaar and exhibit of Sunday School equipment, and a Men's Bible Class Demonstration in the form of a great Parade on the last evening of the convention. Special trains will carry hundreds of people to the convention for the Bible Class Parade, March 10th, at 6.30 P. M. A Chorus of 100 trained voices will render inspiring music. Harry Iverson of Mankato is training the chorus.

Mankato business men have contributed $000 to take care of the convention and expect to take care of 1000 delegates. No less number will satisfy them. More than 30000 programs have already been distributed over the entire State. Every county and every Sunday school of every denomination is expected to send delegates. For programs apply to The Minnesota Sunday School Association, 371, Snelling Ave., St. Paul, Minn.

Theobaldi Coming.

The world famous violinist to appear at the Auditorium, Thursday, Mar. 2.

There are many persons who miss no opportunity to see and hear the best of the great musicians, lecturers, etc. It is but a few times during the course of a life-time that one has an opportunity to hear an Ingersoll, a Beecher, a Patti, or an Ole Bull.

Theobaldi has been called a second Ole Bull, and he is more like the latter in many respects than any musician of to day.

At the age of six years of age Ole Theobaldi appeared in concert that was honored by the presence of Ole Bull, who was at that time the master of the violin world. So strongly impressed was the master at that time with the playing of the little boy, that he exclaimed: "In him I shall have a worthy successor." That these prophetic words have come true is now attested by every one who has heard Ole Theobaldi, the great Norwegian violinist, who has appeared before nearly every crowned head in Europe, and has been a social lion in every capital.

THE DEATH RECORD.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is dead at her summer home at Middletown, R. I. Death was due to heart failure resulting from advanced age and a severe cold recently contracted. She was ninety-one years of age. During her many years of activity in various fields Mrs. Howe published more than a dozen volumes, including books of poems, travel, reminiscences and views of life and men. Although Mrs. Howe's achievements in any one of a number of fields of activity have been sufficient to bring her worldwide fame it is as the author of the inspired lines of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" that she is most intimately known to the people of her own and other lands.

David B. Hill, ex-United States senator and former governor of New York, died suddenly at Wolfert's Roost, N. Y., his country home. About two weeks ago Mr. Hill was seized with a bilious attack while at his law office in Albany and although his condition was not considered serious at the time his physician advised him to remain at home until he recovered. A cold developed and a few days later alarming reports of his condition were circulated. These reports, however, were denied by friends. In fact, the patient appeared to be improving until just before the end, when he suffered a sinking spell which resulted in his death.

Cable dispatches announce the death in Palmanes, India, of Rev. Dr. Jared W. Scudder, one of the oldest and most distinguished Americans in the foreign missionary field. For more than fifty-two years he had been one of the principal representatives in India of the Reformed church of America.

William Vaughn Moody, poet, playwright and critic, is dead at Colorado Springs, Colo. Although but forty-one years of age Moody had achieved unusual distinction in literary fields and as a playwright. One of his best known plays was "The Great Divide," played for several seasons by Henry Miller.

Willard Stephen Whitmore, inventor of the papier mache matrix process of stereotyping, used by nearly every newspaper in the country, and from which he gained no material benefit, is dead at Washington, D. C., aged sixty years.

John Geoffort, seventy-five years old, and his wife, aged sixty-eight, were found dead in bed in their residence in Vandalia, Mo. A coroner's jury decided the man had died of heart disease and his wife of indigestion.

Thomas T. Eckert, former president of the Western Union Telegraph company, is dead at West End, Long Branch, after an illness of several days. Mr. Eckert was born at St. Clairsville, O., April 23, 1825.

David Rankin, aged eighty-five, millionaire farmer philanthropist, owner of the largest farm in the world under cultivation and one of Missouri's wealthiest men, is dead at his home at Tarkio, Mo.

Rev. Winfield Scott, former national chaplain of the Grand Army of the Republic, died at his home in Scottdale, Ariz., following an operation.

A QUEER UNIVERSITY.

Cairo Has the World's Oldest Educational Institution.

"When we think of Harvard or Yale, the former dating from 1638 and the latter from 1701, we think of them as old universities," says a writer in the American Educational Review; "but when we pass to the other side of the world we discover that even the oldest American universities are in reality very young institutions.

"The oldest educational institution in the world is the University of El Ashar, Cairo, founded in the year 988 by the great Saladin. It is the central seat of learning for the whole Mohammedan world, as well as a fountain of spiritual life. It occupies an ancient mosque in the Arab quarter of Cairo, surrounded by a confusing maze of narrow streets where the population is made up of representatives of every race that follows the prophet.

"The old mosque covers several acres and consists of a series of courts surrounded by long cloisters with low roofs supported by forests of columns. The floors of red tiles are covered daily by a multitude of men and boys, squatting in semicircles around their teachers, who sit with their backs to the columns lecturing in monotones.

"The chancellor of the university is always a descendant of the prophet and is usually a man of ability and learning. He occupies apartments in El Ashar and is not only the supreme educational but the ecclesiastical head of the church of Egypt.

"There is no organization similar to that in modern universities. Any reputable man who desires to teach can obtain the privilege by application and is assigned a column where he may sit and impart the truth as he thinks proper. His fame or ability will attract more or less students and disciples, who pay him fees according to their means."

What Happened To Jones

And a lot of other People Is Described In The HOME PAPER

TAKE IT REGULARLY

THE SCOLD'S BRIDLE.

Brutal Punishment to Which Women Were Once Subjected.

The branks, or scold's bridle, or gossip's bridle, was neither more nor less than a muzzle. It was in general use in Great Britain from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century, and in Scotland as well women were muzzled for certain offenses, some at least of them more imaginary than real. The instrument of torture, even a dog's leather muzzle, is uncomfortable. How much more the scold's muzzle! It consisted, according to a high authority, Mr. W. Jewitt, of a kind of crown or framework of iron, which was locked upon the head, and it was armed in front with a gag, a plate or a sharp cutting knife or point, which was placed in the poor woman's mouth so as to prevent her moving her tongue, or it was so placed that if she did move it or attempt to speak it was cut in a most frightful manner. With this cage upon her head and with the gag firmly pressed and locked against her tongue the miserable creature, whose sole offending perhaps was that she raised her voice in defense of her social rights against a brutal and besotted husband or had spoken honest truth of some one high in office in her town, was paraded through the streets, led by a chain by the hand of a bellman, the beadle or the constable or chained to the pillory, the whipping post or market cross, to be subjected to every conceivable insult and degradation, without even the power left her of asking for mercy or of promising amendment for the future, and when the punishment was over she was turned out from the town hall or the place where the brutal punishment had been inflicted, maimed, disfigured, bleeding, faint and degraded, to be the subject of comment and jeering among her neighbors.—London Family Herald.

It Looked Suspicious.

"As I was coming out of a store this evening I saw an amusing sight," said a shopper. "A light rain was falling, and as the woman in front of me stepped out she opened her umbrella. Out of it fell a jeweled hatpin, a pair of gloves and two men's handkerchiefs. On its face it seemed like a case of shoplifting, but as she gathered up the articles the woman said:

"'Well, if here isn't Mary's emerald hatpin and the gloves I was looking for last week and two of George's best handkerchiefs. I never thought of looking in the umbrellas for them.'"—New York Sun.

Got His Reply.

A funny man indulged in a practical joke recently. He put an advertisement in a paper for a wife and requested each candidate to inclose her carte de visite. It was a foolish thing to do, but one of the candidates served him out very well by sending the following letter: "Sir—I do not inclose my carte, for, though there is some authority for putting a cart before a horse, I know of none for putting one before an ass."

Aching Voids.

"Brooks," said Rivers, "that's the second time I've heard you use the phrase 'aching void.' I wish you would tell me how a void can ache."

"Well," said Brooks, reflecting a moment, "not to speak of a hollow tooth, don't you sometimes have the head ache?"—Chicago Tribune.

The Filial Chinaman.

Many examples of Chinese filial piety strike the occidental reader as ridiculous. There is the famous story of Lao Laitsu, which Mr. R. F. Johnston repeats in his "Lion and Dragon In Northern China." Lao's parents lived to such extreme old age that he was himself a toothless old man while they were both still alive. "Conceiving it his duty to divert their attention from their weight of years and approaching end, he dressed himself up in the clothes of a child and played about in his parents' presence with the object of making them think they were still a young married couple contemplating the innocent gambols of their infant son."

A similar case is that of Wang P'ou, whose mother had an unconquerable dread of thunder and lightning. When she died she was buried in a mountain forest, and thereafter, when a violent thunderstorm occurred, Wang P'ou, heedless of the wind and rain, would hurry to her grave and throw himself to his knees. "I am here to protect you, dear mother," he would say. "Do not be afraid."

Making a Gunstock.

A party of men were out hunting, and an old woodsman who was with them broke his gunstock in some way or other. It was just about nightfall when the accident occurred and inasmuch as he was very anxious to do some shooting early the next morning he decided to fix up his shooting iron. Finding a walnut fence rail, he set to work. His only tools were an ax and a big pocket knife. All night long he labored vigorously at his task, and by morning the gunstock was finished and back in place and worked like a charm.

"How did you do it?" asked one of the number, greatly surprised.

"Very easy," was the old hunter's reply. "No trouble at all. Just get a piece of wood about the size and kind that you want and then whittle away all that you don't want whittled away. When you have all the wood cut off [illegible] that you [illegible] want you have a gunstock."—Kansas City Journal.

NORWAY.

In the little town of Grimstad, on the southern coast of Norway, stands an ancient, dilapidated and empty house. It is only one story and was formerly a chemist's shop. The present proprietor is thinking either of selling the old place or rebuilding it. The empty house in question was once occupied by Henrik Ibsen. The alternative would almost amount to sacrilege, for it was in this unpretentious structure that the great playwright served his apprenticeship and afterwards carried on his business as a chemist. During the agitated period of 1848 and the time of the first war between Prussia and Denmark he passed his time here. Against the alternative proposal of the destruction of Ibsen's house George Brandes, a great admirer of the dramatist, appeals to the storthing to buy the house and preserve it as a national memorial. "Within the walls," writes M. Brandes, "Ibsen perceived the resplendent fame before him, both in poesy and glory. Grimstad, when Ibsen lived there, possessed but 800 inhabitants, and this little structure was the 'bourse' of the town. People gathered there to transact their business and discuss passing events. The souvenirs of Ibsen are rare in Norway," concludes M. Brandes. "Let us preserve this treasure."

The International Ski tournament, which is now in progress in Christiania, is attracting a great deal of attention and hundreds of people are flocking to Voxenkollen, where the contests are taking place. There are large delegations from Denmark, Finland and Sweden and there are scores of winter tourists from Germany and England who are taking in the event. The International Ski tournament, which is an annual event, has grown to such proportions that the hotels of the city make extra preparations to care for foreign guests.

Miss Anna Rogstad, the prominent suffrage leader in Norway, has been appointed a member of the military commission of the storthing. She replaces Commissioner General Bratlie, and is the first woman in the country who has ever occupied a seat in the legislative assembly. She was formerly a school teacher in Christiania and is now fifty-four years old. She is a strong speaker and has also won a reputation as a clever debater.

The Norwegian army budget has been made up by the judiciary commission and presented to the storthing. The expenditures estimated amount to 16,000,000 crowns, which is an increase of over 950,000 crowns over last year's budget. The increase is due the fact that army reorganization has practically been decided upon by the government.

The population of Norway is increasing in the country districts and decreasing in the coast cities of the country.

DENMARK.

Henrik Andersen, a twenty-three-year-old Danish sailor who has for several years done service on the English steamer Milton, had a most strange experience a few weeks ago while on the way from Rosario, in the Argentine Republic, to England. When in the center of the Atlantic Andersen fell overboard without any of his shipmates paying any attention to it, for none of them were around when it happened. When the Milton arrived at Southampton, Eng., the captain of the ship reported to Andersen's relatives in Copenhagen that he had fallen overboard and been drowned and that his body could never be recovered. On Dec. 28, however, the selfsame Andersen who fell overboard from the vessel in question bobbed up at the Danish consulate in Buenos Ayres. He related at the consulate that after he had fallen overboard he had succeeded in keeping himself above water by means of swimming for five hours, when he was picked up by the English trawler, Notisement from Cardiff, which finally landed him in Buenos Ayres. One might well imagine the happiness and the joy which was evinced when Andersen came to visit his old mother and brothers and sisters between Christmas and New Year's.

During the past ten years Iceland, Denmark's far away dependency, has been making rapid progress, especially insofar as the fishing industry is concerned. Hitherto the whaling industry has been in the lead, but of latter years the fishing industry has been making as rapid and even more rapid strides. The general trade conditions of the islands have also vastly improved. Some time ago an English-American syndicate offered to build a harbor in Reykjavik, on the condition that the syndicate in question would be allowed to receive all the big income and the profits from the harbor for a period of thirty years. The city council, however, rejected the offer and has decided to erect its own harbor at a cost of [illegible] crowns.

Director Rudolph Wiese, for a number of years the manager of the large shoe factories at Roseland, in Odense, has been placed under arrest for embezzlement. The other day he made a confession that his embezzlements involved at least [illegible] crowns and that his operations in this line have been carried on for a period of five years. Some time ago he was compelled to make an assignment, when it was learned that his debts amounted to [illegible] crowns. The director in question has been engaged in vast speculations in South America and is also reported to have been an exceedingly high liver when in Copenhagen.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL

The interstate commerce commission has decided against the railroads in both the "Eastern" and "Western" cases. The decision was eagerly awaited by roads and shippers alike. Proposed advances in class freight rates in official classification territory, aggregating among all the railways in the territory approximately $27,000,000 a year, were disapproved by the commission. In the case involving the increases by the railroads in Western trunk line territory the commission also declined to approve the proposed advances in commodity rates. The carriers in both cases are required to cancel on or before March 10 their advanced tariffs and restore their former rates, which are the rates now in [illegible]

There is no asset with which young folks start out in life which begins to compare in importance and value with good health. In all too many cases we take this endowment as a matter of course—underrate and often despise it and wake up too late to a realization of the fact that we have impaired or destroyed it. It is a pretty good idea to look after our health as we go along.

It is all right to feel a keen interest in the conservation of the country's natural resources in the shape of timber and mineral wealth, but the average farmer has a good deal more pressing conservation problem on his hands in the matter of so handling the homemade manures that he will realize their approximate value of $2.25 per ton instead of allowing them to steam and leech and get but one-half or one-third of this amount from them.

With the fur business becoming more and more important each year and trappers getting handsome returns for their pelts, more interest should be taken by both trappers and buyers in a changing of the open season from Nov. 1 to Dec. 1. It is the consensus of opinion among those who have given the matter attention that much fur caught prior to Nov. 20 and classed as unprime would be rated as prime and fetch a much higher price if caught after Dec. 1.

The forest service is conducting an experiment in the foothills of southern California that is bound to be followed closely by all who are interested in the reclamation or use of millions of acres of rough and inaccessible desert land. Briefly, the experiment is the setting out in representative localities of 100,000 eucalyptus trees, for which the ground will not be prepared beyond the digging of a hole two feet across and fifteen inches deep. No attempt will be made to cultivate the little trees nor to keep the chaparral from growing about them, nor will there be any way in which they can be irrigated.

If the field on which the stalks are standing is well supplied with humus—decaying vegetable matter—there is no particular reason for cutting them to pieces and plowing them under, as the mineral fertilizing elements—phosphorous and potash—will be left in the soil in the shape of ashes in case the stalks were burned. But the fact remains that the vast majority of soils are deficient in humus; hence it is better to cut the stalks to pieces and plow them under. When silos are installed on every farm, as they ought to be, this question of what to do with the stalks will take care of itself, as the bulk of them will be converted into ensilage, with nothing but six to eight inches of stubs left afield.

Farm Values Booming.

The Hikkok farm in Red Lake county consisting of half a section of land, and bought in [illegible] by D. L. Hikkok for $850, was sold this week for $16,000. Hikkok will quit farming and dispose of all his stock and farming implements. Dairying is probably the secret of the increasing prices of farms.

DISTANCE TARIFF BILL KILLED

Cashman Measure Defeated in Upper Branch of State Legislature by Vote of 29 to 32.

The state senate has defeated the Cashman distance tariff bill, the final vote on the measure being 29 for and 32 against it. The opinions of Attorney General Simpson, ex-Attorney General Young and former Justice T. D. O'Brien that the passage of the bill would wipe out the work done by the state in the commodity rate cases were used with telling effect, but for these opinions the result might have been different.

The debate concerned itself only with the main arguments, Senators Cashman and Putnam speaking for it and Dwinnell and Clague against it. When they were through the vote was taken.

What is known as the university deficiency bill, calling for an appropriation of $636,442, was disposed of by the senate committee on finance after many days of hearings and figurings and delays for investigation of items, but only after all the items for equipment had been subjected to a flat cut of 10 per cent, or a total reduction of $64,340.

Initiative and referendum, by a vote of 57 to 50, was made a special order for Thursday, March 9, at the session of the house.

By a vote of six to five the house committee on compensation of public officials turned down the senate bill introduced by Senator Boyle to increase the salary of the state treasurer from $3,500 to $5,000. The bill already has passed the senate.

The senate, under suspension of the rules, passed the university deficiency bill introduced by Senator J. T. Elwell. Senator Elwell adopted the reduced figures on the estimated cost of equipment of the various university buildings and embodied them in a new bill.

OPPOSES EXTREME PENALTY

Governor Eberhart Fails to Fix Date for Hanging.

The Le Sueur county grand jury has requested the legislature to inquire why Governor Eberhart "refuses and neglects" to fix a date for the execution of Martin O'Malley, sentenced to death Oc. 29, 1910, by Judge Morrison.

Under the law the governor has ninety days after sentence is passed in which he is to fix a date for the execution. Governor Eberhart is opposed to capital punishment and is said to be unwilling to act.

The O'Malley case was taken before the state board of pardons, which considered it Jan. 9 and refused a commutation.

Representative McKenzie of Gaylord has a bill before the house and Senator Peterson of Litchfield has introduced it in the senate abolishing capital punishment. The governor has postponed action in the O'Malley case to await the legislature's course on the bill, which he strongly favors.

TO PROVIDE SAVINGS BANKS

Minnesota Bankers Urge Passage of New Bill.

A bank bill to permit the establishment of savings banks in every city and village of the state was proposed by a delegation of bankers at a joint meeting of the house and senate banking committees. The bankers said the object of the scheme is to compete with the government postal savings banks and keep the money for investment at home. Under the present law there are but ten savings banks in the state, these being confined to Minneapolis, St. Paul, Winona, Mankato and Red Wing.

CHILD IS SHOT BY PLAYMATE

Accidental Discharge of Shotgun Fatal to Girl.

Bowla Lovak, seven years of age, was accidentally shot through the heart at Ely when a shotgun in the hands of a neighbor boy, Joseph Kernz, seven years old, was accidentally discharged.

The boy took his father's shotgun down from above the bed, inserted a loaded shell, aimed at the little girl who was peeking at him through the door, which was opened slightly, and touched the trigger. The girl's death was instantaneous.

Denmark is a diminutive country, about one-third the size of an average state, yet it produces annually eight times as much in dairy products as Illinois.

In starting a dairy herd it is much better to pay two prices for the cows that the other fellow would like to keep than to take the ones he is perfectly willing to part with for a song.

The same difference in atmospheric conditions which relieves the dweller of low and humid sections of his asthma when he removes to a higher and drier country rids horses of the heaves if they make the same change.

One of the largest certified milk dairies in the country, which is located near Boston, is owned and operated by a woman, Mrs. Ware, and is known as the Wareland dairy. This field has been occupied by women in several instances and with eminent success.

There are many who hold that when the farmer in the northern half of the corn belt knows as much about raising alfalfa as he already does about growing corn and oats he will have little trouble in raising the legume. There would seem to be something in the contention.

The most important factor in the choice of a sire for the dairy herd is not the length of his pedigree or a hifalutin name, but the number of pounds of butter fat produced in a year by his dam, his grandam and great-grandam. This will be the only safe guarantee that he will beget heifer calves of a fixed milk giving habit.

Feeding tests which have been made by two or three experiment stations seem to show that if alfalfa is ground into meal there is a loss in feeding value of 5 or 6 per cent over that realized when the hay is fed in its natural state. Just why this is so is not stated, but it seems to be due to the beneficial effect of the thorough mastication given the coarser feed.

Just received at the flour mill, a car of nice oats which would do for seed. Call quick if you want some. Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.

~~THE~~ THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS

VOL. XXVIII THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1911 NUMBER 11

FARMERS' INSTITUTE

To Be Held In Lincoln High School Gymnasium on March 23rd and 24th.

Meetings to Be Held Under Auspices of Upper Minnesota Corn Growers Assn.

Prof. A. D. Wilson who has charge of the farmers' institutes for this state has decided on Thursday and Friday, March 23rd and 24th, as the dates on which will be held a two days' institute in the gymnasium of the high school. This meeting will be supplied with four men institute specialists and one lady, all of whom will be as competent as the state can supply. The meeting will be held under the auspices of the recently organized Upper Minnesota Corn Growers' Association and the agricultural department of the local high school. It will close the series of farmers' meetings which have been provided free this winter through the agency of the high school.

A pure seed contest will also be held in connection with the institute and the corn proposition will be emphasized. Premiums will be offered which will compel the attendance of a large number of contestants and the contest will be open to all the counties in northwestern and central upper Minnesota. The premium lists will be published and mailed next week. Competent judges will be on hand to make fair decisions. On the evening of Thursday, a popular entertainment will be presented which will be free to all in the city. No fees for entering this contest will be charged and everybody is requested to make the two days' institute and the seed contest as public as possible. The papers of next week will have the full particulars of the meeting. The Department of Agriculture,

Thief River Falls High School.

Basket Social.

A basket social will be held at Nels Burtness' place in school district No. 25, town of Smiley, Saturday evening, March 11th at 8 p. m. Everybody invited. Ladies bring your baskets and the men bring their pocket books.

Citizens Papers.

Those desiring citizens papers should take the advantage now while they have the chance, and get their applications filed with Clerk of Court H. E. Ives before the 24th of March.

This is the last chance for a year hence, unless a sufficient number of applications are filed to merit a special term which is hardly likely.

Getting In Readiness for Spring.

Sherwood & Pike, contractors, who have the contract to dig a ditch up near Erie are receiving the dredge machinery over the Great Northern on flat cars and are having it hauled out to Erie to have it on the ground preparatory to an early start as soon as the frost goes out of the ground. Newbery & Co. have the contract for hauling the machinery.

Huge Dredge Nearly Completed.

Dredge No. 1, the huge dredge which has been manufactured at the Northwestern Drainage Shops in the western portion of this city, is nearly completed and will in a short time be loaded on flat cars and shipped up to Steiner.

Zion Church.

Services will be held at Zion church Sunday at 10:30 a m and 7:45 p m and Sunday school 2:00 p m.

The society of Zion church meets Friday evening in church basement at 8 o'clock. Mrs. E. Aspelund entertains.

A. L. Larson, pastor.

Bids Wanted.

School Dist. No. 55, town of Silverton, will receive sealed bids for the erection of a school house in the southeast corner of section 14. Bids will be received by the clerk of the school district up to March 25. Plans and specifications can be seen at this office. The clerk reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

P. J. Staaks, Clerk.
(2t.) Mavie, P. O., Minn.

Large Ice House Nearly Completed.

The large ice house which is being constructed by the Soo railway north of their depot in this city, is nearly completed and has already been put into practical use. All that remains now is a coat of paint and a few finishing touches. The building is an exceptionally large one and will be a great convenience to the company. Considerable ice has been shipped in and stored therein and will be used for cold storage purposes.

Goes To Grygla Country.

"Doc" Anderson, who has had charge of the large machine shop in this city for the Northwestern Drainage company, this winter, has left this city and gone to the Grygla country where he will have charge of the drainage work in that vicinity during the course of the summer.

Minnesota's Forest Reserves.

The forests of virgin pine, which one time covered all the northern half of Minnesota, are very rapidly melting away before the demands of the civilized world for lumber. Our grandchildren will have to make quite a pilgrimage to see a little of the forest which not long ago surrounded us on all sides. Indeed, were it not for the State and National Forests, government-owned and protected by law, they might look for real lumber forests in vain.

Minnesota has four of these State Forests, or "Forest Reserves" as they are sometimes called; and the people should be better acquainted with them, for they are full of interest.

Probably the most accessible, and at the present time the most interesting of these, is the Itasca State Park. Within its thirty-five square miles are the sources of the Great Father of Waters, in themselves of absorbing interest, especially to those living on the lower reaches of the river. At the south end of Lake Itasca is a log hotel, fully equipped to comfortably house a limited number of guests. Near the north end of the lake is the summer home of the Minnesota College of Forestry, a department of the State University. Here from fifteen to twenty students are at work, from the first of May to the first of September. Here also are the nurseries where pine seedlings are being grown with which to re-stock the cut-over and burned over portions of the forest. The surrounding forests contain all the types and all the animals of the north woods. The lover of nature can imagine himself within the untamed forest of the early days of the country, if he does not wander too far and come upon the desolated regions without the boundaries.

Up near Cloquet, the state has recently acquired, through a gift, a small tract of 2,700 acres. This differs somewhat from the other state forests, in that it is under control of the Board of Regents rather than the Forestry Board. The Cloquet forest is to be devoted to experimental work. All the problems of establishing and caring for a forest will be here studied. At present it is only a park of very pretty timber; but in a few years it will offer the added interest of the progressing experiments. It is well worth a visit, even now.

Far up on the point of land running eastward to the north of Lake Superior, and touching on Burntside Lake, the state has another reserve of 28,000 acres, known as the Burntside Forest. Nothing has been done by the state to improve this property. Its chief interest at present lies in the fact that it affords some delightful camp sites and is located in one of the most ideal countries in the world for the canoe lover.

And, lastly, there is the Pillsbury Reserve, located on Gull Lake, about 20 miles west of Brainerd. This is not exactly a "forest" at present. Gov. Pillsbury created it by giving to the state 1,000 acres of cut over land; and the large trees growing there are very scattered. However, the State Forestry Board has planted there several hundred thousand seedlings of Norway spruce—probably the largest forest plantation in the state—which will in a few years make it of great interest.

These little patches are but a nucleus of the great forests which the state must some day maintain, to supply its citizens with the lumber which they must have for so many of the purposes of civilization.—E. G. Cheney, University Farm.

HAS 4,692 NAMES

The Total Number of Names In City Directory Is 4,692.

Places Population of Thief River Falls Way Ahead of the Census Report.

John H. Ley has finished the work of compiling the second directory for this city and received the result of his labors last Tuesday. The directory is well gotten up, strongly bound and with its green cover presents a most elaborate appearance.

Mr. Ley has had years of experience in the directory publishing business and his work is highly recommended in the places where he is working, and he has one of the most accurate systems known to directory publishers.

We publish the following introduction by the publisher of the directory:

For the second time, the publisher of the Thief River Falls City Directory submits to a critical and discerning public the results of his labors to furnish a complete and accurate guide to the city. While he has never spared any efforts in making the book the best and most satisfactory of its class of publications, he would be much dissatisfied with himself were he to fail in improving his work with each issue.

It was felt that in this census year, of all years, a criterion should be established by which to gauge the future years, and the publisher boldly challenges the census as to results. The figures obtained this year are not estimated, but secured by a complete count of the directory system. It is not too much to claim that in every respect the directory is a more reliable and accurate index to Thief River Falls than even the census of the government, that mysterious something, which like Caesar, can make no errors.

Let us compare the work of the directory compiler with that of the census enumerator. The directory compiler has the last issued book to check by, and if a name fails to appear this year a special messenger goes to hunt it up to see whether the party has left the city. The census enumerator works on in blissful ignorance of the many he never sees. The compiler takes every man's name twice—once at his residence and again throughout the business district to secure a check on all persons employed. The census enumerator takes a name only at the place where the party sleeps, and this single enumeration allows many errors and omissions. The census man is limited as to time, and must get his schedules in at the appointed hour; the directory compiler has an abundance of time in which to examine and verify every item. The census men are necessarily inexperienced men (in this line of work), working under half understood instructions at a forced and rapid pace in order to finish their work on time; the directory compilers are men who have spent their lives at this business, and who have thoroughly systematized their work until the result of their labors became as nearly perfect as work of that class can be. The census man's beggarly pay makes it necessary for him to hurry through his work as quickly as possible, and it would be absurd to expect him to spend extra time going over his territory in hopes of finding the persons he has missed, especially when the missed number will never be discovered, as the records are not published or open for inspection. The pages of the city directory, however, are open to the public inspection, and disastrous are the results if a name be found missing. The publisher has a personal interest in making no ommissions, as his success for the future depends upon popular judgment given after a close examination of the present year's volume. On these grounds, then, we fear not to challenge a comparison of the conclusion of the census with those of our work. If there be any discrepancy between the two as to results, we deny that the inaccuracy is in the directory. Have we not given sufficient reasons for so doing?

In the present count we have found the population of Thief River Falls to be 4,692, of which 2,520 are persons above the age of eighteen years, and 2,172 below that age. As the County seat of the new Pennington County, Thief River Falls' future growth is assured, so WATCH US GROW.

To Give Entertainment.

On the 17th of March the Brage Choir will give an entertainment in the Auditorium, assisted by local talent and the T. R. Falls Norwegian Dramatic Club will give the Norwegian musical comedy "Til Saters."

"En Krans of hjemlige melodier. Vi samlet har fra the norske lier, lidt godt Humor har vi lagt dertel."

It is sure to be a very enjoyable affair, a small admission within reach of everybody will be charged and the proceeds of the evening entertainment will go towards paying the expenses connected with getting the great sangerfest here in the later part of June this year. A complete program will be published later.

Class Play.

The annual class play of the graduating class of the Thief River Falls high school will be presented at the Auditorium on Friday, March 31st. A matinee for the children will take place in the afternoon.

The students are determined to entertain their friends at this time in a commendable manner and those who have witnessed the practices claim that the play and the work of the players are of a high standard. All lovers of bright clean amateur work ought to arrange their dates so that at least this play by a local company will have a generous patronage and attendance. The synopsis of the play and the cast of characters will appear in the paper of next week.

A Good Drawing Card.

Birch and Birch, comedians at the Lyceum the first half of this week, proved a great drawing card for the popular theatre, which was packed to over-flowing at every performance.

These comedians have something new in the novelty line, and the song "Take Me Back to New York" accompanied by a mechanical illuminated street scene effect entitled, "New York by Moonlight" proved to be the feature of the program.

The pictures were all good, but better than the average was the "Demon" acted by the Tanhauser people.

Bond Issue Carries.

The election held last Saturday evening to vote on the question whether or not the bonds of Independent School District No. 18 of this city, be sold to the state in the aggregate sum of $12,000, resulted in a vote of 41, all in favor of selling the bonds.

This amount will be used for the purpose of completing the Lincoln high school and will draw a rate of interest at 4 per cent per annum.

Demand on the Increase.

The Northern Culvert Company's factory is one of the busiest places in the city these days in taking care of all the orders and caring for large contracts to furnish their metal culverts.

The corrugated metal culverts as manufactured by this factory is fast becoming recognized as the essential article for culverts and the demand is bound to be on the increase.

Every week sees a large number of these huge tubes loaded on sleighs and hauled out in the country or loaded on flat cars and shipped to various points throughout the state, where they are put on the ground in readiness for work in the early spring. To judge by all indications the present year will see more roadmaking and culvert building than any previous year in this part of the state, which is evidence to the fact that the people of Northern Minnesota are alive to the good roads question.

New Machine Shop.

Chas. Gustafson & Son have opened up a machine shop just across the street from the Big Wheel blacksmith shop on Main avenue. They will handle the Minnesota State Prison machinery and twine, Fuller and Johnson machinery etc. See the announcement elsewhere in this issue.

Announcement.

New Machine dealers in this city. Location across the street from big wheel black smith shop on Main Ave. Will handle Minnesota State Prison machinery and twine, Fuller & Johnson machinery etc. For all kinds of farm implements, see Chas. Gustafson & Son.

At the national corn show held the latter part of January at Columbus O., the first prize of $1,000 for the best ten ears of corn exhibited was awarded to Roy Clore, a lad nineteen years old, of Franklin, Ind. It will be remembered that his father, L. B. Clore won the championship prize in 1907 and 1908 and was barred from competing, but it is a fair assumption that the boy had some of the old gentleman's seed corn as well as the benefit of his many years of experience.

In serving as a judge of an exhibit of grains at a farmers' institute a short time since the writer weighed a sample of Swedish select oats that tested forty-two pounds to the bushel and two other samples of white oats that weighed forty pounds to the bushel each. Several samples of wheat examined showed a like plumpness and soundness of berry, which furnished proof that the heat moisture conditions for the maturing of the grain were as nearly ideal as could be.

In the mining of gold and silver at Leadville, Colo., for years past little attention has been paid to the thousands of tons of oxides or other metals which have been cast aside as worthless. Lately, however, it has been found that this waste contains a very large per cent of zinc oxide of a very high grade, while there are literally millions of tons of it untouched in the neighborhood. It is estimated that this newly realized source of wealth will bring to Leadville more revenue than was ever received for all her silver and gold.

To one who has made the rail trip across the Utah deserts it seems impossible that men from the more humid eastern states would have the hardihood to locate there and undertake dry farming, and yet this is exactly what is being done. As a result the big sheepmen who have herded their flocks on the mountains in the summer months and in the winter on the deserts, where they subsist on sagebrush and cactus, contend that this movement of settlers to the desert means the ultimate extinction of the grazing business as it has been known in years past.

Among the diseases which are known to be caused by microbes are tuberculosis, pneumonia, diphtheria, typhoid fever, lockjaw, blood poisoning, malaria, sleeping sickness, bubonic plague, cholera, dysentery and cerebro-spinal meningitis. Other diseases not yet proved to be caused by germs, but believed by scientific men to be, are scarlet fever, measles, yellow fever, rabies and infantile paralysis. Of all these maladies several have been deprived of their former terror by the serum treatment, chief among them being diphtheria, for which the antitoxin treatment is now given with most gratifying results.

many other dairy states the percentage of "loafers" is so large. This situation should be remedied, and the only cure there is lies through the use of the Babcock test to determine butter fat content of milk and a careful weighing of milkings at intervals to determine the volume given in the course of a year.

FIRST TERM OF COURT

First Term of District Court Held In the City Last Thursday.

Two Cases of Minor Importance Came up Before Judge Grindeland.

The first term of the district court for Pennington county was held last Thursday, March the second, Judge Grindeland, of Warren, presiding.

Two cases of minor importance came up at this term, and are the following:

Thomas Gulseth vs. Helene and Halvor Anderson.

Langseth Mercantile company vs. Ed Wilcox.

The latter case was taken under court for advisement.

To Whom It May Concern.

Attention is hereby called to ordinance No. 60, of the city of Thief River Falls, Minn., and pursuant thereof you are hereby notified to at once remove all nickel-in-the-slot machines or Gambling devices, used for the purpose of gambling for money or other valuable thing, in any house or place of business. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of said ordinance will be prosecuted according to law.

Respectfully,
T. P. Hamre, Mayor

Lenten services in Thief River Falls Thursday, (today) at 10:30, in the forenoon, and again on next Thursday evening, March 16th at 7:15 p. m.

Sunday school next Sunday at 10 o'clock.

Services at Germantown next Sunday March 12th at 10 o'clock. Religious instructions Saturday afternoon from 1 to 4.

Times Forthcoming This Week.

The Times, the new weekly paper to be published by H. E. Mussey in this city, as we undestand it, will make its appearance Friday of this week. The machinery and type cases have all been installed and all that remains now is to start the ball a-rollin'.

Altho we cannot help but believe that the size of the town and the patronage would hardly merit the issuance of a third weekly paper, at present, at least, nevertheless, we extend to the managers our hand of good fellowship and wish them success in their venture.

Symphony Orchestra Coming.

Miss Huldah Voedisch, representing the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra is in the city working up the big concert to be given at the Auditorium Sunday March 26 at 8.15 P. M. If sufficient tickets can be subscribed for within the next few days Thief River Falls will have an opportunity of hearing one of the greatest orchestras in the world. Appearing with the orchestra are five world renowned soloists: Lucille Tewksbury, Soprano; Genevieve Wheat, Contralto; Charles Hargreaves, Tenor; Marcus Kellerman, Bass; and Carlo Fisher, cellist. The orchestra is composed of some of the best musicians in this country and Europe, and has a personnel of 50 men on tour. Emil Oberhoffer, the director is recognized by leading musicians and critics as one of the greatest conductors in the world.

Hauges Synods Church Notice.

I. L. Lasseen, Pastor.

Service next Sunday 10:30 a. m. and 8 p. m. at the Adventist church near Soo depot.

Sunday school, 2 p. m.

Ladies Aid meets with Mrs. Lewis Nelson, Tuesday, March 14, 2 p. m.

All are cordially invited.

KARLSKRONA FACTORY BURNED

Was Largest Clothing Manufacturing Establishment in Sweden—Norwegian Farmers Organizing on American Lines—Danish Students' Chorus to Start for Tour of the United States Early in May.

SWEDEN.

Karlskrona had a big fire the other day when the Wahlquist Clothing company's buildings were burned to the ground. The fire started at 2 o'clock in the morning and before the fire department arrived on the scene the main building was doomed. The fire soon spread to the adjoining buildings and the entire plant was destroyed. The chief stockholder in the company was Consul C. A. Swahn. It was the largest and most important clothing factory in the entire country. The loss entailed is estimated to exceed 460,000 crowns.

Andres Zorn, the eminent portrait painter, has gone to Berlin, where he is to paint some prominent persons. After completing his work in Berlin he will depart for the United States, where he has been asked to act as juryman at the Pittsburg art exhibition. He has also been engaged to paint portraits of one or two prominent citizens in Pittsburg. Mr. Zorn's portrait of Mrs. Taft has been very favorably commented on in Washington.

Johnkheer J. J. O. Bicker of The Hague is at present in Stockholm in the interest of the much talked of Swedish-American Steamship line. He is trying to interest a number of capitalists to take stock in the new company and it is believed that his efforts in this direction will be crowned with success. In Gothenburg a lot of stock has already been disposed of. The terminus of the new line on the American side will be Montauk, L. I.

"Orpei Drangar," the famous Upsala Student chorus, is planning a concert trip in Russia this summer. They will appear principally in the Baltic provinces and may extend their tour to St. Petersburg. It had been hoped by many Swedish-American song lovers that this organization would come to America, but it seems that hitherto it has been impossible to arrange such a thing.

In the death of the eminent poet, Gustaf Froding, Sweden has lost one of its great men. Perhaps no poet of modern times has so successfully succeeded in endearing himself in the hearts of the people as Froding. The tones of his lyre have been heard over the entire country and spread sunshine and joy in cottage and palace alike.

Says an exchange: "The plans for a free harbor at Malmo are so comprehensive that when they are carried through Malmo will have the second largest commercial harbor in the world. The leading business men of Copenhagen are beginning to worry lest they lose some of their trade to the energetic Swedish competitor."

Bank Director Wallenberg celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as president of the Stockholm Enskilda bank Jan. 28. The directors of the bank gave a banquet in his honor and Mr. Wallenberg presented a check of $50,000 to the bankers' pension fund. Mr. Wallenberg has now donated over $100,000 to this fund.

Major O. M. Biornstierna, who died a few weeks ago, in his will made a donation of 25,000 crowns to the Red Cross society of Stockholm. Of this amount 15,000 crowns will go to the Red Cross hospital in Stockholm and the remainder is to constitute a fund known as the Biornstierna fund.

Otto Unee, associate editor of the Nya Dagligt Allehanda, celebrated his fortieth anniversary in the service of the aforesaid mentioned paper the other day. He was made a member of the editorial staff of the paper in January, 1871, and has remained at his post ever since.

Jewish mission work has been carried on for 100 years in Sweden. The first missionary, Moritz, was a native Jew, who came to Gothenburg in 1811 and worked among the people of his nationality. Later he went to Stockholm and began work there.

The street cars of Stockholm, which have carried mail during the last five years, are now carrying on an average of about 4,000 letters a day. In the beginning they carried only about 1,200 letters a day.

A committee has been appointed in Stockholm to start a national subscription for August Strindberg, the author and playwright. The movement will be a popular one and all classes of people will join it.

The city of Stockholm will expend 2,024,922 crowns for the expansion of the city electric works on Regerings street in the near future.

The city of Halmstad is to have a new hotel. Some time ago the Halmstad people thought that the Grand Hotel, which was recently erected there, was too large, but it is now evinced that it cannot begin to accommodate even the traveling public. The new hotel is all the more necessary because of the trades exposition which the city is planning for 1912.

NORWAY.

Norwegian farmers are commencing to organize and are holding farmers' institutes. Last month several hundred farmers from the southwestern part of the country attended a farmers' convention at Stavanger and the meeting proved to be a most enthusiastic one. There were several lectures given on the various branches and methods of farming and all the farmers who attended found the convention to be a most instructive one. It is now certain that similar conventions will be held in the future, for the Norwegian farmer has determined that he is not going to take a back seat any longer. The farmers' union of Stavanger was organized with a membership of fifty. The Farmers' Supply company decided to buy a property in Stavanger, which is to be used as a warehouse, the price agreed upon being $20,000. It is only a question of time until similar organizations will be effected in all the farming districts of the country.

The "Kapellmester" of the National theater, Johan Halvorsen of Christiania, is busy writing the music for an operetta, the text of which will be supplied by Attorney Dybwad, who is the husband of the famous Norwegian actress, Madame Dybwad. The scene will center around a modern North polar expedition, which never reaches the North pole. It is freely predicted that when the operetta is completed that it will prove to be an exceedingly popular one and the papers have liberally advertised it already.

Olaf, the popular little crown prince, is approaching his school years and has for the time being been placed under the tutelage of Miss Haldis Bamhoff, who is graduate of the Christiania university. The little prince is now taking lessons in reading and writing and has to apply himself very diligently for at least two hours every day. He is a bright little prince and is easily the most popular member of Norway's royal family.

In 1908 the merchant marine of Bergen ranked No. 1, with a tonnage of 368,400, Christiania following with a tonnage of 326,000. But by Jan. 1 last year, Christiania had jumped to the head of the column with a total tonnage of 411,000, while Bergen had only 406,000 at that date. Figures are not available for the past year, but it is supposed that Christiania has left her competitor still farther to the rear.

Mrs. Brumwell Booth, a niece of General Booth, the leader of the Salvation Army, delivered an interesting talk on the condition among the poor and distressed in the Bergen cathedral some time ago. She was given the undivided atention of a large and appreciative audience and a large collection was taken, the proceeds to be given to the deserving poor of that city.

At the end of the year 1910 there were twenty-five paper mills in operation throughout the country, producing over 27,000,000 crowns' worth of paper for the year. About 10 per cent of the output remains in Norway and the remainder is exported to foreign countries.

Dr. Sigurd Ibsen will assume editorial charge of the Aftenposten March 1. This well known Norwegian politician and writer is certainly a most valuable addition to the staff of the Aftenposten.

DENMARK.

The Danish Students' chorus has been selected and the students will start for America to begin their concert tour in the early part of May. Director Thalberg of Stockholm will be the impressario. The chorus, which consists of fifty picked voices, will start from Copenhagen May 4 on the Oscar II. of the Scandinavian-American line and they are expected to arrive in New York May 16. The home journey will start June 8 on the United States. The soloists of the chorus will be Messrs. Helge, Nissen and Holboll. The leader of the chorus will be S. Devysohn, who has for years been connected with the Royal opera in Copenhagen. Their concerts in the American cities they will visit will be under the auspices of the Danish American association and thus the financial part of the tour is vouchsafed from the start. Director Thalberg will arrive in New York during the early part of next month to make the preliminary arrangements.

Plans are under way by a Copenhagen syndicate to erect a new Tivoli, which in point of grandeur will exceed anything that has ever been attempted in this line in the Danish capital. The syndicate in question controls large capital and will proceed to erect an amusement building of large proportions.

The so called "winter restaurants," where the poor and unemployed are given meals free of charge by the associated charities of Copenhagen, were opened Feb. 1 and are proving to be a blessing for the deserving poor. As many as 500 people have been fed daily in these restaurants.

Odense is putting up a $75,000 theater. The managing director of the new playhouse will be Consul Christensen.

The FREE Sewing Machine

This "different" machine, this "superior" machine, this perfect master piece—the machine of your imagination which you sighed for every time the thread slipped around the spool pin of your old machine and broke, every time its shuttle wore out, every time its stitch slipped, every time its needle broke, every time your back became weary and your feet became tired, this machine with its 32 fault-removing inventions we now offer to you at your own terms as low as

$1.00 A Week

The price is so low that we promised Mr. Wm. C. Free, the inventor of this 20th Century machine that we would never publish it. You are accustomed to paying so much more for machines which are not near so good that it will be hard for you to realize that the lower priced FREE sews faster, runs lighter, is more beautiful, lasts longer and makes a more perfect stitch than the highest priced machine on the market. To appreciate the price you must first come to our store and see the quality.

Then as an evidence of the implicit faith we have in The FREE ourselves, we want you to give it a right in your own home. Sew on it. Test it on all sorts of material.

30 DAYS TRIAL

Then if after 30 days you are not entirely satisfied—if you are not absolutely convinced that it is the best machine you have ever sewed on—the most improved—the most up-to-date—and at its low price, the biggest bargain you ever made—return the machine to us and we will refund all you have paid on it so that the trial will not cost you one cent.

We make this offer because we know that when you notice for 30 days how ornamental its beautiful French Leg design, its golden oak finish and its dustless japanning are.

When you find out how convenient it is—

—how when the machine is closed, the drawers are automatically locked—

—how when you raise the lid, the head lifts automatically—the drawers unlock and the belt is on—

—how just a touch on the Improved Head Latch button release the head—

—how the 8 sets of Ball Bearings make it so light running that treadle will keep running 3 minutes longer than other machines—

—how the Rotoscillo Movement makes it faster than the fastest Rotary and simpler than the simplest Round Bobbin Machine——and how it has a score of other improvements—

—Then after you have enjoyed all these conveniences for 30 days, you will never be satisfied to be without The Free. Come tomorrow and take The Free home with you for a 30 days trial.

OFFERED A CHAIR AT YALE

Dr. Sven Hedin, Swedish Explorer, Undecided About Occupying the Position—Herman Gade, Former Norwegian Consul at Chicago, a Man Without a Country—Iceland Divided on Separation From Denmark.

SWEDEN.

Dr. Sven Hedin announces that it will take him a number of years to complete his works on his travels and explorations in Central Africa. When asked the other day whether he contemplated a lecture tour to America, he would not discuss the proposition whatsoever, stating that his time was so taken up that he had not been able to give the many propositions that he had received from that source any serious consideration. He has also been offered the chair in geography at Yale university, but thus far he has not given the faculty of that institution any reply. While he may not be willing at this time to make any statement to the press it is quite possible that his answer to the call from Yale will be forthcoming soon. At any rate Dr. Hedin will be placed in a position where he must give a definite answer to the regents of that institution at no distant date.

That Gustaf Froding, the late poet, was close to the hearts of the Swedish people is more evident after his death than ever before. Indeed, the whole nation seems to mourn him. His verses are now being read more fervently than ever and all classes of people unite in lauding his memory. In the Second chamber of the riksdag resolutions of sympathy were adopted and telegraphed to the poet's family. The resolutions of sympathy were unanimously adopted by the lawmakers and scores of them attended his funeral.

Ernest L. Harris, United States consul at Smyrna, has been appointed United States consul at Stockholm to succeed Consul Winslow, who recently resigned. Mr. Harris is forty-one years old, is a jurist and was graduated from the University of Iowa a number of years ago. He has spent several years at Heidelberg university, converses readily in the German language and is married to a German lady. Consul General Winslow has been placed in charge of the United States consulate at Plauen, Germany.

A committee of five representatives from Sweden, three from Norway and two from Denmark met recently in Gothenburg, Sweden, to make arrangements for a general conference of Methodists of the three countries. The conference will be held in the latter part of this month or in the first week in April in Gothenburg. The president of the conference will be Bishop Burt of Zurich.

United States Minister Graves and wife tendered a dinner to a number of their friends in Stockholm last month to which had been invited a number of the members of the foreign legations and members of the Swedish diplomatic corps. Minister and Mrs. Graves are occupying a beautiful suite of rooms on Strandvagen.

Stockholm's oldest inhabitant, Miss Johanna Berns, who celebrated her 103d birthday in September, took ill several weeks ago and was confined to her bed for about six weeks. Strangely enough she has rallied and is now able to be up and about and says that she is feeling better every day.

The Danish royal family were present at the baptism of the Duke of Ostergotland, which occurred March 1 at the royal palace. Hundreds of curious people lined the streets of Stockholm between the Central station and the royal palace to get a look at the distinguished Danish guests.

The national debt of Sweden is $25.75 per capita; that of Denmark $31.50 and that of Norway $38 for each inhabitant. But the national debt of the great powers is far greater. That of Germany, for instance, is $71.50 per head; that of Great Britain $81.25 and France $151.50.

The mission board of the Swedish state church recently appropriated 30,000 crowns for seaman and other foreign missions. This would indicate that there is still a great deal of interest evinced for foreign missions by the state church of Sweden.

Dimitri Stanciow, envoy plenipotentiary for Bulgaria in Paris, visited Stockholm recently to formally notify King Gustaf of King Ferdinand's ascension to the Bulgarian throne.

A French zoologist, Professor Loisel of the University of Sorbonne, recently delivered a lecture on Skansen in Paris, which was attended by a large number of French scientists.

During the year 1910 the amount of money spent for the poor in Stockholm is estimated to have been nearly 3,500,000 crowns.

NORWAY.

Herman Gade, former Norwegian consul in Chicago and former mayor of Lake Forest, who renounced his American citizenship to return to Norway and enter the Norse diplomatic service, is a man without a country. The Norwegian government has refused to grant him citizenship until he has lived in Norway two years and by reason of strong political pressure against him he has failed to obtain the promised post in the department of foreign affairs. This is the news contained in a leading article in Aftenposten, the leading newspaper of Christiania. As a result of his predicament, Mr. Gade threatens to start suit against the Norwegian department of justice to test his right under the constitution of Norway. According to an interview with an official of the Norway department of justice, Mr. Gade was refused citizenship on the basis of an error in the application, and because, if it were granted immediately, it would be a violation of a treaty with the United States. The error made by Mr. Gade in his application, according to the statement of the Norway department official, consisted in his failing to request a reply. Thus the department regarded the application merely as a "declaration of intention" to become a Norwegian citizen. Mr. Gade found equally insurmountable obstacles placed in his way of entering the foreign office, a route he hoped would lead him into the diplomatic service and eventually land him in the post of Norwegian minister at Washington.

Sigurd Ibsen, former premier of Norway, has recently completed a literary work, entitled "The Quintessence of Humanity." The book is now in the hands of the publishers and will make its appearance some time during the latter part of this month. Mr. Ibsen is one of the country's leading statesmen and is prominently known all over the country as an unusually able man. People in all professions are eagerly looking for the book and that it will be widely read throughout Norway goes without saying. Arrangements have already been made to have the book translated into the German and Swedish languages.

At the close of the year 1909 the merchant marine of Norway consisted of 1,740 steamers, having a combined tonnage of 1,421,310, and 1,278 sailing vessels, of 616,957 tons. There were also ninety-nine motor ships. The number of steamers was increased by forty-two during the year, but at the same time there was a decrease of sixty-seven sailing vessels. Altogether there was a decrease of sixteen vessels, but the tonnage increased 9,951. The value of the entire merchant marine decreased $1,350,000 and it was put at a trifle over $80,000,000 at the close of the year.

During the year of 1910 there were shipped from Stavanger alone canned herring and anjovis to the amount of 13,000,000 crowns. Norway ships an immense amount of delicatessen herring and sardines to all European and American ports and is today taking the lead among the nations in the export of this particular kind of fish.

The largest barrel factory in Europe is under course of construction at Notodden. It has been started by the Rjukan Saltpeter company and will, when completed, have an output of 3,000 barrels a day. About 500 men will be employed. The enterprise starts out in good hands and there is plenty of capital back of it.

The so called "Nordmansforbundet," whose membership throughout the world now comprises some 22,000 persons, of whom half reside in America, has decided to present the city of Rouen with a "bauta" stone in honor of Normandy's thousandth anniversary, which is to be celebrated there in the near future.

Professor Axel Brugge has been delivering a series of interesting historical lectures in Bergen, which has been unusually well attended. He has taken up one after another of the country's leading historians and writers of history and the series has been a singularly instructive one.

Morten Muller, the Norwegian painter, is seriously ill at Duseldorf, Germany. He went there about a year ago to do work in connection with the international art exhibition there and shortly after his arrival he was compelled to take to his bed. His recovery is doubtful.

The Geological society in London awarded Professor Brogger the Wollaston medal, which is the highest distinction within the gift of that society.

DENMARK.

There is a great deal of political discussion going at present in Iceland, Denmark's dependency adjoining the polar seas. One party supports the government and does not care to have any change of government and the other party, which seems to be the strongest, is in favor of complete independence for the island. It would be interesting to see what move Denmark would make in the event that the people of the island would vote for an independent form of government.

Electric automobiles will soon be in general use for mail service in Copenhagen. They will prove unusually handy and will enable mail carriers to deliver mail to the various residences in double quick order.

All the members of the Danish royal family are in Stockholm to attend the christening of the little Duke of Ostergotland.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

George T. Simpson, attorney general, has refused the request of J. A. Duffy of Red Lake Falls for a writ of quo warranto to test the legality of the organization of Pennington county. Mr. Simpson states that while ordinarily a request of this sort is granted, it appears that in this case no fact or argument has been presented from which it might appear that the public good requires such procedure.

The internal revenue collections for Minnesota for February, 1911, show a considerable increase over those of February, 1910. The collections this year were $126,722.05, and last year $113,652.83, an increase of $13,069.22. The collections for the eight months ending Feb. 28, 1910, were $1,287,[illegible], and for the same period in 1910-1911, $1,512,188.65, an increase of $224,[illegible].

There are 150,000 women wage earners in Minnesota, according to Mrs. Perry Starkweather of the department of women and children, an adjunct of the state bureau of labor. This figure is only an estimate, but she bases it on the fact that figures [illegible] in 1906 placed [illegible] women wage earners at that time.

Locating Engineer Walter and his assistants have arrived from Chicago and have begun surveying for the electric line which it is proposed to run from Worthington to Albert Lea. The work is expected to take three or four weeks. Steps will then be taken to finance the road, and, if successful, to build it.

Mr. Gustave Scholle of St. Paul, who is in the diplomatic service, has been given a promotion by President Taft. Mr. Scholle, who is now second secretary of the embassy at Paris, was nominated by the president to be secretary of the legation at Madrid.

James Cummings claims his reputation was damaged by an arrest on a larceny charge and has brought suit against the Duluth Telephone company for $15,250. He was charged with stealing a quantity of copper wire and was acquitted by a jury.

That the city of Little Falls is on a bed of iron ore is the firm belief of many interested in ore discoveries. All indications point to a range which will rival Cuyuna and which runs parallel to that range.

John A. Oace, assistant to the clearing house examiner at St. Paul and Minneapolis, has been appointed a national bank examiner for Minnesota.

Eveleth will have free mail delivery on April 1. There will be three carriers and one substitute carrier appointed for the initial service.

At the request of the Humane society Governor Eberhart has designated Friday, April 21, as Bird and Arbor day in Minnesota.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Amos Crossland, who, about two weeks ago, disappeared from Royalton, and who, it is alleged, took $600 of the Powers Elevator company's money. An agent of the bonding company swore out the warrant and says that the shortage in Crossland's accounts will probably be near $2,000.

Governor A. O. Eberhart has authorized a reward of $250 to be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Mrs. J. E. Henson of Minneapolis, who was shot to death near her home the night of Jan. 21.

The preliminary hearing of Severt Simpson for the murder of Theodore A. Nelson in the room of the wife of the deceased in Crookston Feb. 15 at [illegible] night resulted in Simpson being held to the district court without bail.

Alsom Liddholm, aged forty-seven, started to walk across a plank extended between two buildings at Duluth. He fell to the ground and was killed.

Leonard Husted, aged fifty, is dead at Minneapolis of a fractured skull sustained in an automobile accident.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

Following her mother by less than three days, Miss Lucia M. [illegible], principal of the Webster school and one of the oldest teachers in point of service in St. Paul, is dead. Both Mrs. Miller and her daughter were ill for many weeks, the death of the former being due to paralysis and the latter to pleuro-pneumonia. Miss Miller's death was caused largely by the desperate attempt she made to nurse her mother back to health.

Henry Pennington, formerly a resident of Minneapolis and recently an auditor in the offices of the Great Northern railroad at Portland, Ore., is dead in the latter city. Mr. Pennington was in the drug business at Monticello over twenty years and also had a store at Staples, Minn. He was about fifty-three years of age.

Charles Saxrud of Fowlds is dead at Bemidji of heart failure. Mr. Saxrud had been a hotelkeeper at Fowlds several years. He was at one time a Beltrami county commissioner.

Having just begun his twenty-first term in the Minneapolis workhouse since July, 1886, Michael Kelley, forty-seven years old, died of heart disease at that institution.

Frank [illegible], Jr., a leader in Twin City and Northwest musical circles for a quarter of a century, is dead at St. Paul. Death resulted from a chronic ailment. He was sixty years old.

William W. Pease, fifty-three years of age, for many years a merchant of St. Paul, died of pneumonia at Fargo, N. D.

THE GOOD AND THE BAD

Investments, like people, are of two kinds—good and bad. What puzzles us, is that so many good people choose bad investments when there are good ones to be had.

Why should they buy far-away gold mines and oil wells from strangers, when their home bank, which is always with them, offers them good interest on their surplus money?

Our certificate of deposit is the safe and sane investment.
It never slumps in value.
Its integrity is unquestioned.
The return is certain.
The principal is always available.
It has no element of speculation.
It bears 5 per cent interest.

If you do not put your money in the bank, you are not doing your share in building up the community.

Money is like blood—to do good it must circulate.

The house has passed the bill abolishing capital punishment in Minnesota. It will surely pass the senate and become law.

The commercial club at it's last meeting appointed a special committee to report on the matter of making an exhibit at the state fair.

We are taking on metropolitan airs. Three new electric signs will be placed over the entrance to Hornseth's confectionery, Palace restaurant, and Martin & Roarks saloon.

The character and inadquacy of the depot accommodation of the two roads entering this city, is a matter frequently commented on. It scarcely meets the requirements of the state law and should be improved.

With ten passenger trains daily, and heavy traffic, something better seems to be coming to us.

President Taft said he would do it, and he did:

Congress expired without passing the Canadian reciprocity treaty, and it is called to meet in extraordinary session April 4th for that purpose. In the meantime the price of wheat has recovered slightly, from the recent slump caused it is said, by the proposed reciprocity pact.

Our friends in the country, need not worry, there will be no expensive court house built in Pennington County for years. The present building will be remodeled so as to care for the county business efficiently, and safely. When the farms are all opened up, ditch liens paid and good roads built, will be time enough to talk of fancy and expensive court houses.

It was some kind of a fight, any how, and Red Lake Falls is still the capital of Red Lake county, and perhaps the Red Lake Falls people are not as many kinds of horse thieves as they were painted. But let's forget that; they didn't mean it. Red Lake Falls is a better city than it was when the old fight was started and Red Lake county is a better county, if a little smaller.

It might be appropriate to say let's all of us boost for all of us now, and perhaps Pennington will become a good side-partner to Red Lake in boosting for this fine country, what can stand a right smart of boosting.

Now that the old fight is ended, there'll be better crops, better weather and surely less over heated atmosphere.

Here's to you, Pennington! Tag! You're in!—R. L. Falls Gazette.

That's the proper spirit!

Let's shake hands over the bloody chasm, if there is one still, and bend our energies to the development of the two counties.

What is good for one cannot hurt the other? There is a greater proportion of good, rich soil in the two counties, than in any similar area in this state or any other. Much of this awaits development, so that there is ample apportunity for us all to expend our energy in useful and practical ways, in the upbuilding of our respective communities.

The future growth of Thief River Falls is to be measured only, by the energy and public spirit of it's citizens. Red Lake Falls is beautifully situated on two rivers having valuable heater powers, and is surrounded by a fertile and attractive farming district, and will of course, be as the county develops an important town.

1,600 MORE SCHOOL TEACHERS.

During the past four years the number of school teachers in Minnesota has increased 1,600, according to the report of G. G. Schulz, state superintendent of public instruction, which will be issued from the printer in a few days. There are now in the state 15,157 teachers, compared with 13,597 in 1906. During the same time the number of schoolhouses in the state has increased from 8,067 to 8,659.

In the same four years, according to the report, the total number of pupils has increased from 218,985 to 262,027. There also has been a large increase in the number of libraries in the schools of the state, and the number of volumes has grown from 800,000 to 2,225,000.

The report, in a comparison of the wages paid teachers for the last few years, shows that in the common school districts the wage for male teachers has advanced from $48.63, in 1906, to $51.47, in 1910, and that for women in the same districts there has been an advance from $38.83 to $42.67. In the independent districts, however, the limit is considerably higher for men, it being, in 1910, $109 as an average, and $55 for women.

The per capita cost of educating the people of the state has been increasing the past year. At the State University the per capita cost in 1909 was $176.71, which rose to $177.38 in 1910. In the normal schools of the state for the same time, there was an increase from $80.39 to $81.30. The high schools show a jump of $31.82 to $34.72 for each pupil in attendance. The rural and ungraded schools spent $18.79 per capita last year, an increase of about $1. In the teachers' training classes there has been a decrease, the only one noted, from $7.63 to $7.36.

Does Your Neighbor Take A Newspaper?

Clearwater Crystal: While at Bemidji the other day we attended court and listening to an attorney representing the government, asking applicants for citizen papers a few questions regarding the government of the United States and of the state of Minnesota.

We confess that we were actually shocked by the ignorance of some of those men. Some of them did not even know who was President of the United States, others thot the Governor lived at Washington. Others thot we had from 4 to 6 U. S. Senators, but they did not know any of them even by name. One said we had 2 senators and one congressman and the latter was Halvor Steenerson. When asked if the President had anything to do toward the making of laws not one knew. The attorney recommended that they be not naturalized and Judge Stanton granted his request.

If the government is as strict as this everywhere we believe it was right, altho there is no question but those men are good, straight farmers, who would otherwise make good citizens, but they would certainly not make intelligent voters.

The attorney asked them if they took any local papers and most of them answered in the negative.

Not at all surprising that they didn't know anything.

But, in all earnestness we believe there are many otherwise well posted farmers who know very little about how our government is constituted and carried on, and if there are among our readers any who have got to take out naturalization papers we earnestly recommend that they post up.

Many Newcomers.

Editor R. V. Carr, of Middle River passed through the Hub of the Valley this morning, enroute home from a trip, through the southern part of this state, and into Iowa. His was a business mission, having a number of land deals in view. All through the territory he traveled he noticed a greater interest in the Red River Valley than in any previous year he has made this trip. He predicts a large number of land sales to actual settlers, saying the inquiries seem to be for the undeveloped lands that have been reclaimed by drainage.

The large amount of snow we have here compared with further south pleased Mr. Carr as he looked from the car window this morning. He remarks that it is a sure sign of forty bushels per acre the coming season.—Crookston Times.

Aeroplanes Not Baggage.

The growing needs of the times are indicated by a new ruling adopted by Western lines in regard to the transportation of airships and aeroplanes. It has been decided that beginning May 1. aerial craft of all kinds must be shipped as express and not as baggage.

"The airship business is constantly growing," remarked an official recently "and it is about time that the railroads take some action in regard to handling them."

Fish Season Closed.

The open season for pike, muskallonge, crappies, perch, sunfish, catfish, sturgeon and all varieties of bass closed Wednesday, March 1. The only kinds of fish that are not protected by the game and fish laws in this respect are pickerel, suckers, redhorse, carp and bullheads.

Under a former ruling of the game and fish commissioner, dealers in the marketable species of fish will be allowed until the end of the week to dispose of their stock of crappies, pike or other fish which they handle.

The season for catching pike and the other varieties of fish that can be marketed will remain closed until May 1, but the open season on bass does not begin until May 29. The brook trout season closed September 1 and will not open until April 15, this being the earliest date set for any kind of fishing in Minnesota except for the rough varieties.

According to the game laws, the spearing of pickerel, suckers, redhorse, carp and bullheads is allowed during the entire year, but during May and June the use of artificial lights is prohibited. Although the season for fishing is officially closed March 1 for two months, the season for trapping does not close until April 15, giving the men who gain a livelihood by getting marketable fish an opportunity to turn their efforts to the catching of muskrats and mink.

Privileges to Homesteaders.

Duluth Herald: Homesteaders who made entry on land in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Washington Oregon, Arizona and New Mexico after June 1, 1910, are given until March 15 of this year to establish residence on their claims, by a law of congress approved Feb. 15. A copy of the new law and instructions as to its administration were received at the Duluth land office yesterday.

All settlers in the states named are also given leave of absence from their claims from Feb. 13 to March 15 of this year. The law also applied to soldiers' declaratory statements filed after June 1, 1910.

The law does not shorten the time for commuting nor for making final proof, nor will the leave of absence be counted in the time of residence if settlers take advantage of it.

Miss Millie Dorothy, of Crookston, was in the city visiting friends last Friday.

Chester Barden arrived in the city last Friday from Nebish, where he has been since last fall.

Miss Mabel Patterson, of St. Hilaire, graduated from the St. Cloud Normal last Friday. Miss Patterson goes to Elk River, Minnesota to teach.

Pat Roark and A. N. Johnson went down to Crookston last Sunday by way of Erskine, over the flyer, on business, returning Monday morning.

Frank Freund, of Red Lake Falls was a passenger on the south-bound Great Northern train enroute to his home from Middle River, where he had furnished music at a dance the evening previous.

Dr. Grundy received a message from Toronto, Canada last Saturday night of the death of his mother at that place. Mrs. Grundy Sr. was eighty nine years of age and had been sick but a short time.

Last week Matt Burns of Grand Forks B. C. visited his brother Michael of this city on his way home from a trip to his old home in the east. Thirty one years ago Mr. Matt Burns took a homestead just west of Thief River Falls and lived on this but a short time and this is his first visit to this city since he left at that time. He was very much surprised at the growth of our city and said it was as lively and wide-a-wake a place as he had visited.

Carl O. Eig, a prominent farmer of this place, who had his hand pierced by the tine of a hay fork a few days ago, is having a more serious time with it than anticipated. Last Friday blood poison set in and he made a trip to Thief River Falls to consult a physician, and on Monday evening telephoned his family that it was getting worse and he was going to the hospital at Warren for treatment.—Eleven Towns.

B. H. Pierson of Ralston, Iowa, arrived Monday with two cars of stock and machinery. Mr. Pierson purchased the northwest quarter of section 30 in Rockebury last year through the agency of C. C. Elliot and expects to make this his future home. Mrs. Pierson and children acompanied by Mr. Elliott, arrived the same day via Thief River Falls. This estimable family come well recommended from their former home and will prove a valuable addition to the community in which they are to reside.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

"John Dunn owed Joe Dunn, and Joe Dunned John Dunn, and John Dunn said if Joe Dunn had not done what he done, it need not have been done, and Joe Dunn said if John Dunn had done what he said he would have done there would have been no dunning done. And what Joe Dunn done, he done to get a settlement with John Dunn, and that not being done might as well not have done what he done in dunning John Dunn. After all that was done there was nothing done.—Ex.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Garceau have gone to Wheaton, Minn., where they will reside in the future. Their decision to leave Red Lake Falls was made rather suddenly. Mr. Garceau made a business trip to Wheaton last week and while there purchased a moving picture show and he is already in possession of the property. Mr. and Mrs. Garceau left for their new home Monday. Their many Red Lake Falls friends will wish for their prosperity and happiness in their new home.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Herman Just, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Just, residing nine miles northeast of Red Lake Falls, died Tuesday. Funeral services were held at the home last week and interment was at Thief River Falls. Deceased was seventeen years old. Three other members of the family, Mr. Just and two of the children, have been quite seriously ill with the measles. Mr. Just was critically ill for a time, but is now improved and the other members of the family are getting along nicely.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Sears Roebuck & Co., the big mail order house of Chicago, have increased their capital stock from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 and also declared a dividend of 33-1-3 per cent on the common stock. That is a bigger profit, we venture to say, than any store in the Red River Valley has made this year. And yet there are people who who persist in swelling the profits of the Chicago concern. When it has forced most of the country merchants to the wall it will no doubt declare dividends of 75 or 100 per cent.—Warren Sheaf.

An exchange says: the trouble is that girls have too much rope. The best wives are invariably those who have been flattened out across the parental knee about once a week, and whose heads are not padded with store hair until they look like sheep in shearing time. Nothing will straighten up a love-sick girl, who makes googoo eyes at every traveling man in sight, like an old fashioned spanking. The girls whose daily labor consists of brewing fudge and making the trains is about as useful to a man who has to work for a living as a hip pocket in his nightie.

Minnesota has been brought to the front again in the action of China in depositing in St. Paul $21,000 to be used by Prof. W. H. Tombave of the department of animal husbandry at the State Agricultural college for the purchase of blooded stock to be sent to Manchuria for breeding purposes. The decision of the Oriental department of agriculture to come to Minnesota for assistance in building up the stock raising industry of that country was made two years ago when Prof. Tombave spent a considerable time in the employ of the foreign government. He will leave Washington soon to make the purchase of cattle, sheep and swine which is to be shipped direct from Seattle.

A Kansas paper tells of the dangers of newspaper borrowing as follows: "A man who was too economical to take his home paper sent his little boy to borrow the copy taken by his neighbor. In his haste the boy ran over a $1 stand of bees and in ten minutes looked like a warty summer squash. His cries reached his father, who ran to his assistance, and failing to notice a barbed wire fence, ran into that breaking it down, cutting a handful of flesh from his anatomy and ruining a $1 pair of pants. The old cow took advantage of the gap in the fence and got into the cornfield and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing the racket, the wife ran, upset a four-gallon churn full of rich cream into a basket of kittens, drowning the whole lot. In the hurry she dropped a $7 set of false teeth. The baby, left alone, crawled through the spilled milk and into the parlor, ruining a brand new $20 carpet. During the excitement the oldest daughter ran away with the hired man; the dog broke eleven setting hens and the calves got out and chewed the tails off four fine shirts.

Revolutionizing the Fuel Question for Thief River Falls.

The agent for the "Renoun" smoke and gas burning heater was demonstrating all the good qualities of this stove at Torrison Bros. store last Thursday. Torrison Bros. have secured the agency for this stove and invites the public to inspect it.

The feature of this stove is that it utilizes all the smoke and gas before it goes up the chimney and thoroughly consumes all the coal in the stove, and another economical fact about the stove is that it will burn cheap soft coal and thereby revolutionizing the coal bill to such an extent that it will be just cut in two.

The ash waste is guaranteed not to amount to more than two ash pans a week, and it will throw the heat down in a radius of about four feet.

Another unique feature about the stove is that it has an oven like a cook stove and will bake bread, apples, etc., and will give heat sufficient to admit of potatoes being thoroly fried on the base of the stove.

Requirements For Homestead Entry.

An Act Authorizing homestead entries on certain lands formerly a part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: That hereafter all lands ceded under the Act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in Minnesota", approved February twentieth, nineteen hundred and four, and undisposed of, shall be subject to homestead entry at the price of four dollars per acre, payable as provided in section three of said Act, for all lands not heretofore entered; and for all lands embraced in canceled entries the price shall be the same as that at which they were originally entered: Provided, That where such entries have been or shall hereafter be canceled pursuant to contests, the contestant shall have a preference right to enter the land embraced in such canceled entry, as prescribed in the Act of July twenty sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two: Provided further, That all lands entered under this Act shall, in addition to the payments herein provided for, be subject to drainage charges, if any, authorized under the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota", approved May twentieth, nineteen hundred and eight. (Twenty seventh Statutes, page two hundred and seventy).

Approved, February 16, 1911.

Blaze on the East Side.

The residence of Frank B. Robinson, 621 St. Paul avenue, on the East Side, caught on fire last Saturday morning about 9:30 o'clock. The fire had not gained much headway when it was discovered and on their arrival the fire fighters extinguished the blaze with the chemical.

All the household goods had been removed from the building before the flames had done any damage and before the department arrived, and the only loss entailed was to the building, and that was not very heavy.

Wadena Editor Dies.

Charles O. Eastman, editor of the Wadena Pioneer-Journal, died at his home last Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, following years of ill health during which period he has suffered greatly.

In an unfortunate accident the fore part of February he fell and broke his leg and this is thot to have hastened the end. He suffered a general collapse thereafter, death coming to relieve him after many hours of intense suffering.

Mr. Eastman was one of the ablest and most wide-a-wake newspaper men in the state and his departure will be generally mourned by the entire newspaper fraternity.

Mail Clerk Elects.

The mail clerks of the Tenth Division at their annual meeting in Grand Forks last week elected the following officers: President, William O'Brien, Vice President, C. C. Ladd, Devils Lake; Secretary-treasurer, E. E. Olwin; Auditor, Ole Nelson. J. J. Martin and Walter Jennings of Devils Lake and Chan Fuller of Thief River Falls, Minn., were elected to attend the annual convention in St. Paul in April and J. J. Courtenay of Grand Forks was choosen alternate.

A Grand Concert.

Ole Theoboldi, the famous Norwegian violinist, gave a concert at the Auditorium last Thursday to a fair sized audience.

That Mr. Theobaldi is a great violinist can not be disputed and his concert here was a most pleasant one. This is his last tour of America and he expects to leave shortly for his estate in Norway and settle down in his estate.

Bids Wanted.

School Dist. No. 55, town of Silverton, will receive sealed bids for the erection of a school house in the southeast corner of section 14. Bids will be received by the clerk of the school district up to March 25. Plans and specifications can be seen at this office. The clerk reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

F. J. Staska, Clerk.

THREE MEN BURN TO DEATH

Fire in Sleeping Quarters Catches Unsuspecting Inmates at Kellher.

James Lepsett, James G. Boyel and John McKinnon were burned to death at Kellher when a little shack in which they were sleeping caught fire. It is thought the fire was caused by an overheated stove.

TO ABANDON COUNTY OPTION

Minnesota Prohibitionists Decide On Line of Action.

At the fifteenth annual banquet of the Minnesota Prohibition party, held in Minneapolis, Charles J. Hall of Los Angeles, speaking authoritatively for the executive committee of the party in Minnesota, announced that in the future county optionists will receive no aid from the party.

While the announcement was received with some surprise different members of the Prohibition party declared such action had long been contemplated. The defeat of the county option bill in the legislature forced the split between the two factions.

From now on the strength of the Prohibition party will be concentrated on a constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of liquor. To that end over $3,500 was subscribed at the banquet. A direct fight in every county in Minnesota will be made in the campaign of 1912, said Prohibitionists.

SIMILAR TO MINNESOTA CASE

Nevada Federal Court Upholds State Freight Rates.

Directly contrary to the findings of Judge C. E. Otis of St. Paul, master of chancery in the famous Minnesota rate cases, is the decision of the federal circuit court of Nevada, just handed down, holding that intrastate rates fixed by the state railroad commission can have no bearing on interstate rates, if the former are fair and just. The opinion goes still further by saying:

"There is, therefore, a presumption provided by the statute that the rates fixed by the railroad commission shall be deemed just and reasonable," because they were made after a full investigation by the state railroad and warehouse commission."

In many ways the Nevada case is similar to those acted on by Judge Otis and recently argued before Judge Sanborn of the United States circuit court.

VOTES TO ABOLISH HANGING

Minnesota House Passes Bill by Large Majority.

Hanging will be a thing of the past in Minnesota if the state senate takes the same view of the question as taken by the house. The house passed the George McKenzie bill abolishing capital punishment by a vote of 95 to 19.

For six years Mr. McKenzie has worked for this measure. This is the third time a bill of this nature, fathered by him, has been voted upon by the house. For the first time it was passed and the vote this time is overwhelming.

Fighting against the men with whom he has been working during the entire session L. C. Spooner got his bill for a waterways investigation through the house.

ELECTION PROBE UNPOPULAR

Will Be No Inquiry Into Minnesota Political Committees.

The house committee on general legislation has recommended Robinson's resolution for an investigation of the state central committees be indefinitely postponed. The action had not been taken until Robinson had "had a few words" with the committee.

The knell of the bill to place the state university partly under jurisdiction of the state board of control was sounded when President Cyrus Northrop, in speaking to the members of the legislature on the occasion of their visit to the university, urged the solons to "kill the bill" and received implied promises from Governor Eberhart and Speaker Dunn that such a fate was assured.

PIONEER PHYSICIAN DEAD

Dr. W. W. Mayo Passes Away at Rochester, Minn.

Dr. William W. Mayo, father of the Rochester surgeons, Doctors William J. and Charles H. Mayo, passed away at the age of ninety-two years, death being due to a general and gradual decline.

For more than fifty years Dr. Mayo has been closely interwoven with the history of Minnesota, having the acquaintance of many of its public men and always taking an interest in its affairs. Dr. Mayo was a veteran of the Indian war of 1862.

CALLS FOR ANOTHER PROBE

Resolution to Investigate Former Insurance Commissioner.

John A. Hartigan of St. Paul, former insurance commissioner, may come under the fire of the state legislature. W. A. Campbell, house member from Minneapolis, introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the department of insurance since 1905. Mr. Campbell declares expenses of the department were greater than under the old fee system.

There will be no reorganization of the state department of public instruction by the present legislature. The house committee on education, after giving the Kunze bill for a state board of education several sharp kicks, sent it to a subcommittee "to devise decent means of burial," as one of the members expressed it.

Prohibition won a temporary triumph in the house. The question arose when the committee on temperance reported postponing indefinitely the A. V. Anderson bill calling for an amendment making possible statewide prohibition. Mr. Anderson objected and moved that the bill be printed and placed on general orders. The motion carried.

ADMITS WHIPPING THE BOYS

Red Wing Training School Superintendent Testifies.

Taking the witness stand in his own behalf F. A. Whittier, superintendent of the state training school for boys at Red Wing, against whom charges of cruelty have been preferred, told the legislative investigating committee that he believed baring boys' backs and flogging them with a leather strap—"spanking" he called it—was humane treatment, preferable to solitary confinement and preferable to shackling.

Mr. Whittier admitted the existence of a spanking device, or place, but said he had made no calculation of the percentage of boys in the school who had been whipped. He also admitted that a barrel recently had been used.

MISSING WOMEN REPORTED SAFE

No Lives Lost in Big Fire at Minneapolis.

There were no lives lost in the Syndicate block fire at Minneapolis, according to Fire Chief Ringer. Although Mrs. Mary Buck, proprietor of the Arion restaurant, and her maid, Miss Bertha Radons, were reported missing, Chief Ringer states positively that they were rescued.

"I took Mrs. Buck out myself," said the fire chief.

S. W. Thomas, watchman, was on the first floor when he heard an explosion. He ran to the second floor and, looking out, saw flames breaking through the walls over the Five and Ten-Cent store.

When the firemen arrived the basement and ground floor of the building was a mass of flames. About fifty persons were rescued within the first twenty minutes. There were many narrow escapes.

Fire Chief Ringer arrived soon after the first alarm and immediately turned in a general alarm. With practically the entire Mill City fire force fighting the flames the fire threatened to spread beyond control. As the flames gained headway and the entire retail district became in danger Chief Ringer called on the St. Paul department for aid.

The total loss is estimated at $915,000.

IS DRAWN ON NEW LINES

Insurance Fund for Employes Proposed by Minnesota Legislator.

An appropriation by the state of Minnesota of $300,000 as the nucleus for a gigantic indemnity fund and subsequent contributions from wages of employes and employers engaged in hazardous industries is proposed in a bill introduced in the senate by Swanson of Anoka county. The measure is intended as a substitute for the various workmen's compensation codes pending in the senate and house.

The Swanson bill incorporates many of the features of the original liability code drafted by the commission appointed at the last session of the legislature. Instead of designating every industry in which an accident occurs as "hazardous" it defines specific occupations and tells who shall be termed an "employe."

SAID TO BE ADULTERATED

Thousands of Pounds of Butter Seized at St. Paul.

W. H. Grimshaw, United States marshal, seized 11,500 pounds of butter, property of the Milton Dairy company of St. Paul, on the complaint of A. C. Houpt, United States district attorney.

It is claimed that the butter bore no mark as to its alleged adulteration.

The butter was claimed to be made under such a process that it contains over 16 per cent water. In doing this the butter becomes subject of a special tax and a further tax of 10 cents per pound, besides being clearly marked to show that it has been adulterated.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

Robert La Follette, senator from Wisconsin, is to address the teachers who are to be in St. Cloud April 5, 6 and 7, attracted by the meeting of the Northern Minnesota Educational association. The meeting will be attended by about 600 teachers. Mrs. Holmes of Illinois will have charge of model class work.

Minnesota college of agriculture methods of work and results will be exhibited at the international exposition to be held in Turin, Italy, in May and June. Professor Andrew Boss is preparing such an exhibit at the request of the United States department of agriculture.

A big transaction in lumber was closed when the Duluth Lumber company bought of the Vermillion Lumber company of Tower 2,000,000 feet of Norway pine. The Vermillion company will operate its mill at Tower day and night for five months the coming season.

F. M. Bowman of Olmsted county has decided to try the experiment of growing peanuts. He intends to see if this can be profitably conducted in Southeastern Minnesota. He will sow several acres to peanuts this year and will give them the most approved cultivation.

Chief Troyer of the Duluth police department discharged five patrolmen for entering a saloon and drinking at the bar. The case was doubly aggravating because the drinking took place on election day, Feb. 7, when all the saloons were supposed to be closed.

Of twenty-five decisions filed by the supreme court of the state last week, the opinions in eighteen were written by the late Justice Edwin A. Jaggard, who died in the Bermuda Islands Feb. 13 and was buried in St. Paul a few days ago.

George H. Filbert of Minneapolis was elected president of the Minnesota Retail Grocers and General Merchants' association at the closing session of the fifteenth annual convention at St. Paul.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

George Bardwell, seventy-seven years old, an old soldier, was burned to death in an old shack at Bemidji. Firemen found Bardwell's body lying on the bed in which he evidently had been sleeping. His left leg was completely burned off, as were the clothes he had on.

The three-year-old son of Christ Eskeldson of the town of Park, Marshall county, was accidentally shot and instantly killed by his eight-year-old brother. The children had gone into the toolhouse on the farm and, finding their father's shotgun there, began playing with the weapon.

George Hanson, twenty-six years old, was found dead in the rear end of his drug store at Bemidji. Death was due to his having taken poison. He located in Bemidji two years ago, coming from Minneapolis and was married last summer to a Litchfield girl.

Eleven persons escaped death by flames or suffocation at St. Paul when their residences were consumed by fire. One fire destroyed the residence of Henry Brandhorse, while the other burned the home of Charles Boudine.

C. H. Shimer, former teller of the Minnesota National bank of Minneapolis, was indicted by the Hennepin county grand jury on a charge of grand larceny. Shimer is accused of failure to credit $470 to a depositor.

Professor C. W. Hockett, head of the science department at Moorhead normal school, lies at the Moorhead hospital in a critical condition as a result of an explosion in his laboratory.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

A resident of Minneapolis fifty-six years, Mrs. Mary Wacks, seventy-seven years old, is dead in that city. Mrs. Wacks was born in Neustad, Mecklenburg, Germany, Jan. 1, 1834, and came to America with her parents in 1854. In the spring of 1855 they reached St. Anthony, now part of Minneapolis.

Archibald McKinnon, brother of Mayor Allan McKinnon of Crookston, a pioneer resident and a business man of that city, died suddenly of an abscess. He was a member of the firm of A. J. & A. McKinnon, machinery and carriage makers, and was prominent as a horseman.

Mrs. Marie (Olson) Langeson, one of McLeod county's best known pioneer Danish women, is dead at Hutchinson at the age of seventy-eight years. She was the widow of Rev. C. T. Langeson. She reached Hutchinson from Denmark in 1866.

With hundreds of dollars on his person A. P. Olin, seventy-five years old, a wealthy farmer of Isanti, died suddenly in the saloon of Charles H[illegible] at St. Paul. Death was apparently due to heart failure.

A filling in time may not save nine, but it will reduce toothaches and extractions and save a whole lot of pestering trials with false molar outfits.

If the kerosene lamp persists in smoking up the carefully cleaned chimney try boiling up the burner. If it still persists try throwing it out the back door.

SWEDISH EDITOR IS DEAD

Berndt G. Anderson Passes Away at St. Paul.

Berndt G. Anderson of St. Paul, former state food and dairy commissioner and for the past thirty years an associate editor of the Minnesota Stats Tidning and editor-in-chief of the Skaffaren, a state organ of the Swedish Lutheran church, died of cancer of the throat at the advanced age of seventy-one years. Mr. Anderson had been ill since Jan. 1, giving up his work as associate editor of the Stats Tidning Jan. 13.

The deceased was born in Lund, Sweden, Aug. 2, 1840. He came to this country in 1880, going direct to St. Paul, where he soon became connected with the Minnesota Stats Tidning. He was very active in politics of the state, being an ardent Republican. He was also a very active member of the Swedish Lutheran church of the state.

In 1893 he was appointed state food and dairy commissioner by Knute Nelson, who was then governor, which office he held for six years, having the distinction of being the first Swede in Minnesota who was ever appointed a chief of a state department.

Mr. Anderson is survived by a widow, three sons and two daughters.

ASKS DELAY ON RECIPROCITY

Resolution Adopted by Minnesota Senate.

After a debate during the course of which Senator McGrath hotly declared that President Taft either "lied" while making his tariff speech at Winona two years ago, or is "lying" now when he proposes to remove the tariff on Canadian products, the senate adopted the Rockne resolution requesting the Minnesota senators and representatives in congress to use all the power at their command to postpone until next December action on the Canadian reciprocity treaty.

The debate brought out the fact that a majority of the senators are not familiar with the terms of the treaty and they want the measure laid over until the farmers of the state learn its provisions. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 26 to 36.

The house passed the Congdon reapportionment bill by a vote of 85 to 31.

FAVORS BASEBALL ON SUNDAY

Minnesota Senate Defeats Bill Repealing the Law.

The state senate killed Senator Sageng's bill repealing the law of 1909 permitting Sunday baseball. On the final vote there were 20 for the bill and 28 for Sunday ball.

In committee of the whole the senators let loose some of their long pent up oratory on Moonan's bill to repeal the laws giving pensions to the defenders of the Indian outbreak of 1862. The bill was finally killed.

The senate judiciary committee, by a vote of 12 to 6, voted to recommend for passage the Moonan-Haycraft bill for a constitutional amendment limiting the membership of any county in the senate to four.

BANKER FINED FOR CONTEMPT

Minneapolis Man Must Pay $250 or Go to Workhouse.

Andrew D. Clarke, aged sixty-nine, former president of the Minnesota National bank of Minneapolis, was fined $250 for contempt of court with an alternative of thirty days in the workhouse.

Clarke pleaded guilty to contempt in disposing of stock in the State Bank of Algona, Ia., and 10,000 acres of North Dakota land, following the issuance of a restraining order by Judge H. D. Dickinson forbidding the sale or transfer of any of his holdings until the validity of a divorce obtained by him at Carson City, Nev., had been determined.

FATALLY WOUNDED IN FIGHT

Ely (Minn.) Saloon Man Stabbed by Austrian Miner.

John Pluth, a saloon keeper of Ely, and Tom Marinpell, an Austrian miner, who was in the former's place of business, engaged in a fight, the former using a revolver and the latter a knife. Pluth is reported to be dying and Marinpell is under arrest. Marinpell had some quarrel with Pluth's son and the father sent the boy away and started to subdue the miner.

The men produced weapons. Pluth fired two shots without effect. Marinpell stabbed Pluth just below the heart. No hope is held for his recovery.

Kick of Cow Is Fatal.

Kicked by a cow a month ago, Walter, the fourteen-year-old son of E. Cash, a Little Falls dairyman, is dead in that city from its effects. The bruise soon developed into blood poisoning and an operation did not eliminate the trouble.

Saves Crippled Mother.

Mrs. Victoria Pederson, twenty-two years of age, at the greatest risk to her own life saved her invalid mother, a cripple, from burning to death in a fire which completely destroyed their home at Pike lake.

Wire Worker Electrocuted.

While working on the crossbeam of an electric wire pole at Minneapolis Harry League, thirty-one years of age, was electrocuted. He expired twenty minutes after 2,300 volts had passed through his body.

CRIMINAL NEWS.

In a three-hour fight near Tuscarora, Nev., between state police and posses of stockmen on the one side and a band of twelve Shoshone Indians on the other eight of the Indians were slain and the remaining four captured. Ed Hogle of Eagleville, a member of Captain Donnelly's company of state police, was killed by the Indians. The Indians were charged with the murder of four wealthy stockmen in Northern Washoe county on Jan. 19 and had been trailed by posses since the finding of the bodies of the stockmen on Feb. 8.

With a roar which brought the population of sixty tenements to their feet and sent them scurrying in night attire to the streets, a dynamite bomb exploded in the heart of New York's East Side Italian colony, blowing off the greater part of the front of a five-story tenement and breaking every window pane for a radius of three blocks. Thirty persons were injured by falling debris or cut by broken glass.

Miss Jeanette Lewis, aged seventeen, of Pelham, Pa., murdered her mother, Mrs. Sarah Lewis, aged fifty-seven, and her nephew, Edward B. Milden, Jr., aged nine years, by administering cyanide of potassium, and afterward committed suicide by taking a dose of the deadly drug. Grief over the death of her sister is believed to have driven the girl insane.

After a jury in general sessions court had considered the evidence for fifteen minutes it brought in a verdict of guilty of forgery against Broughton Brandenburg, the magazine writer, and Judge Swann sentenced him to Sing Sing for a term of from two years to four years and six months. He almost collapsed when sentence was pronounced.

Joseph G. Robin, the fallen New York city banker, pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with the larceny of $27,000 from the Washington Savings bank, of which he was formerly president. Seven indictments against him remain. He was remanded to the Tombs until March 27, when he will be sentenced.

Frank G. Bigelow, the Milwaukee banker convicted of the misuse of funds of the First National bank there, of which he was president, has been released from the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan. He had served six years of a term of ten years.

Irwin Billman, an assistant lecturer in the extension division of the Wisconsin state university, was sentenced to five years in the federal penitentiary when he pleaded guilty to sending improper matter through the mails.

The bodies of Chris Christensen and a Miss Riler were found in Christensen's home at Council Bluffs, Ia. All appearances point to a double suicide. The two had been dead several days.

Abraham Reuf, former political boss of San Francisco, convicted of bribery, has been denied a rehearing and was taken to San Quentin penitentiary to serve fourteen years.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

Judge Greely Whitford of the district court appeared in the West Side criminal court at Denver and asked for a grand jury investigation of statements offered by Mrs. Margaret Miller before a legislative investigation committee that she handed Whitford $3,000 a few days before he sentenced sixteen miners to jail for one year for contempt of court.

Attorney General Stead of Illinois has been ordered by the strike investigating committee of the state senate to begin criminal prosecutions against Chicago clothing manufacturers who are accused in the committee's report of maintaining a blacklist.

In Arizona at the present time mining bears to agriculture the ratio of seven to one, but this will not long stand, as irrigation projects are being undertaken and completed which will make agriculture a much larger factor in the state's development.

It is not a particularly reassuring thought that about 95 per cent of all hogs and cattle found affected with tuberculosis are used as human food, this being due to the fact that the flesh of such animals is considered wholesome for food unless tubercular lesions are found in it.

Give old Biddy the right kind of ration and a warm spell of weather in midwinter and she will knock in the head the tightest egg corner ever promoted. It is largely because of this combination of circumstances that eggs are now down so that a man with a family can afford to have them once in three days.

Any farmer living near a railroad track would do well to carry insurance on his stock, as he never can tell on what day a gate may be left open and valuable stock be killed by a passing train. We read of a farmer the other day who lost four fine colts at one time in such a manner. While the railroad can usually be made to pay damages, they do not always cover the loss.

It is a pretty sensible thing to steer shy of the fellow who is dead anxious to sell you something that is going to fetch you health or wealth by a short cut and with the investment of a relatively small amount of money. In nine cases out of ten he does not belong to the benefactor class at all, but is a plain grafter and eager to get his hands on your hard earned money.

ABOARD A DAIRY SPECIAL.

It was the writer's good fortune the other day to make a trip of a hundred miles aboard a dairy demonstration special. The itinerary of the special had been arranged beforehand, and at each place where stops were made crowds of interested people, mostly farmers, were present to receive the benefit of the hour's instruction given by the several members of the party. There were four coaches, in each of which a half hour's lecture was given by as many speakers, who took up the matter of testing the cows with the Babcock test, balanced rations, barn ventilation, silos, etc., while the last half hour was devoted to giving a cow demonstration from the door of a baggage car which was equipped as a stock car and at the time referred to contained a Holstein cow with a milk record of 18,000 pounds, a Jersey bull worth $1,000 and a Jersey cow with a butter record of 500 pounds per year. At the proper stage in the demonstrator's talk these animals were led to the door of the car and their strong points as dairy representatives pointed out and contrasted with traits and characteristics of beef animals. Among the traits emphasized for the good dairy cow were vigor and constitution, depth of body at the heart line, a big paunch or barrel, a well developed udder extending well forward and back, large and winding milk veins, a soft pliable skin, a bright and prominent eye and a condition of flesh along the back indicating that the feed given was put into the udder in the shape of milk—and not on the back in the shape of fat and flesh. At all stops made a rare degree of interest was manifested, and there is little question that scores of those who attended the lectures went home with a determination to put more brains into and to get more revenue out of their dairy operations.

PUT OUT THE LIGHT.

It is hard to believe that a dairy barn could be battened so tight and have windows and doors so close fitting as to virtually put out a lantern because of a lack of oxygen, but such an occurrence was related the other day by a farmer to one of the speakers on the Iowa dairy special, which has been making a tour of the state. This chap thought at first that his wick was short or the oil low, but on going outside of the barn, where the air was pure, the light revived. This fact was noticed on two other occasions, so that there was no question as to the cause of the poor light. Yet in the face of this terrific condition of affairs cows were kept housed within this stable and were expected to give a profitable milk return when they had virtually no oxygen with which to purify their blood and make milk production possible. After hearing the lecture we understand this fellow went home and put in a window between every other set of studding and inserted glass and cheesecloth alternately over every other opening. This let in the sunshine, which is the best germ killer, and admitted fresh air without making a draft. A whole lot of barns need ventilating in the above manner when the air isn't so absolutely foul that it will extinguish a lantern.

TOP GRAFTING TENDER APPLES.

As a result of observing the thriftiness and hardiness of top grafted apple trees the writer has much faith in the possibility of producing semi-tender apples of the Jonathan and Crimson Golden type on hardy stocks like the Hibernal and Virginia crab in northern latitudes, where the former varieties could not be sufficiently hardy to withstand the severe winter weather. It is true that for its season there is no apple which will fetch more on the early winter markets than a juicy, well colored Wealthy, but if the two varieties mentioned could by top grafting be added to the rather limited list of known hardy apples northern horticulturists would be materially benefited. The writer would like to hear from any reader who has given the above plan such a trial as would demonstrate its practicability. It would seem to give much promise.

GIVE THEM A LIFT.

In latitudes where snows are deep and winter temperatures low a kindly service may be rendered some of the birds which remain and bear the rigors of the cold weather by putting out food in shrubs or trees so that they may have access to it. Nothing answers the purpose better than pieces of beef suet. If this should not be handy scraps from the table will do. If a little platform is fixed and suspended from a limb screenings or other grain may be scattered there, and the little feathered friends will be very grateful for it. Such slight help as this may be the means of carrying many insect destroying birds through the season of short fare and cold nights.

A filling in time may not save nine, but it will reduce toothaches and extractions and save a whole lot of pestering trials with false molar outfits.

If the kerosene lamp persists in smoking up the carefully cleaned chimney try boiling up the burner. If it still persists try throwing it out the back door.

It is just as easy to form good habits as bad ones, and this is an important point not only in the formation of character in man, but in the training of animals that serve him.

As with cattle, the breed of poultry to be selected by any individual should be the one which he prefers or which will best suit his purposes, as any one of a number will pay well if given proper care and attention.

New Mexico has approximately 500,000 acres already under irrigation, with 3,000,000 more that can be watered artificially. When this shall have been accomplished New Mexico's place as an agricultural state will have been secured.

A fellow can have a dish of ham and eggs now and then since the egg corner collapsed without borrowing money on his life insurance policy to foot the bill. Ham and eggs used to taste pretty good, but it was so long ago the most of us will have to learn all over again.

In all too many instances a fellow's attitude on this matter of bovine tuberculosis depends upon whether it is up to him to drink the milk or eat the flesh of animals affected with the disease or whether he has some of them on his hands that he is anxious to get rid of and lose as little as possible.

Contrary to an idea that seems to have got root in the minds of some folk here and there, careful experiments with the tuberculin test prove conclusively that the application of tuberculin will not only not cause tuberculosis in a healthy animal, but has no harmful effect whatever upon an animal that is affected with tuberculosis or other disease.

The one great point in favor of corn silage is that it comes nearer than any other winter ration to duplicating the succulence of the lush grasses of May and June. It is because of this fact that stock is so fond of silage and that the feeding of it results in such a generous milk flow in the dairy cow and the rapid gain in flesh of the other farm animals to which it is fed.

If the writer ever had any doubt that birds know a good thing when they see it, it was dispelled last season when he noted the certainty with which they singled out the ripest and reddest cheeked peaches and devoured them completely, leaving nothing but the pit hanging to the limb. Other fruit in garden and on mountain slope was scarce at the time, and this doubtless accounts for the trespass of these feathered friends.

While it is a mighty fine thing for the farmer to have an automobile and all right for him to do so if he has the money in the bank with which to purchase the machine, it is a very questionable procedure for any fellow who has to increase his indebtedness to buy one. We have in mind a fellow who did just this thing, and in the end it meant that he lost the farm, as he couldn't get his money's worth out of the machine without using it, and he couldn't do this without neglecting the farm work.

One of the reasons why the dairy cows give the largest returns in milk yield in May and June is that the water they drink does not chill them to the bone. This condition can be reproduced in the winter by warming the drinking water with a tank heater by the use of cobs or other fuel instead of making the cow do the job, utilizing corn and other high priced feeds for the purpose. Every bit of heat which the cow has to furnish in the warming of ice cold water means that the energy and vitality which she can devote to milk production are reduced by just so much.

In all too many co-operative creameries the buttermaker is kept tied down too closely to scrubbing, cleaning and stoking work when this could be done just as well by much cheaper help and the buttermaker given this time to inquire more carefully into the stable and milk house conditions to be found on the farms of the several hundred patrons of the creamery. Owing to this shortsighted effort at economy there is little question that creameries of this type lose thousands of dollars annually, which they might just as well save in an improved butter quality by giving their buttermaker more help, thus enabling him to give them more of his service as a specialist.

Persons afflicted with tuberculosis would do well to keep in mind the curative power of fresh air, whether in the east, west, north or south. Many people of limited means might better stay at home, using the precautions they would take elsewhere of sleeping and living in the open air, in the meantime enjoying the comforts of home, than to go to some far away, strange place without means sufficient for real needs. Still another class might as well stay at home, those who have money, but who go and live in stuffy boarding houses in some large city, keeping late hours and disregarding the fundamental requirements of health with the expectation that climate alone will work a cure, and that without its being given a fair chance.

The Everglades and big cypress swamp of Florida are inhabited by the remnant of a tribe of Indians, the Seminoles, who have been deprived of their lands and have taken up their abode in these swamps as a last retreat.

"A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and a churning of butter is usually no sweeter than the worst mess of cream which was used in the making of it. Sometimes buttermakers and more often creamery managers and directors overlook this simple fact.

In selecting a breed of dairy cows it is not so vital a thing that one should have this or that variety as that he should select the breed which he likes best. The performance of the several leading breeds is so nearly on an equality that success is largely a matter of the man and his method anyway.

The plebeian prune, which, dressed with thick cream, is a close second to June strawberries, is greatly improved in edible quality if soaked from twelve to twenty-four hours before cooking, while the uncooked prune soaked in warm water in which the desired amount of sugar has been dissolved is said to have as fine a flavor as the fresh fruit.

A woman can and is usually willing to stand a good deal of downright hard work if she feels there is good reason for her doing so and that her labors are recognized and appreciated, and this goes far toward lightening the load, but it is indeed hard lines for her who slaves from daylight till dark and long past, who receives only cross words and complaints in acknowledgment of her services.

The more frequently the hog raiser can bring his shotes to seven months of age and have them weigh 300 pounds apiece the larger per cent of gain he will make on his investment, as in a majority of cases quick gains are economical gains. The above result can be obtained from a clover, alfalfa or rape pasture, skimmilk or buttermilk during the interval and corn and oil meal at the rate of 9 to 1 as a finishing ration.

If the Danish dairyman can make money in dairying on $700 and $800 land and the farmer on the Jersey and Guernsey islands can make a good living and something besides on land worth from $1,000 to $1,200 per acre and buy high priced imported feeds to boot, it looks as if the farmers of the United States on lands worth from $80 to $150 per acre and capable of producing all of the raw stuff needed in the turning out of finished dairy products had about the surest and easiest snap that could be imagined.

A friend who had a fine cutting of alfalfa caught with a heavy rain a couple of years ago hit upon the plan of stowing the crop away in his silo green and wet. Later he filled the silo up with corn. Late the following winter when he got down to the alfalfa ensilage he found it in perfect condition, and the dairy cows were crazy about it and ate it up clean as a whistle. This would seem to show that the silo might be used to advantage as a haymow for clover and alfalfa in sections where the rainfall prevents the proper curing of the grasses.

It is an interesting fact that while the average wheat yield of the state of Kansas was but thirteen and one-half bushels per acre for 1910 it was nearly twice this amount on all the land farmed under the direction of the experiment station at Fort Hays, in the western part of the state, where scientific principles were carried out in the plowing and preparation of the soil. Yet, notwithstanding this showing, you now and then run across a fellow in the thirteen bushel per acre class who has little but derision for the "lead pencil" farmers of the state agricultural colleges.

President Taft has lately signed a proclamation which will throw open to homestead entry more than half a million acres in the Ozark forest reserve, in Arkansas, south of the White river, in the Leatherwood mountains. While much of the tract is rough and covered with timber, there are limited areas that would be ideal for the growing of corn and other crops if cleared, while much larger areas would be suited to fruit raising. The climate is such that stock can range the year through, while the water supply is abundant and pure and the country a healthful one in which to live. Further information relative to the tract can be got by writing the land office, Washington.

The problem of keeping the young folks on the farm, as well as the good wife from sinking into an untimely, yet restful, grave, will be solved when the head of the house puts by the notion that he has got to annex the adjoining eighties, and instead devotes some of the hard earned money, in the accumulation of which both wife and children have had a hand, to remodeling the house, improving the grounds and installing some of the improvements and conveniences that lighten labor, make life tolerable and enjoyable and in a measure worth the price. When the boys and girls hike from the farm as soon as they are well out of kilts there's usually a reason for it.

BE ON TIME!

THE HOTBED.

As there are always those every spring who are taking up gardening for the first time it will be in place to again give simple directions for making the hotbed, which will not only pay for itself in the toothsome radishes and lettuce which it will provide for the table, but also in furnishing tomato, cabbage, cauliflower, pepper, eggplant, etc., for transplanting into the open ground. The location of the bed is important, and preferably this should be on the south side of a building or tight board fence, where the sun's rays will be cornered. The length and width of the hotbed will depend upon one's purpose and upon the dimension of the window sash which are available. The frame should be so built that the sash will slope to the south five or six inches and may be built about a trench dug in the ground or made of wider stuff set on the ground and banked with manure. We have tried both ways and prefer the former. Into the pit prepared should be placed eight or ten inches of fresh horse manure containing about one-third short straw or other litter, which will keep it from heating too rapidly. The chemical reaction which generates the heat will be hastened if a few pails of water are poured over the manure. This should be allowed to heat some before the earth is put in, which should be of a rich, mellow loam if possible and spread evenly to a depth of five inches. The sash should then be put on and things allowed to warm up. When the air in the bed shows a temperature of about 70 degrees the seed may be planted in rows or broadcast, as one may prefer. The bed should be watered frequently enough to keep the soil moist, and if the thermometer or hand shows the bed is getting too hot the sash should be lifted during the day to permit ventilation. Where one does not have window sash for the purpose white cotton cloth tacked on a frame will answer the same purpose if the weather is not too severe and will make the bed self ventilating. As a safeguard against a cold snap pieces of old carpet or canvas or a pile of straw with which to cover the bed should be kept handy. Before the plants which are to be transferred to the open ground are removed the sash should be removed entirely to allow the plants to toughen.

In Arizona at the present time mining bears to agriculture the ratio of seven to one, but this will not long stand, as irrigation projects are being undertaken and completed which will make agriculture a much larger factor in the state's development.

It is not a particularly reassuring thought that about 95 per cent of all hogs and cattle found affected with tuberculosis are used as human food, this being due to the fact that the flesh of such animals is considered wholesome for food unless tubercular lesions are found in it.

Give old Biddy the right kind of ration and a warm spell of weather in midwinter and she will knock in the head the tightest egg corner ever promoted. It is largely because of this combination of circumstances that eggs are now down so that a man with a family can afford to have them once in three days.

A CODLING MOTH PARASITE.

A codling moth parasite has been discovered by Professor E. P. Taylor in Grand valley, Colorado, that bids fair to be a great aid to orchardists in the incessant warfare which they have to wage against this worst insect foe of the apple family. The parasite, which is in reality a tiny bee, is so small that it takes eighty-three of the bees placed end to end to cover the space of an inch, while two or three of them find ample room in a codling moth egg, which is not larger than the eye end of a medium sized needle. Professor Taylor has been observing the work of this bee for the past four years, but not until the past summer has the insect been present in sufficient numbers to make effective inroads against the codling moth. The tiny bee searches out the freshly laid moth eggs, pierces their shells and deposits its eggs within. The eggs of the parasite hatch in a couple of days and at once begin to devour the contents of the egg. Eggs thus attacked turn to an unnatural black color. On reaching its growth the bee cuts an opening through the shell of the egg and emerges as a reddish, four winged microscopic bee-like insect. All orchardists who have been through the exacting and not entirely pleasant process of spraying will hope that this little insect friend may greatly multiply and penetrate to every corner of the land where apples are grown

A DASTARDLY PROPOSITION.

Press dispatches of a couple of weeks ago told of the proposal to perpetrate one of the most dastardly agricultural outrages which have ever been recorded in this country. It seems to have been a scheme hatched by two or three New York cotton speculators who had laid a plan to scatter through Georgia and South Carolina 1,000,000 cotton boll weevils so that the fields in these states would be attacked by the pest and the yield of cotton correspondingly reduced and the prices boosted. It is estimated that at the rate at which the weevil is spreading from the western and central southern states it will be about two years before this enemy of the cotton plant will reach the territory above referred to, but how any man or group of men could be so absolutely money mad as to conceive the idea of hastening the spread of the insect when the combined federal and state insect fighting forces are doing all in their power to hold it in check is absolutely incomprehensible. It would be hard indeed to devise a punishment that would be adequate for an offense of this kind.

There are many who hold that when the farmer in the northern half of the corn belt knows as much about raising alfalfa as he already does about growing corn and oats he will have little trouble in raising the legume. There would seem to be something in the contention.

The most important factor in the choice of a sire for the dairy herd is not the length of his pedigree or a highfalutin name, but the number of pounds of butter fat produced in a year by his dam, his grandam and great-grandam. This will be the only safe guarantee that he will beget heifer calves of a fixed milk giving habit.

Feeding tests which have been made by two or three experiment stations seem to show that if alfalfa is ground into meal there is a loss in feeding value of 5 or 6 per cent over that realized when the hay is fed in its natural state. Just why this is so is not stated, but it seems to be due to the beneficial effect of the thorough mastication given the coarser feed.

JACKSON SELLS OUT

C. C. Jackson Disposes of Business Interests In This City Tuesday Morning.

Robert McGinn Becomes Owner of Store and Building By Transaction.

An important deal was perfected last Tuesday morning when C. C. Jackson of the firm of Jackson & McGinn, disposed of his business holdings to his partner, Robt. McGinn.

By the transaction Mr. McGinn becomes sole owner of the so called Jackson & McGinn block on the corner of LaBree avenue and 3rd street; the entire stock of hardware and the book accounts of the firm, Mr. McGinn to settle all debts of the late firm and collect all due accounts.

The deal involves a small fortune of money and is one of the largest ones to be perfected in this city in recent years.

Just what Mr. Jackson will do in the future has not been definitely decided by him as yet.

Mr. Jackson has been engaged in the hardware business in this city for the last sixteen years and is one of the most prominent and prosperous business men in the city.

May Erect New Theatre.

Rumor has it that arrangements are on foot for the erection of a new $14,000 theatre building on LaBree avenue just as soon as work will permit this spring. The building is to be 50x120 ft. brick and will be erected purposely for a theatre building, and when completed will be one of the finest and largest vaudeville and moving picture houses in this part of the state.

As soon as completed, which is expected to be in the early fall, it will be occupied by Angell & Eydo, the managers of the Lyceum Theatre.

United Church Notices.

It is very encouraging to see the church so well filled at our Sunday evening services. Plenty of chairs will be secured so that no one will have to stand.

You are cordially invited to attend the English Services at the Swedish Augustana Church next Sunday evening. There will be good singing by the Church Choir and others.

The Choir will meet at the home of Mayor Hamre this, Thursday evening at 8 o'clock for the usual rehearsal.

The Catechumens will not meet on Saturday. The pastor will attend the Business Meeting of the Bethany Congregation which takes place at that time.

In behalf of my congregation and other friends, I take pleasure in welcoming Mr. Aga, a prosperous business man from the vicinity of Decorah, Iowa. Mr. Aga just recently moved his family onto what is known as the Jack Meehan farm located about two and a half miles south-west of Thief River. He is a sturdy and loyal United Church man. That he and his family may meet with success and happiness in their new home is the wish of their new friends. Adolph B. Roseland, Pastor.

Coming North.

The Long Prairie Argus says a southern Minnesota editor laments that the state immigration society brings new settlers right through that part of the state and gets them into the newer sections, and the consequence is that the southern counties are losing in population. But there is not much hope of settling up a country rapidly where land is held at a hundred dollars an acre.—Stillwater Gazette.

Very true. Prospective settlers—people looking for farm lands—would be foolish indeed to pay $100 per acre for farms in southern Minnesota when they can purchase them in the northern part of the state for less than a fourth of the price. Then, again, in northern Minnesota they have the advantage of securing fertile virgin soil, while in the southern part of the state much of the land is worked out.—Princeton Union.

He May "Come Back."

Frank Mousley is in receipt of a communication from C. E. Glince, who, up to about two years ago was engaged in business in this city, in which he stated that he was leaving Filer, Idaho, where he has been engaged in business and was about to take a trip out to the coast to look for a location. He stated that he might in all probability return to this city again some time in the future. Mr. Glince has many warm friends here who will welcome him back.

To Be Citizen For Second Time.

Olaf C. Langseth, who resides south of this city, has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States and has made application for first papers before Clerk of Court H. E. Ives. A peculiar feature about Mr. Langseth's case is that he was a natural born American, having been born in St. Paul. Some time ago he filed on a claim in Canada, and in order to do this had to swear allegiance to Canada and become a British subject. He now has to reside here five years before he can become a full fledged citizen of the United States of America.

Greater Than Richard Mansfield.

For some weeks past Manager Saunderson of the Lyceum Theatre has been singing praises of one Sanford Dodge, who was to appear on the stage of that popular playhouse, Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee. The praise was rich and there was plenty of it. For this reason certain parties were wont to look wise and say, "Press Agent." But press agent or no press agent, these parties were present when the curtain went up on the first act of Friday night's bill and they were there when it dropped on the last act of Saturday night's bill. Let it be said right here that Mr. Saunderson's praise was sung in a good cause and the parties who hinted press agent can't be found.

As the Gladiator, Mr. Dodge was great; as Shylock he was greater, but as Mephisto he was superb. I have been fortunate enough to see Broadway favorites appear in the above roles, and I have written about them and placed wreaths on their brows, but when I did all these things I had not seen Sanford Dodge. Late Richard Mansfield (may he rest in the peace he deserves) could not, renowned actor that he was, have given a truer portrayal of Shakespeare's immortal Jew. I have a right to say this because I have seen and studied the work of the greatest performer the world ever knew and I speak as one who knows.

The lack of space will not allow me to give Mr. Dodge the credit he deserves for his characterization of this character, and as for describing his work as Mephisto, the little word superb is the sum and total of it all.

Mention must be made of the excellent supporting company Mr. Dodge gathered about him and the excellent stage settings, and the electrical effects which in Faust were gorgeous.—Abilene (Texas) Daily News.

Dissolution of Partnership.

The partnership heretofore existing under the firm name and style of Jackson & McGinn, wherein Charles C. Jackson and Robert McGinn were general partners, engaged in the hardware business at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, is this 14th. day of March, 1911, dissolved by mutual consent.

The business will be continued by Robert McGinn who will settle all debts of the late firm and to whom all debts due said firm should be paid.

Dated this 14th. day of March, 1911.

Farmers' Institutes.

The state college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park, St. Paul, will conduct a two days institute for the farmers of Pennington, Red Lake and Marshall counties at the gymnasium of the Lincoln high school in Thief River Falls on Thursday and Friday, March 23 and 24, beginning at ten o'clock the first day. Five specialists are coming and they will bring working models of farm conveniences and charts and photographs of farm operations. Farmer's Institute Annual No. 23 will be distributed free to all at the morning sessions. This book alone is of great value to every tiller of the soil. The institute is absolutely free to every man, woman and child in the state. The meeting will take place at the room indicated, as it is the best in the city, being well lighted, heated and ventilated and has comfortable chairs and a good platform for speakers.

It was arranged for these meetings and the farmers are requested to make themselves at home there and feel that it is particularly their meeting place in the city. In connection with the institute and at the same place, will occur the first seed corn contest ever held in northern Minnesota. The Upper Minnesota Corn Grower's Association, of which Henry Pope of Rocksbury town, is president, will conduct this contest. Prizes consisting of cash, pieces of furniture, clocks, potato planter, and other things of value and of service in a home will be offered for entries of corn.

N. K. Nelson left yesterday morning for Gatzke where he will take charge of a farmer's co-operative store just organized at that place recently.

Services next Sunday at 11 o'clock in Synod Church. In Silverton, at 3 P.M. I. T. Aastad.

The New Way.

A new way of cleaning a chimney has been discovered by a local girl who was pestered by a smoking coal stove. She poured a quart of gasoline in the stove, carried the can to a safe distance and then lighted it by throwing a match into it from a partly closed door. It cleaned the chimney by blowing the stove through it, and landed the girl and the door in the top of a tree three rods distant. The girl had a nice ride on the door and was not burned at all, merely two legs broken. The chimney was thoroughly cleaned.

SELLS COUNTY BONDS

Bonds to the Amount of $10,000 Sold to State First of the Week.

Will Draw Interest At a Rate of 4 Per Cent Per Annum.

County Treasurer Andrew Trovaton completed the final arrangements the first of the week for the disposal of the Pennington county bonds and forwarded bonds in the amount of $10,000 to St. Paul last Monday evening.

The bonds were disposed of to the state of Minnesota and are paid out of the state school fund.

The rate of interest on which the bonds were sold is four per cent per annum and are allowed to run all the way from five to fifteen years before maturity.

Langdon Man Is Hit By Special.

Baudette, Minn., March 11.—While bound on his way to Pitt, Minn., from here William Ayotte of Langdon, N. D., was struck and hurled into the ditch by the special train of President Mackenzie of the Canadian Northern railway, about 5 p. m. Friday. The accident happened on the right-of-way about one mile out of town. The special was stopped at once and Ayotte brought here where medical aid was summoned. The doctor's examination proved that he was not seriously injured, having but a few bruises about the head and shoulders and a smashed collar bone. Ayotte was under the influence of liquor at the time and as the train passed by lurched against a coach which caused the resulting accident.

May Call Out Militia

"Owing to the threatened complications in Mexico and the recent mobolization of U. S. troops near the Mexican boarder it is just likely should it be found necessary to send more troops, that the National Guard of Minnesota will be the next to be called upon to make a hasty departure for the so-called front. Should this be the case Company L of this city and Company K of Bemidji would be in line for a little touch of real warfare in the near future.

According to Adjutant General Wood "if called upon to do so we could get out the National Guard of Minnesota on half a day's notice."

Returns From Norway.

Math. Eyde returned to this city last Monday after having spent the last two years at the home of his parents in Sogn, Norway. Mr. Eyde made record breaking time on his long journey. He left Bergen, Norway on March 1st at 10 o'clock p. m, and took passage on board the fast Cunard line mail steamer "Mauritania" and came over-land by the way of New York City, Chicago and the Twin Cities, arriving here Monday morning at 2:50, thereby making the trip in about eleven and a half days.

Gives Stag Party.

City Electrician Leonard Peterson was host at a very pleasant stag party given to about fifty of his gentlemen friends at his home on La Bree avenue, last Thursday evening. The evening was spent at progressive whist, and, as some of the most skillful players in the city were present, the affair proved very interesting. A prize was awarded to Lars Backe for high score.

Will Distribute State Aid.

A local board of civil service examiners consisting of Tarje S. Brokke secretary, and Thomas H. Chittick, vice-secretary, have been appointed.

MARCUS KELLERMAN

(Great baritone has Voice and Art)

No singer has impressed the public or corp of music critics to a greater extent in so short a time than Marcus Kellerman, the remarkable bass-baritone who is one of the group of brilliant soloists accompanying the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra on its 1911 Spring Festival Tour. This young man whose career is already one carrying the music hall mark of distinction, has conquered exacting America through his superb voice, an art matching the organ and an intelligence such as might be expected from one having so noble a head and physique.

Barely thirty years of age, Kellerman is a native American, having been born in Cincinnati. Some of his most pronounced successes occurred in Germany, where he sang leading baritone roles for three years at the Berlin Royal Opera. Although his contract called for a five-years engagement, Kellerman abandoned his brilliant, promising operatic career to engage in lieder and oratorio singing. The superlative successes he has already won in this country indicate that concert patrons here are fortunate, even though opera has lost an artist of the first rank.

Kellerman's musical training has been unusually thorough and complete, beginning with his study of the organ. It was during his work as an organist that he discovered his remarkable voice and appreciating that increased opportunities offered in that field of song he prepared himself for the task, finishing his preparation abroad in a manner that brought the approval of the composer, Richard Strauss, through whose efforts he has secured for the opera at Berlin.

Mr. Kellerman will appear with the great orchestra at the Auditorium, Thief River Falls on Sunday evening, March 26th.

DISASTER ON THE IRON RANGE

Score of Men Killed by an Avalanche in the Norman Mine at Virginia.

Death in the form of 500,000 tons of iron ore, rock, earth, ice and snow shot down upon thirty men working in the Norman open pit mine at Virginia. But few escaped being blotted out by the terrible avalanche and three of these are in a hospital suffering from injuries that are likely to prove fatal. Most of the victims were Finns and Austrians.

The miners, who were taking up one of the two tracks in the pit in order to permit the great steam shovel to work in another section of the mine, were for the most part bent over with bars and claws when the avalanche swept upon them. There was no chance for escape. The great mass struck them to earth and gouged, maimed or flattened their bodies almost instantly.

The pit was 125 feet deep and seventy-five feet wide and the rock and ore and earth filled this bowl to the depth of fifty feet and shot out its rim 150 feet.

The catastrophe was quite unlike anything in the history of iron mining on the range and also different in many respects from the casualties that strew the records of mining the world over. The difference was that it came in the form of an avalanche. Behind and above the pit were thousands of tons of ore, rock, earth, snow and ice and the rapid warming of the atmosphere simply released them upon the toiling miners.

CLAIMS $400,000 IS DUE

Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W., Sues Minnesota Grand Lodge.

The supreme lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen, through its president, William N. Narvis, has filed a bill in equity against the grand lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of the state of Minnesota and A. F. Floerkey, grand master workman; C. E. Larson, grand recorder, and J. T. McGuire, grand receiver, all officers of the state organization, in the circuit court of the United States at St. Paul.

The supreme lodge alleges that the grand lodge has held back the payment of about $408,495 due them on different funds. The bill is returnable the first Monday in April.

The supreme lodge asks that a decree be returned restraining the defendants from paying or transferring any part of the funds except in payment of the supreme lodge. They desire an accounting and will make it their object to have each cent accounted for. If the funds are found short they ask that the court order an assessment made on all members in the state in order that the deficiency may be made up.

POSTAL CLERK UNDER ARREST

St. Paul Man Accused of Stealing Valuable Furs.

M. J. Burns, for ten years a clerk in the inquiry department of the St. Paul postoffice, is under arrest charged with "embezzlement of ordinary mail," which, in this case, means the stealing of about 150 valuable furs. In the basement of the postoffice building was found the "plant" where Burns had hidden the furs and which he had about ready to ship away.

The robbery with which Burns is charged is an amazing one. In Inspector Simmons' office the skins are piled high on tables and the wrappers from which they were taken make a pile several feet high.

The furs were all shipments from Canadian points to firms in St. Louis. Being liable to duty the packages came through the St. Paul postoffice that the customs officials might have an opportunity to inspect them.

There is no asset with which young folks start out in life which begins to compare in importance and value with good health. In all too many cases we take this endowment as a matter of course, underrate and often despise it and wake up too late to a realization of the fact that we have impaired or destroyed it. It is a pretty good idea to look after our health as we go along.

COMPLETELY DESTROY SAFE

Three Yeggmen Loot Postoffice at South St. Paul.

Completely wrecking the safe of the postoffice at South Park, a St. Paul suburb, and demolishing a considerable share of the A. D. S. Clark store, in which the station is located, at South St. Paul, three yeggmen made a clean getaway with more than $400 in stamps and cash and other valuables belonging to Mr. Clark aggregating another $100. A heavy charge of nitroglycerin was used and was set off with a policeman less than two blocks away, but asleep.

The booty was hastily removed from the safe, the robbers even taking the drawers of the safe and throwing everything into a mail pouch which they carried as they ran towards St. Paul. Swiftly sorting out the valuables as they ran the trio discarded many letters, the drawers and finally the pouch, thus leaving an unmistakable trail for nearly a mile.

FLAMES WRECK CLUBHOUSE

Handsome Elks' Quarters at St. Paul Destroyed.

Fire that had been burning for some time before it was discovered partially destroyed the Elks' clubhouse at St. Paul. The beautifully furnished and decorated lodge room, one of the finest in the United States, was completely ruined. The loss to building and contents amounts to about $50,000. There is $45,000 insurance on the structure and about $7,000 or $8,000 on the furnishings.

The blaze is believed to have been caused by defective wiring behind the stage in the lodge room.

Anti-Smoke Law Is Valid.

The state supreme court has dealt Minnesota railroads a severe blow in upholding the Minneapolis city ordinance prohibiting the use of soft coal in switch engines. The case was brought on an appeal by the St. Paul road from a fine of $25 imposed when a switch engine was caught puffing vigorously.

NORWAY.

So far as the actual enfranchisement of women is concerned the first material gain was scored by the suffrage agitators in 1901, when the municipal vote was given to the Norwegian women on the basis of taxation. This law entitled two-fifths of the married and single adult females to elect city fathers and to vote on all matters pertaining to the municipality. The Norwegian women took advantage of their right at the three elections in 1901, 1904 and 1907, the percentage of women who actually cast their ballots rising at each successive election. In fact, it is claimed that in the two largest cities of the land a slightly larger percentage of women than men performed their electoral duties at the last election. The bill that gave limited municipal franchise to woman also granted her the right to election to municipal corporations. As a result of this provision 150 women today are sitting on the various Norwegian municipal boards. Co-education probably hastened the enfranchisement of women of Norway, for all schools, from the kindergarten to the university, are open to both sexes on perfectly even terms. One of the first fruits of woman's enfranchisement has been the opening of schools where all branches of domestic science are taught. The "kitchen schools," as they are called, now are maintained in connection with all common schools, and here the girls learn cooking. Separate schools also have been established by the state to teach all branches of housekeeping and to practically educate the wives of the peasants. The more advanced among the Norwegian women now are agitating for the founding of state schools where girls will be taught the laws of health, marriage, motherhood and the nursery, so that, grown to womanhood, they will not enter upon the duties of wife and mother without the necessary knowledge.

Just now radical Norwegians are engaged in an endeavor to pass revolutionary laws legitimatizing illegitimate children. If this law is passed the father of an illegitimate child will be required to pay for the support of the mother for three months previous to delivery; to settle the childbirth expenses; to support the mother for six weeks after delivery and to maintain the child until it is sixteen years old; and if he can be proven to be the father, whether he acknowledges his parentage or not, it will have all the rights of legitimate offspring. This bill is being pushed by Mr. J. Castberg, who in the last Liberal cabinet filled the post of minister of justice.

In Norway, as well as in our own country, it seems that it costs more money every year to run the government. Of course the country is growing and that may account for it somewhat. The appropriation asked from the storthing for the coming year is 6,161,000 crowns, or 659,000 crowns more than was used the previous year. Three and one-half million are to be used for the maintainance and increase of the navy. Notwithstanding all the efforts of the peace commission nearly all the nations are building more and larger war vessels.

There about 10,000 Swedes living in Christiania, more than in any other city of Europe outside of Sweden. During the Christmas season one of the Swedish societies of that city held an imposing celebration in one of the mission houses, at which it is said that no less than 4,000 Swedish men and women and about 500 children were present and participated in the exercises. They had their Christmas tree and sang Christmas songs and patriotic songs.

At present there are forty-nine steamships under course of construction in Norway, representing a total tonnage of 30,155. Most of these steamships are built for freight purposes. There are, however, a number of passenger steamers that will be built during the coming summer. Little Norway has one of the largest merchant marine fleets in the world.

There is, according to the church papers of Norway, a strong religious movement on foot in Christiania. It is felt more particularly among the younger people and especially among the younger women.

DENMARK.

Denmark exported over 20,000,000 dozen eggs to foreign countries during the year 1910. The greater number of these eggs were shipped to British ports. England takes all the butter and eggs that Denmark produces. Germany is also beginning to patronize Denmark and meantime the poultry and dairymen of little Denmark are not at all worried about making a good and easy living.

There are strained relations between the large breweries and the restaurants and cafes selling beer. The breweries have raised the price on beer two ore per bottle and the retailers do not like this. They have not been able to raise the price to the consumer, hence there is war between wholesaler and retailer. The breweries claim that they will not yield, and so there you are.

Dr. Richard Paulli, a prominent physician of Copenhagen, passed away a few days ago, aged sixty-four years. He had been a most successful surgeon in Copenhagen for twenty-five years and people came from far and near to consult him. He left a considerable fortune and hundreds of friends and admirers.

Arbitration is a whole lot cheaper than lawing and makes better neighbors.

The dairy barn should be kept well ventilated not only to insure the good health of the cows, but the sweetness and freedom from odor of the milk.

It is a pretty safe plan to keep an eye on a neighbor if the family dog hikes under the corncrib or back kitchen every time he puts in an appearance.

The worth of boy or girl is just as often due to the handicaps which they have to overcome as to the favorable conditions or environment under which they may be reared.

If the nesting boxes are kept supplied with clean material there will be no need of washing the eggs before putting them down to keep—in fact, they will keep much better if no water touches them.

The trouble about every first class country school teacher is that some industrious young fellow of the neighborhood is likely to learn of her ability as a homemaker as soon as the director appreciates her worth as a pedagogue.

Those who have traveled through eastern Oregon and down the Columbia river have noticed with much interest the barriers erected along the track in many places to stop the shifting sands and keep them from blocking the track. Notwithstanding this precaution not infrequently trains have to stop until the sand drifts have been removed.

There is no enterprise along agricultural lines that can be set afoot in a community that will do more to contribute to its material wealth, contentment and prosperity than dairying. Fundamentally this is because it means the establishing of a system or type of farming which means soil replenishing instead of soil robbing and impoverishing.

Sago and tapioca are two food products used extensively in American cooking. The first is prepared from the starch secured from the pith of several species of East Indian palm trees. Tapioca is made by heating in a moist state the starch made from the root of the cassava or tapioca plant, which is a native of several South American countries.

Research work which has been conducted by the biological survey in the Blue Ridge apple district in Virginia shows that some twenty-five species of native birds prey upon the codling moth, and it is estimated that they destroy from 50 to 85 per cent of the hibernating pupae. This means that birds are a more effective means of keeping this pest in check than all the rest of their natural enemies combined.

An eastern florist is said to be getting remarkable egg returns by screening off a portion of one of his greenhouses and keeping the flock of hens there within view of the growing and blossoming flowers. The secret of his success, and there would seem to be no good reason to doubt it, lies in the fact that he has in large measure reproduced for the hens springtime conditions, which are very favorable to egg production.

More often than is the case life insurance should be viewed as a systematic and regular method of saving than as mere insurance against death. There are many men who take this view and who put practically all of their surplus earnings into insurance premiums. Payments must be made at regular intervals, are anticipated and a definite plan made to meet them. In the matter of being able to afford the carrying of life insurance it is more often true than not that the fellow who says he is too poor to carry insurance is the one whose family is in need of just such protection and who would be left destitute and unprovided for in case of his death.

Failure to use the Babcock test in the determining of the butter fat product of each member of the dairy herd not only prevents an effective elimination of the loafer, but also prevents adjusting the grain ration of the individual to her actual needs—that is, to the amount of butter fat produced. A feeding rule based on this test which is followed by many dairymen is to give each cow as many pounds of grain per day as she produces in butter fat per week. For instance, a cow giving twelve pounds of butter fat per week is given twice as much grain as the cow producing but six pounds. Yet how many dairymen continue in the same old rut, giving a cow so many quarts of feed, whether she is producing much or little butter, just because she is a cow and is giving some milk!

Shippers of the country and especially growers of perishable fruits will note with interest the outcome of a case brought by Dumas, a Columbia river valley fruit grower, against the Oregon Railroad and Navigation company for loss sustained because of a failure of the transportation company to provide cars at specified intervals as per terms of a special contract. In giving its ruling on the case the court—the United States court of appeals for the Ninth district—held that such contract was not invalid as discriminatory and contrary to public policy and that the carrier's inability to furnish cars at specified times, as agreed, owing to an unusually heavy traffic at the time they were demanded, constituted no defense to an action seeking to recover damages sustained because of such failure.

A CODLING MOTH PARASITE.

A codling moth parasite has been discovered by Professor E. P. Taylor in Grand valley, Colorado, that bids fair to be a great aid to orchardists in the incessant warfare which they have to wage against this worst insect foe of the apple family. The parasite, which is in reality a tiny bee, is so small that it takes eighty-three of the bees placed end to end to cover the space of an inch, while two or three of them find ample room in a codling moth egg, which is not larger than the eye end of a medium sized needle. Professor Taylor has been observing the work of this bee for the past four years, but not until the past summer has the insect been present in sufficient numbers to make effective inroads against the codling moth. The tiny bee searches out the freshly laid moth eggs, pierces their shells and deposits its eggs within. The eggs of the parasite hatch in a couple of days and at once begin to devour the contents of the egg. Eggs thus attacked turn to an unnatural black color. On reaching its growth the bee cuts an opening through the shell of the egg and emerges as a reddish, four winged microscopic bee-like insect. All orchardists who have been through the exacting and not entirely pleasant process of spraying will hope that this little insect friend may greatly multiply and penetrate to every corner of the land where apples are grown.

Denmark is a diminutive country, about one-third the size of an average state, yet it produces annually eight times as much in dairy products as Illinois.

In starting a dairy herd it is much better to pay two prices for the cows that the other fellow would like to keep than to take the ones he is perfectly willing to part with for a song.

The same difference in atmospheric conditions which relieves the dweller of low and humid sections of his asthma when he removes to a higher and drier country rids horses of the heaves if they make the same change.

One of the largest certified milk dairies in the country, which is located near Boston, is owned and operated by a woman, Mrs. Ware, and is known as the Wareland dairy. This field has been occupied by women in several instances and with eminent success.

Both the quality and quantity of the fruit from the average home garden strawberry bed could be greatly improved were the number of plants allowed to set for bearing reduced by half or more. This would give the plants remaining more room, more light, more fertility to draw on and would thus greatly increase their thriftiness and bearing capacity. Some of the best yields of strawberries on record have been made by beds in which the plants were set closely in the original bed, but allowed to send out no runners whatever, being cultivated according to the hill system, as it is usually known. It is too late now to help beds that are ready to bear, but the bed set this spring for fruiting next year can be so handled as to prevent this crowding and stunting of the plants, while beds that are bearing their first crop this season can be so thinned after the bed is renovated as to bring about the right conditions for next season. If the row system is to be followed in the new bed no more new plants should be allowed to take root than will comfortably fill the row, each plant being allowed a space of seven or eight inches square.

The foreign trade of Canada increased $70,144,290 during the last ten months, according to official reports. The total during that period was over $634,000,000.

General Brun, minister of war in the cabinet of Premier Briand of France, dropped dead from a paralytic stroke at the offices of the ministry in Paris.

A telegram from Harbin reports the gruesome discovery of a Chinese village near there in which the entire population was dead from the plague.

Private messages from Cettinje say that King Nicholas of Montenegro is in a critical condition from an attack of apoplexy.

THE DEATH RECORD.

Colonel Moses C. Wetmore is dead at St. Louis as the result of injuries suffered when run down by a wagon. He was Democratic national committeeman from Missouri and was chairman of the finance committee of the national Democratic organization. He had been active in politics for many years and was an intimate personal and political friend of William Jennings Bryan. He made a large fortune as a tobacco manufacturer.

George Riddle, one of the most widely known Shakespearean readers in the country, died of cerebral hemorrhage at Baltimore. Mr. Riddle, whose home is in Cambridge, Mass., has been prominent in the theatrical profession for more than a quarter of a century.

Judge Robert W. Tayler, United States district judge for Southern Ohio is dead at Cleveland. Judge Tayler was suddenly stricken while attending an entertainment and died within a few hours after being taken to the hospital.

Michael Cudahy, founder of the packing firm bearing his name, died at a Chicago hospital of double pneumonia. He had been ill five days. Mr. Cudahy was born in Ireland in 1841 and came to the United States eight years later.

Richard T. Wilson, head of the firm of R. T. Wilson & Co., New York bankers, is dead.

And then, probably, after all, the chances are that the boys at the Red Wing state school have not been dealt with more rigorously than their cases would merit and have been spanked only when they needed it. Prompter applications of the same sort probably would have prevented any of them from going there.

The fading away of the snow these days has a chance to disclose some very filthy and unsanitary back alleys. Persons who allow slops and refuse to accumulate during the winter months should take special precautions to have same removed before the warm weather sets in and not wait until they have received half a dozen notices from the health department. This is an absolute necessity as an insurance against sickness and helps materially in beautifying the city, and create favorable public opinion.

Farm Adaptability.

There are two classes of people who have opposite opinions as to the requisites for successful farming. One class says, "Why, anyone can farm" and actually believe that should they fail in every other pursuit, they could still go to farming and be successful. The other class says, "There is nothing in farming; I lived on a farm, worked like a slave and lost every dollar I put into it".

Both are wrong. To those who know the first rudiments of farming, it is well known that celery thrives in a swamp and apples high up on the hillside. Celery culture on the same hillside and an attempt to grow apples in the swamp would be equally disastrous. The prospective farmer must know where he is coming out before he starts it. If you are going to farm, decide first what kind of a farm you want, whether it be a chicken farm, an apple farm, a vegetable farm, a small fruit farm, a grain farm or a stock farm.

If you already own a piece of land, determine what its adaptabilities are. If it is low land, it will raise celery and not apples. If it is black loam soil in a prairie district, it is ideal for corn and small grains and not good for fruit. In the hilly timbered districts, if the soil be timbered clay loam with a good clay subsoil to conserve the moisture, you have an ideal location for apples and small fruits.

So before you spend your money, consult some experienced and competent person in whom you have confidence and determine to what your farm is adopted, or, if you are about to buy land and have a definite aim as to what you desire to raise, be sure that your purchase includes land adopted to your particular branch of farming.

It is not intended to convey the impression that each piece of land is adopted to but one product, for such is not the case. Corn, oats and barley all grow well on the same soil. A chicken farm, dairy farm, and a fruit farm can all be successful in the hilly wooded districts, but the soil and the subsoil, drainage, the slope of the land, the accessibility to market are the chief factors in the making for the successful farm.

Where the one cropping system of farming has caused the field to become weedy, crop rotation must be resorted to and this generally means that livestock should be kept. This again brings up another question of adaptability. In cattle raising the matter of help may make dairying inexpedient and it is perhaps better to grow cattle for beef production.

So it is in all lines of agriculture. Intelligence and study, not alone of crop conditions, but of market conditions count just as much and often more than industry and perseverance. There is money to be made by use of labor saving devices and a farmer should be as up to date in his methods as a business man.—Minneapolis Journal.

Electrical Effects in Faust.

Mr. Sanfords Dodge has spared neither expense nor work in his efforts to give a first-class production of "Faust".

The following are some of the electrical effects shown in this wonderful play: The Visison of Marguerite, The Signing of the Bond, The Transformation of Faust, The Winecup of Fire, The Illuminated Cross, The Electrical Garden, The Invocation of the Demons by Fire, The Electrical Sword Fight, The Fireflies, The Illuminating Skulls, The Rain of Fire, The Apotheosis, and many other original and startling effects. Don't miss seeing this great play at Auditorium theatre Thursday evening, March 23rd.

The Soo Line Raises Wages.

Edmund Pennington, president of the Soo Line, was reported today to have authorized an increase of 10 per cent in the salaries of all minor officials on the line. Six hundred men are affected.

George D. Slade, vice president of the Northern Pacific, stated today that the increase granted by the Soo line had been met by other Twin City roads. Such action was made necessary on account of the increase in pay recently obtained by conductors, engineers and firemen on the roads of the Northwest.—Crookston Times.

Quarter of Wheat Crop on Farms.

Washington, March 8.—The quantity of wheat on farms March 1, according to the crop reporting bureau of the department of agriculture was about 179,690,000 bushels or 25 8 per cent of the 1910 crop, compared with 173,344,000 bushels or 23.5 per cent of the 1909 crop on farm March 1, 1910, and 164,031,000 bushels or 23.3 per cent the average for the past ten years.

About 54.5 per cent of the crop will be shipped out of the country where grown, against 59 3 per cent of the 1910 crop, and 57 per cent the average for the past ten years so shipped.

The quantity of barley on farms March 1 was about 31,062,000 bushels, or 19.1 per cent of the 1910 crop, against 41,220,000 bushels, or 24.2 per cent of the 1909 crop on farms March 1, 1910.

About 50.4 per cent of the crop will be shipped out of the countries where grown, against 51 7 per cent of the 1909 crop.

The quantity of corn was about 1,265,631,000 bushels, or 40 5 per cent of the 1910 crop, against 1,150,865,000 bushels or 37 9 per cent of the 1909 crop on farms March 1, 1910, and 953,100,000 bushels, or 38 3 per cent, the average for past ten years.

About 22 2 per cent of the crop will be shipped out of the countries where grown, against 23 1 per cent of the 1909 crop, and 20.7 per cent, the ten-year average so shipped.

The proportion of the total 1910 crop which is merchantable is about 80.4 per cent, against 82 6 per cent of the 1909 crop and 83.6 per cent, the ten-year average.

The quantity of oats on farms was about 421,535,000 bushels, or 37.4 per cent of the 1910 crop, against 363,159,000 bushels, or 36.1 per cent of the 1909 crop on farms March 1, 1910, and 317,985,000 bushels, or 36.4 per cent, the ten-year average.

About 31.2 per cent of the crop will be shipped out of the countries where grown, against 32 7 per cent of the 1909 crop, and 28 1 per cent, the ten-year average.

Sanford Dodge's Production of Faust —Better than Lewis Morrison's.

There was a packed house at the Nevada Theater last night to greet Sanford Dodge and his excellent company in their elaborate production of "Faust". This piece was staged here years ago by Lewis Morrison, who was a noted actor, but the rendition by the Dodge company was even better than that of the Morrison company. Mr. Dodge won a warm spot in the hearts of his audience by his clever acting and demonstrated that he is an artist of the top-notch class. There is a strong supporting company and "Faust" proved interesting even to the most critical.

The electrical effects and special scenery were appreciated, while the costuming was perfect. In the character of Mephisto Mr. Dodge showed his versatility. He has a powerful and pleasing voice. Miss E. Adelle Nickerson as Marguerite is a fine leading lady and a strong support to Mr. Dodge, while every member of the company was good, showing that there has been much careful preparation.—Nevada City (Cal.) Union.

Langseth Mercantile Co.

Dr. Newell, the Thief River Falls veterinary, has been here this week on professional business. He was inspecting the horses and cattle of Andrew Moore and John Kunick preparatory to shipping same to North Dakota. The Dr. is a busy man and his services are in great demand.—Greenbush Tribune.

Prof. P. G. Holden, the Iowa corn expert, is reported as saying: "Minnesota will raise corn as a grain crop clear to the upper boundary, before many years; and land values will double, as they always do in corn states." The way to hasten such a desirable consummation is to plant only early-maturing varieties, however small of ear; remembering that the larger number of ears will so compensate for the smaller size as to make the yield per acre practically as large as that from bigger ears in Minnesota localities where the latter will mature. Then, each year, let the farmer select for next season's planting the ears which have matured earliest, and which are otherwise the most desirable for seed. By this course an earlier day of maturity may be secured, until the corn crop can be depended on to ripen in advance of any probable frost, even on "the upper boundary."

The Mantle of Mephisto!

"Faust" and Mr. Louis Morrison as Mephisto have been for years the synonyms of excellence. Mr. Morrison, however, has been called to that other and better world, and it is generally conceded that the Mantle of Mephisto, which he can wear no longer, has fallen on the shoulders of Mr. Sanford Dodge. This young actor has an entirely new conception of the great role, making the character more humorous and likeable than any other actor has ever succeeded in doing. Don't miss seeing this splendid production of Faust at Auditorium theatre Thursday evening, March 23rd.

School At St. Boniface Burns.

St. Boniface industrial school was destroyed by fire last Friday night. Eighty occupants of the building escaped. A valuable library of 5,000 volumes, as well as an Indian dictionary in manuscript, were destroyed. The dictionary is said to have been the only one of its kind in America and represented the work of pioneer missionary priests for 100 years. The loss from the fire is estimated at $125,000.

In The Foremost Rank.

A good audience attended the Edmonton Opera House last evening to witness the second production of the Sanford Dodge company in this city. The play was that greatest of Shakespearean dramas, "The Merchant of Venice," and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. This greatest masterpiece with its comedy and tragedy intermingled was presented in an excellent manner by the Sanford Dodge company. The majority of those present had read the play and the presentation last evening of the different characters was so real and forceful as to draw forth frequent and hearty applause from a usually undemonstrative audience.

The leading figure in the play, that of Shylock, was taken by Sanford Dodge, whose portrayal of the cruel, avaricious Jew, that has from time immemorial been the synonym of all that is despicable among men and the most heartless of money lenders, was excellent. This is one of the most difficult and at the same time one of the most interesting characters in the whole drama, and the manner in which Mr. Dodge sustained his part places him in the foremost rank in the profession.—Edmonton Alberta (Canada). Gave Farewell Party.

Mrs. Clayton Russell gave a very pleasant farewell party last Friday afternoon in honor of Miss Etta Flynn who leaves this city next week for the Twin Cities. About ten of Miss Flynn's most intimate friends were invited. The rooms were tastily decorated in yellow and everything arranged in such a fashion to make the event a lasting remembrance to the departing guest. Cards were played and dainty refreshments served.

Open New Kind of Creamery.

Joel G. Winkler, state dairy and food commissioner, was recently at Rothsay, Minn., where he assisted in the opening of a new creamery. This particular creamery, which is a co-operative affair, is the first in the state to buy and pay for cream according to quality. The scheme is expected to discourage the handling of impure cream.

Suit Against the A. O. U. W.

St. Paul, Minn., March 11.—Alleging that the grand lodge of Minnesota of the Ancient Order of United Workmen has failed for a number of years to meet its obligations to the supreme lodge, attorneys for William M. Narvis, president of the supreme lodge, filed a bill in equity today in the United States circuit court asking the court to grant the supreme lodge an accounting, and name a trustee to take charge of the grand lodge's funds.

The bill says that the state lodge has about $108,485 properly belonging to the supreme lodge.

It further alleges that the failure of the Minnesota lodge to meet its obligations and its apparent avowed intention to continue in such default in disregard of the rights of the supreme lodge, and beneficiaries of deceased members, is liable to induce other grand lodges to take similiar action and tie up the funds of the supreme lodge.

Besides the grand lodge, which is alleged to be a subsidiary of the supreme lodge, August F. Floerkey grand master; C. E. Larson, grand recorder, and J. F. MacGuire, grand receiver, are named as defendants.

St. Patrick's Day.

Tomorrow (Friday, March 17th) is St. Patrick's Day. The day will be observed at Crookston, as a general holiday for the entire city, and it is expected that all the surrounding towns will attend. It will be in the nature of the first appearance of the Bishop. The main service will be held at the opera house in the evening at 8 o'clock. A very nice and appropriate program has been prepared. The program includes vocal and instrumental music. The Right Rev. Bishop Corbett will deliver an address, and his reputation as a platform speaker is second to none in the state.

The new Cathedral School is so nearly completed that it will be thrown open to the public for inspection, and a dinner will be served there by the ladies of the parish.

The Crookston Band has been secured and will discourse music during the day and evening.

NORWAY.

In the little town of Grimstad, on the southern coast of Norway, stands an ancient, dilapidated and empty house. It is only one-story and was formerly a chemist's shop. The present proprietor is thinking either of selling the old place or rebuilding it. The empty house in question was once occupied by Henrik Ibsen. The alternative would almost amount to sacrilege, for it was in this unpretentious structure that the great playwright served his apprenticeship and afterwards carried on his business as a chemist. During the agitated period of 1848 and the time of the first war between Prussia and Denmark he passed his time here. Against the alternative proposal of the destruction of Ibsen's house George Brandes, a great admirer of the dramatist, appeals to the storthing to buy the house and preserve it as a national memorial. "Within the walls," writes M. Brandes, "Ibsen perceived the resplendent fame before him, both in poesy and glory. Grimstad, when Ibsen lived there, possessed but 800 inhabitants, and this little structure was the 'bourse' of the town. People gathered there to transact their business and discuss passing events. The souvenirs of Ibsen are rare in Norway," concludes M. Brandes. "Let us preserve this treasure."

The International Ski tournament, which is now in progress in Christiania, is attracting a great deal of attention and hundreds of people are flocking to Voxenkollen, where the contests are taking place. There are large delegations from Denmark, Finland and Sweden and there are scores of winter tourists from Germany and England who are taking in the event. The International Ski tournament, which is an annual event, has grown to such proportions that the hotels of the city make extra preparations to care for foreign guests.

Miss Anna Rogstad, the prominent suffrage leader in Norway, has been appointed a member of the military commission of the storthing. She replaces Commissioner General Bratlie, and is the first woman in the country who has ever occupied a seat in the legislative assembly. She was formerly a school teacher in Christiania and is now fifty-four years old. She is a strong speaker and has also won a reputation as a clever debater.

The Norwegian army budget has been made up by the judiciary commission and presented to the storthing. The expenditures estimated amount to 15,000,000 crowns, which is an increase of over 950,000 crowns over last year's budget. The increase is due the fact that army reorganization has practically been decided upon by the government.

The population of Norway is increasing in the country districts and decreasing in the coast cities of the country.

DENMARK.

Henrik Andersen, a twenty-three-year-old Danish sailor who has for several years done service on the English steamer Milton, had a most strange experience a few weeks ago while on the way from Rosario, in the Argentine Republic, to England. When in the center of the Atlantic Andersen fell overboard without any of his shipmates paying any attention to it, for none of them were around when it happened. When the Milton arrived at Southampton, Eng., the captain of the ship reported to Andersen's relatives in Copenhagen that he had fallen overboard and been drowned and that his body could never be recovered. On Dec. 28, however, the selfsame Andersen who fell overboard from the vessel in question bobbed up at the Danish consulate in Buenos Ayres. He related at the consulate that after he had fallen overboard he had succeeded in keeping himself above water by means of swimming for five hours, when he was picked up by the English trawler Notisement from Cardiff, which finally landed him in Buenos Ayres. One might well imagine the happiness and the joy which was evinced when Andersen came to visit his old mother and brothers and sisters between Christmas and New Year's.

During the past ten years Iceland, Denmark's far away dependency, has been making rapid progress, especially insofar as the fishing industry is concerned. Hitherto the whaling industry has been in the lead, but of latter years the fishing industry has been making as rapid and even more rapid strides. The general trade conditions of the islands have also vastly improved. Some time ago an English-American syndicate offered to build a harbor in Reykjavik, on the condition that the syndicate in question would be allowed to receive all the big income and the profits from the harbor for a period of thirty years. The city council, however, rejected the offer and has decided to erect its own harbor at a cost of 2,000,000 crowns.

Director Rudolph Wiese, for a number of years the manager of the large shoe factories at Roselund, in Odense, has been placed under arrest for embezzlement. The other day he made a confession that his embezzlements involved at least 75,000 crowns and that his operations in this line have been carried on for a period of five years. Some time ago he was compelled to make an assignment, when it was learned that his debts amounted to [illegible] crowns. The director in question has been engaged in vast speculations in South America and is also reported to have been an exceedingly high liver when in Copenhagen.

THE HOTBED.

As there are always those every spring who are taking up gardening for the first time it will be in place to again give simple directions for making the hotbed, which will not only pay for itself in the toothsome radishes and lettuce which it will provide for the table, but also in furnishing tomato, cabbage, cauliflower, pepper, eggplant, etc., for transplanting into the open ground. The location of the bed is important, and preferably this should be on the south side of a building or tight board fence, where the sun's rays will be cornered. The length and width of the hotbed will depend upon one's purpose and upon the dimension of the window sash which are available. The frame should be so built that the sash will slope to the south five or six inches and may be built about a trench dug in the ground or made of wider stuff set on the ground and banked with manure. We have tried both ways and prefer the former. Into the pit prepared should be placed eight or ten inches of fresh horse manure containing about one-third short straw or other litter, which will keep it from heating too rapidly. The chemical reaction which generates the heat will be hastened if a few pails of water are poured over the manure. This should be allowed to heat some before the earth is put in, which should be of a rich, mellow loam if possible and spread evenly to a depth of five inches. The sash should then be put on and things allowed to warm up. When the air in the bed shows a temperature of about 70 degrees the seed may be planted in rows or broadcast, as one may prefer. The bed should be watered frequently enough to keep the soil moist, and if the thermometer or hand shows the bed is getting too hot the sash should be lifted during the day to permit ventilation. Where one does not have window sash for the purpose white cotton cloth tacked on a frame will answer the same purpose if the weather is not too severe and will make the bed self ventilating. As a safeguard against a cold snap pieces of old carpet or canvas or a pile of straw with which to cover the bed should be kept handy. Before the plants which are to be transferred to the open ground are removed the sash should be removed entirely to allow the plants to toughen.

FOREIGN NEWS.

"BOOK TRUST" LOSES SUIT

Contract With St. Paul Board of Education Held Illegal.

In a decision at St. Paul Judge Kelly of the Ramsey county district court holds with the St. Paul school board against the American Book company, popularly known as the "book trust," and declares that the geographies of that company have been properly excluded from the schools.

The decision is sweeping, denying the alleged right of the school board to "contract" with the American Book company or any other book concern for a term of years. It denies the petition of the American Book company for a restraining order and vacates the order to show cause issued against the school board.

LAWMAKERS WORK SLOWLY

Only Twenty-two Measures Enacted and Signed by Governor.

Only twenty-two bills thus far have been passed by the legislature and approved by the governor. This is the lowest record for several sessions. Two years ago at this date there were seventy-two bills that had been passed and signed by the governor. That was about an average record or a little better.

The house had a performance that greatly amused the spectators in the gallery, but did not materially advance the legislative grind. After nearly two hours' work the members had passed one unimportant bill.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

About twenty farmers living near Marshall were some time ago induced to sign blanks that they supposed to be applications for the treatment of rheumatism and which later turned out to be notes in the amount of $80 each, payable on demand. The signers were notified by a Little Rock (Ark.) bank that it had purchased the notes and demanded payment. Suits have been begun to recover on the notes, as the bank claims to be an innocent purchaser.

Demanding that the railroads be required to put into effect rates from Eastern points to Albert Lea, as are exacted on shipments from the same points to Minneapolis, the Business Men's league of Albert Lea has filed a complaint with the interstate commerce commission against the Baltimore and Ohio and numerous other roads operating between the Atlantic seaboard and Minnesota points.

Attorney General George T. Simpson has begun suit against the Western Union Telegraph company for the recovery of $32,000 unpaid taxes for the year 1909. The case will come up at the next general term in the Ramsey county district court. To date the state holds claims against the company for unpaid taxes amounting to approximately $95,000.

W. H. Tomhave, the Minnesota agricultural college division expert selected by the Manchurian government to buy highbred sheep, cattle and hogs, to be shipped to China to raise the standard of native stock, has gone to Seattle to purchase the consignment and arrange for shipment.

A spectacular parade in which about 2,000 people participated was the big event of the last day of the state convention of Sunday school teachers at Mankato. There were represented over 100 towns and all of the eighty-one counties of the state.

President Elect George Edgar Vincent of the university will deliver his maiden speech as president of the institution before the superintendents' section of the Minnesota Educational association. The convention dates are March 31 and April 1.

Tibbs, Hutchings & Co., formerly of St. Paul, which recently was forced into bankruptcy at Minneapolis, has filed its schedules with the clerk of the United States district court, showing liabilities of $2,297,378.07, and assets of $3,005,568.08.

Simon Nelson, one of the prosperous farmers of Nevada township, Mower county, brought into market a carload of timothy seed, for which he received a check for $2,533.60.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Chris Overby, who was tried at Caledonia for the murder of Thrine Olson at Houston, was found guilty of manslaughter in the second degree and given an indeterminate sentence to Stillwater on the reformatory plan. Overby killed Olson by striking him on the head in a drunken quarrel.

Captain John Barrett, aged forty-five, of the Minneapolis fire department, sustained a fractured skull when a street car struck the hose cart on which he was riding to a fire. He was rushed to St. Barnabas hospital, where it is said that his condition is serious.

Facing a charge of assault and battery on his wife, Louis M. La Brie, forty-three years old, a waiter, committed suicide at St. Paul by hanging himself in a cell of the Rondo street police station with a strip of blanket.

Frank Becker, aged fifty, car coupler, was crushed to death by a Northern Pacific train in the Union depot sheds at St. Paul. Becker was kneeling on the tracks when the engine backed upon him.

John Ekenonois of Hibbing, a miner at the Rust property, was killed by a car on the mine dump. James B. Church, a woodsman, was killed by a falling tree at Camp 7 of Alger, Smith & Co.

The schools of the village of Deerwood have been closed on account of an epidemic of scarlet fever. The disease has not only attacked children, but adults as well.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

Delamus McElwain, a Minnesota pioneer, is dead at Fond du Lac, at the age of eighty-five. He came to Minnesota from Illinois in 1851 and settled on a homestead which is now the site of Northfield. He hauled the lumber used in building the first school house in St. Paul.

M. Weldert of Rice, aged sixty four years, arrived at St. Cloud to take treatment at the hospital. Just after entering the door he dropped dead from heart failure.

Anton N. Peltier, a resident of St. Paul since 1854, is dead. He was sixty five years of age and served in the Civil war in the Eleventh Minnesota.

Rev. Oscar Justus Stead, one of the most distinguished clergymen in the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church of the West, is dead at St. Paul.

William Rhodes, a prominent business man and old resident of St. Paul, is dead. He was fifty six years of age.

CROWDS HONOR DEAD POET

Funeral Procession at Stockholm Is Viewed by Thousands of People. Christiania Paper Advises Closer Relations Between Norway and Sweden In Preparation for Outside Trouble. Dr. Cook to Again Visit Copenhagen.

SWEDEN.

Not for years has there been a public funeral that attracted such widespread attention and such a large gathering of people as that of Gustaf Froding, which occurred in Stockholm Feb. 12. Flags floated at half mast from all the public buildings and as the procession proceeded from the poet's home through the principal thoroughfares of the city thousands of people lined the streets and stood with bared heads. It was a wonderful hold that this man Froding had on the Swedish people. The greatest crowds were found at Gustaf Adolf's "torg" and Strandvagen. When the procession reached the Klara cathedral that magnificent edifice was filled with people. The chancel in the cathedral had been beautifully and profusely decorated with palms and flowers and the coffin was literally covered with white roses, carnations and lilies. The cathedral was beautifully illuminated by electric lights and a chorus of the finest male voices in the city rendered some of the poet's favorite songs. Professor Soderblom officiated and delivered a funeral address which was very impressive and which was regarded as one of the finest efforts that have been listened to by a Stockholm audience for many a day. Some of Sweden's most prominent literary men were present at the funeral. The government was represented by Premier Lindmann and the royal house of Sweden by Prince Eugen. The remains were placed aboard a special train for Upsala, where the funeral cortege was met by the Upsala student chorus and societies, which escorted the remains to its last resting place in the Upsala cemetery.

According to reports the fight against tuberculosis is making good progress in Sweden. The matter did not receive much attention before 1901. In that year 2.90 persons out of every 1,000 living ones died of that dread disease. Since then the death rate has been gradually diminishing until 1909, when it was 2.53 for every 1,000 persons. The decrease was gradual every year except in 1908 when it was .02 more than in 1907. These figures apply only to the cities. While not such a rapid progress can be claimed for the country districts it is nevertheless noticeable that through the splendid exertions of the Anti-Tuberculosis society a vast amount of good has been done and there is also a marked decrease in the ravages of the disease there. The sanitariums in the various parts of the country are now succeeding in curing scores of persons every year and the claim that consumption cannot be cured does not hold water in Sweden any longer.

When Minister Graves celebrated Washington's birthday at the suite of the American legation on Strandvagen Feb. 22 last it was, so far as is known, the first time that the American holiday had thus been observed in Sweden. Minister Graves entertained about 200 guests, most of whom were members of the Swedish-American society and of the American colony at Stockholm.

The proposition to award the Nobel prize in literature to Gustaf Froding, the recent beloved poet, whose name is now a household word in Sweden, comes rather late. But that he was actually proposed has become known after his death. The two members of the committee who proposed his name several months ago were Professors Bothius and Noreen.

NORWAY.

The following rather alarming editorial appeared in a Christiania daily newspaper recently. The characteristic feature of it is that it urges Norway and Sweden to get closer together to be better prepared for trouble from the outside. It says: "Russia's general tendency toward expansion casts a shadow over Northwestern Europe. Stopped in the Far East, it seems inevitable that the czar's empire will seek to gain advantage in the West. Russia's need of an ice free port has been a subject of anxiety to Norwegians for half a century and the subjugation of Finland was regarded as the first step not only against Norway, but against all the Scandinavian countries. There are other indications pointing in the same direction. Russia lately began a series of operations providing for the strengthening of its districts on the Norwegian border by means of colonizing and the development of the fisheries industry in that region. So far all these facts have proceeded in a friendly manner and officially Russia and Norway are on the best of terms. No immediate danger is expected, but thinking men cannot refrain from considering the peril of the future. Of far greater consequence to the Russians than an ice free port in Finmarken would be the possession of Gothenburg in Sweden. Here might be stationed the powerful navy which has long been the dream of Russians. Gothenburg has all the appliances for the formation of a vast fleet, as well as excellent sailors for manning warships. The evasiveness of the St. Petersburg government respecting the Aaland islands is taken as a certain sign that Russia counts on the possibility of one day crossing Sweden. A Western port would be of infinitely more value than a port near the North pole. Sensible people realize that Norway and Sweden must get closer together, as the day may come when an alliance will be necessary. Such an alliance for defensive purposes already has been proposed by some of the Swedish papers. One thing that retards the taking of steps in this direction is the fear that Russia would resent it as an aggressive act and make it a pretext for hurrying on the policies now incubating on the banks of the Neva. Increasing tension between Germany and Britain is another clearly perceived peril to Norwegian neutrality and national life. It appears to be only a question of time when this bomb will explode, for the free navigation of the North sea in time of war is vital to the 70,000,000 people in Germany. Thus arises the danger to Norway, for in the event of war both Britain and Germany would be certain to make a grab for a desirable port on the west coast of this country."

The government has submitted a proposition to the storthing which would open to the Norwegian women all places of public trust with the exception of cabinet positions, military staffs and places in the diplomatic consular or ecclesiastical service. It was originally the intention to hold open for the women places in the ecclesiastical department, but clergymen all over the country vigorously protested against it, basing their protests on the words of St. Paul to the effect that "women shall have no voice in the congregation." The granting of suffrage to the women of Norway has involved not a few complications.

There are all kinds of rats in Christiania at present and everything is being done to rid the city of this terrible pest. They are infesting all the large cities and Christiania is having her share of them. Many small boys are busy trapping rats and some of them make good money, for there is a good bounty paid for the rodents.

DENMARK.

Rumors state that Dr. Cook intends to pay a visit to Copenhagen in the near future. What a different reception he will receive. Last time he was there he was accorded a royal reception, which even included the king himself and all the dignified professors of Copenhagen university. He will attract some attention even now, but he will have to move about rather cautiously, for the Danish people are not in as good humor now as when he arrived from his imaginary visit to the pole.

Andrew Carnegie's philanthropy has reached Denmark. Through the offices of United States Minister Maurice Egan he has offered to establish a [illegible] hero fund in Denmark. The foreign office has already expressed its gratitude for the proposed gift.

Rev. Mathiesen of Copenhagen, who is the editor of "Kristeligt Dageblad," has been sentenced for four months' imprisonment by the government for publishing some uncomplimentary things regarding Prince Harold.

GENEVIEVE WHEAT

Genevieve Wheat, by reason of an exceptional voice, careful training and an experience and musicianship more than usual, has attained a prominent position among the leading contraltos of the country. During a six years residence in New York and Pittsburgh she filled several important church positions and was a most successful concert and oratorio singer, being in constant demand throughout the East and Middle West. She has appeared as soloist with the Brooklyn Choral Society, Oberlin musical Union, Musical Art Society of Pittsburgh, Mt. Vernon, New York, choral Society and many other prominent musical organizations, and made two festival tours with the Pittsburgh Orchestra and one with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, meeting with flattering success.

Miss Wheat has a voice of splendid range and quality and her clear enunciation adds much to the enjoyment of her singing.

Miss Wheat will appear with this orchestra at the Auditorium Thief River Falls, on Sunday evening, March 26th.

CHARLES HARGREAVES

(With Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra)—

During the past few years no American tenor has risen more rapidly toward the top of his profession than Charles Hargreaves. Although he is still young, Mr Hargreaves' experience has been extensive and of such variety that he is equipped for every form of work that may be necessary for him to undertake.

After he had scored emphatically with the people of the East and middle West as a concert and oratorio singer, Mr. Hargreaves was chosen to fill the position of leading tenor with the celebrated operatic organization, the Bostonians. His success in the leading parts in the operas "Robin Hood", "Maid Marian", and others in the repertoire of the Bostonians, was immediate and emphatic.

To more completely round out his abilities, Mr. Hargreaves went abroad last year where for six months he sang leading operatic tenor roles in Germany and Italy. As the result of the admirable impression he made, especially in the operas of "Faust", Lohengrin" and "Martha", he was offered a three years' contract as first tenor of the Hof Theatre, at Coburg.

However, as the objective point of this young musician was concert and oratorio the offer was declined and returning to New York he accepted a position of solo tenor at the fashionable West End Collegiate Church, and was secured for this year's spring tour of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. At the Auditorium, Sunday evening, March 26th.

LUCILLE TEWKSBURX

(Leading American Concert Soprano with Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra.

Lucille Tewksbury who has won a position as one of the foremost of America's concert sopranos, is this year making her second tour with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. Her success last spring was so pronounced and the requests for her return so general that the orchestra management re-engaged her immediately at the close of last spring's tour.

Mme. Tewksbury's voice is a lovely soprano, clear and bell like and she is an oratorio singer par excellence, with all the requisites of musicianship, style, interpretation, in the highest degree. She has sung with many of the foremost organizations of the country and with the greatest success, captivating public and musicians alike. Her charming stage appearance and clear enunciation are further factors which have helped to make her one of the favorite singers now before the American public. At the Auditorium Thief River Falls on March 26th 1911.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS

VOL XXVIII THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, MARCH 23, 1911 NUMBER 13

WHICH IS WHICH?

Letter From Steenerson States that Red Lake Lands Are Open.

Department of the Interior Says Lands Will Be Opened on May 15th.

In reply to an inquiry regarding the opening of the Red Lake Lands Mr. Andrew Trovaton, of this city, received a communication from Congressman Halvor Steenerson this week in which he states that the lands are NOW open and have been since the act authorizing the re-opening of those lands was signed by the President and became a law.

Mr. Steenerson's letter expresses the belief that was generally eminent at the time just after the bill was passed that the lands were then open to entry, but a bulletin, sent out by the interior department designated the date for the opening of these lands as May 15th, a copy of which is published on page four of this issue. The letter received by Mr. Trovaton is as follows:

House of Representatives, U. S.

Washington, D. C.
March 16, 1911.

Andrew Trovaton, Esq.,
Thief River Falls,
Minnesota.

My dear Sir:

I have your favor of recent date and in reply would say that my bill to provide for opening to homestead entry the remaining lands in the Elevens Towns became a law on February 16, 1911, and the land is NOW open for entry.

I take pleasure in enclosing a copy of the law.

Your's Very Truly,
H. Steenerson.

Be it enacted by the State and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter all lands ceded under the act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in Minnesota", approved February twentieth, nineteen hundred and four, and undisposed of, shall be subject to homestead entry at the price of four dollars per acre, payable as provided in section three of said act, for all lands not heretofore entered; and for all lands embraced in canceled entries the price shall be the same as that at which they were originally entered: Provided, That where such entries have been or shall hereafter be canceled pursuant to contests, the contestant shall have a preference right to enter the land embraced in such canceled entry, as prescribed in the act of July twenty sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two: Provided further, That all lands entered under this act shall, in addition to the payments herein provided for, be subject to drainage charges, if any, authorized under the act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota", approved May twentieth, nineteen hundred and eight.

Approved, February 16, 1911.

"Grand" open April 1st.

The "Grand" is the name of the new theatre which is to be opened up in the Masonic block on Main street in the near future.

R. D. Holt, the proprietor, arrived in the city last week and is getting things in readiness and is having the building utilized for that purpose.

He expects to have his outfit in a short time and will be ready to open up about April 1st. In addition to the moving pictures he intends to book first-class vaudeville attraction.

"Red Acre Farm", the senior class play, contains hundreds of laughs. Come out and take a few and at the same time assist a worthy cause.

Marjorie Miller Passes Away.

Marjorie Marie, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anton Miller, passed away last Saturday evening about 6:30 o'clock after a brief illness from scarlet fever.

She was taken ill a little better than a week ago while attending school in this city and while at the time her sickness was regarded as only a minor illness she rapidly became worse and it developed that she had scarlet fever.

Little Marjorie was conscious up to the very last, and fully realized that death was near and bade a tender farewell to her sorrowing parents and friends.

She was born near Osage, Iowa, on June 5th, 1899, and was at the time of her death, 11 years and 3 months.

She is mourned by father, mother, four sisters and four brothers, all of whom, with the exception of Clark W. and Loren A. were with her at the time of her death.

The funeral services were held last Tuesday afternoon.

Play a Success.

The Scandinavian populace who were present at the production of "Til Sæters" at the Auditorium last Friday evening had a chance to witness a pretty good reproduction of the scenes and the costumes in the highlands of the "old country".

The play was given under the auspices of the Brage Choir and the proceeds will go towards defraying the expenses of the Norwegian Sangerfest to be held in this city in June.

This is the second time this play has been presented in this city, it having been presented about two years ago in the Evenson Hall under the auspices of the Sons of Norway. The members of the cast were, with possibly two or three exceptions, the same as that which composed the cast about two or three years ago.

In addition to the play a fine musical program was rendered. The Brage choir gave a few well rendered musical numbers, and Mr. Lassesson rendered a vocal solo and was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Bjerkhoel.

Jr. Mr. Lasseson of this city possesses one of the best baritone-tenors in this part of the state.

United Church Notices.

There will be no services next Sunday!

The announcement of English services for next Sunday evening was a mistake. Please notify your friends.

At the regular business meeting of the congregation held last week, it was decided to continue building the church. Work will be resumed within a couple of weeks.

Dr. O. F. Melby was also admitted as a member of the congregation.

Helen Gladys, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Longer, was baptized at the English services last Sunday evening.

Sunday School will be be held at the Swedish Church Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Getting In Readiness.

Peter Noble, the Greek candy maker who has leased the Grundy building on 3rd. street, arrived in the city last week and is making preparations to open his candy factory. Some of the fixtures have already arrived but most of them will be forthcoming this week. Mr. Noble is a candy maker of considerable note and has had factories in some of the largest cities of the U. S. He has all the latest equipment necessary for the out put of any confection on the market and will conduct a wholesale and retail business.

Just received a car of fine oats that would do for seed. Tessum and Tenneson.

JACK FOTCH,

School Notes.

The Seniors entertained the Juniors and the high school faculty last Friday evening at the Odd fellows hall. The room was beautifully decorated and nearly all the 75 persons present were costumed to represent some historical or well known character. Refreshments, games and a jolly crowd made the hours spin by like minutes, and though the party was prolonged to a late hour still it was considered all too brief.

A two days' institute for farmers and a pure seed corn contest are being held this week at the Lincoln gymnasium. Several institute workers from the college of agriculture are in charge and Henry Pope, President of the Upper Minnesota Corn Growers Association, is looking after the corn contest. This meeting closes the series of farmers' conventions which have been presented by the department of agriculture of the local high school. The corn awards will be announced next week.

State high school examinations are being held this week for the grammar grades in the Washington building. Only the common subjects are being written on this week.

The scholars and teachers were shocked Monday morning on hearing that little Marjorie Miller of Miss Thompson's room in the Washington school had passed away the preceding Saturday evening. She was a studious child of gentle nature and had endeared herself to all those with whom she had come in contact. SCHOOL NOTES extends the sympathy of the teachers and students to the bereaved relatives.

One of the most significant actions ever taken by the local schools is contained in the simple statement, that the young ladies of the graduating class, at the suggestion of the superintendent, unanimously decided to provide but one plain white dress for both class night exercises and graduation night. This innovation is no reflection on former classes, but is simply an indication of wise and necessary progress in matters pretaining to education. These young ladies deserve great credit for so unanimous a choice in favor of simplicity and economy and for the sacrifice of fond hopes of the possession of costly gowns, which ordinarily are a part of graduation. It is hoped this departure will meet with the approval of sensible people in the city and establish a precedent for all future graduates of this institution.

The North Star College basket ball team of Warren will play the Lincoln team at the high school gymnasium on Friday evening. A preliminary game between the Juniors and the Commerical Normals will also take place. These contests will be fast ones and all should see them.

Hauges Church

I. L. Lasseson, Pastor.

Zoar Church. Services next Sunday at 10.30 A. M. at Kjesbo school house. Immanuels Church. Services next Sunday at 3 p. m. All are cordially invited.

Patronize a home proposition, "Red Acre Farm", by the graduating class of the high school.

Taxes Due Saturday

All personal property taxes not paid before next Saturday will become delinquent and the usual penalty will be affixed thereto. The real estate taxes will become delinquent on the 1st of June, and one half of these taxes will have to be paid before that time or the usual 10 per cent penalty will be thereto attached. In cases where one half of these taxes are paid the last half falls due on or before October 31.

The County taxes for 1910 were not extended on the tax lists of Red Lake County, so our county board levied 8 mills for county purposes by authority of S. F. 67 passed by the present Legislature.

This is not an extra tax, but simply a part of the tax for 1910, which, on account of the division of Red Lake county, could not be collected by the old county. This amount. together with the amount paid Red Lake County for State, School and Municipal taxes, does not amount to as much as the tax would have been had division not carried.

Held Meeting Yesterday

A district meeting of the presidents, managers and secretaries of the co-operative stores of northern Minnesota was held in the basement of the Co-operative Store yesterday afternoon. About twenty members were present at this meeting. Mr. Van Horn, president of the Right Relationship League of Minneapolis, was present and presided over the meeting.

Expect Many Singers.

Word was received in this city yesterday that the Warren and the Devil's Lake choirs had joined the Red River Norwegian Singer's Association, and with this addition about 250 singers are expected to participate in the Sangerfest to be held in this city in June. The committee on arrangements is making determined efforts to make this a great event and to make the stay of the visitors a most pleasant one and urge the citizens to lend their assistance and help push the thing along.

Strandquist

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Johnson and family left us today to go to their new home at Erskine, Minn., where he will take up his duties as section foreman.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Y. Yackel and family, formerly at Calloway, Minn., have come among us, and we all bid him welcome to our town, as Soo Line Agent.

The seed special stopped at our town for a forty minute visit and a great many were on hand to hear the lectures, which proved a great help and benefit to all present.

Ole Oistad left us last evening for a few days visit at Minneapolis.

Helmgren and Lofstrom have opened up their pool room for the summer, and from the noise and excitement coming from there it must be proving a great success.

We had a most enjoyable dance in the hall last Saturday evening and a very jolly time was spent by all present.

There will be a basket party at N. P. Nelson's, given by the school here in town on Saturday evening, April 8. Let us all come and have one round of a good time.

Mr. Arnold, Soo Line auditor, made us a visit last week. He found everything in a most satisfactory shape and gave several bouquets about the good work being done here.

Mrs. Belle Larson, mother of Lewis Anderson and Mrs. Raymond, has been quite ill, but is now on the road to recovery, and will soon be up and around again.

The seniors have never yet failed to give more than they promised at their annual class plays. "Red Acre Farm" will be no exception. Friday, March 31st at the Auditorium.

COMMENCES TODAY

Farmers Institutes To Be Held In Lincoln High School Begins Today.

Institutes Held For The Farmers of Pennington, Red Lake and Marshall Counties.

Today opens the two day farmers' institutes held at the Lincoln high school gymnasium for the farmers of Pennington, Red Lake and Marshall counties. This will undoubtedly be one of the most interesting agricultural meetings ever held in this city.

These meetings will be conducted by the state college of agricultural at St. Anthony Park, St. Paul, and five specialists are now expected to be present.

In addition to the institutes a seed corn contest will also take place in which many prizes are listed to be offered.

Considerable time and money has been expended to make the meeting a very successful one.

Basket Ball Tomorrow Eve.

Tomorrow evening the local high school basket ball team will try conclusions with the fast North Star College team of Warren. The latter team, it is stated, has a very strong team this year, but are not to be outdone by the local team who has put considerable time in practice and are in the best of condition.

An exciting preliminary will be played between the Juniors and the Commercial-Normal College students and this, combined with the main contest promises to be a very good athletic entertainment. The North Star Team will arrive over the Wheatline in the evening. The game will be called at 8:30 o'clock and the usual price of admission will be charged, 10 and 25 cents.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

SENATE KILLS CONGDON BILL

Reapportionment Measure Killed Beyond Hope of Resurrection at This Session.

By a vote of 27 to 36 the Congdon reapportionment bill, drafted by the house committee, was killed in the state senate. Then, in order to make its demise still more definite, a motion to reconsider was put and lost, thereby ending all chance for reviving it at the Thirty-seventh session.

The fight on the bill was spectacular. Its death had been predicted, was known to be imminent and yet friends of the measure packed the available standing room and filled the galleries back of the president's chair.

Tonnage tax was killed in the house by a vote of 70 to 48. This is the third time a measure of this kind has been considered by the legislature. The Henry Bjorge bill was killed in 1907 by a small majority. Two years ago a measure fathered by the same member was passed and vetoed by Governor Johnson.

MAKES SWEEPING CHARGES

Duluth Board of Trade Alleges Unfair Grain Rates.

Sweeping charges of discrimination against Duluth and in favor of Minneapolis in railroad rates for the transportation of grain and seeds from points in Minnesota are contained in the complaint filed with the interstate commerce commission by the Duluth board of trade against the Great Northern, the Omaha, the Milwaukee, the Northwestern, the Minneapolis and St. Louis, the South Dakota Central, the Illinois Central, the Rock Island, the Soo, the Northern Pacific, the Pierre, Rapid City and Northwestern, the Chicago Great Western and the Burlington roads.

The complaint is directed particularly to the rates from Southern North Dakota and all of South Dakota and in Minnesota south of a line drawn from Breckenridge to Minneapolis.

FOUR PERSONS KILLED IN ELEVATOR FALL

Accident Occurs in St. Paul Manufacturing Plant.

An elevator at Gordon & Ferguson's wholesale house and factory at St. Paul, loaded with thirteen employes, slid down from the fourth floor to the basement. It landed without jarring any of the employes from their feet. An instant later the iron counterweights, weighing 3,500 pounds, crashed through the ceiling of the elevator into the throng of humanity, crushing most of them to the floor, killing three instantly, fatally injuring one and injuring four. The dead are: Tillie Buesing, aged twenty-four; Anna Hoeller, aged sixteen; William Zschelsche, aged thirty-seven, and Gertrude Schmidt, aged twenty-five.

Only five escaped unscatched, including the elevator man. When the car started to slide downward the elevator operator threw on the clutch threw off the power and tried to reverse. The car continued to slide. Even the safety device failed to operate. No injuries would have resulted if the weights had not been knocked off the top of the slides as the car reached the basement. The elevator was inspected by the city Feb. 28 and found to be in good condition. It has never before figured in an accident.

SIGNS THIRTY-THREE BILLS

Minnesota Governor Approves That Many So Far.

Just thirty-three bills have been signed by the governor and deposited with the secretary of state. Two years ago on the same date ninety bills had gone through the same course, although the session convened five days later at that time.

The senate in committee of the whole approved Hanson's bill to prohibit the sale of malt liquors, except in saloons or for medicinal purposes at drug stores. There was only a small vote against the bill. The object of the bill is to stop the sale of beer under the guise of malt.

It took the house two and one-half hours to pass twenty-four bills. Of these there was none of wide importance.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota.

The dam at Rapidan, constructed by the H. M. Byllesby company of Chicago, has been practically completed and the water has been run through the different turbines and the generators put into operation. The current in use in Mankato is coming from the dam and the plant will gradually be worked up to its full limit. The water in the reservoir back of the dam is fifty feet deep and the reservoir is slowly filling. When full the water will be sixty feet deep and the lake will extend back several miles.

Seven farmers' clubs were organized in as many school districts adjacent to Red Wing as the result of the recent meetings held under the direction of R. M. Peterson, superintendent of the agricultural department of the Red Wing public schools.

More than $7,000 was added to the premium list of the next Minnesota state fair at a meeting of the state fair board. It also was decided to have two days of automobile racing instead of one.

A party of Dutch and Belgian farmers with their wives and children, 261 in all, arrived in New York last week en route to Minnesota to take up farming. They arrived on the steamer Kroonland.

W. C. Mitchell of Albert Lea has been appointed assistant factory inspector, vice T. J. Moonan. He will take office April 1.

Six hundred teachers attended the annual convention of the Southeastern Minnesota Teachers' association at Winona.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

Dr. Curran W. Higgins, who practiced under the name of Dr. Bertha Shepard, admitted in district court at Minneapolis that he had caused the death of Mrs. Laura Blacketter, who died last July from the effect of an illegal operation. Dr. Higgins pleaded guilty to a charge of manslaughter in the second degree. He was fined $1,000, paid his fine and all charges against him were dismissed.

John J. Ackley committed suicide at St. Cloud by drinking carbolic acid. He told a passerby of his deed and was rushed to a hospital, but died in a few minutes. In his pocket was found an Elk traveling card issued by the Escanaba (Mich.) lodge. He was about forty-five years of age. Despondency is given as the motive for his rash deed.

Robert Peterson, a farmer, was fatally injured while hauling logs near Amboy. A log rolled upon one of his legs, breaking the bone in two places and crushing the bone between the fractures. Blood poisoning set in and his leg had to be amputated, death resulting in a few days.

Officer Joseph Vermotte of Minneapolis, aged thirty-two, was shot in the right arm by two robbers. He was taken to the city hospital. The wound is not such, it is believed, as to endanger the policeman's life. The bandits escaped.

Fifteen horses and a number of cows were burned to death in a fire which destroyed the barn of Patrick Rowles at Belle Creek, Goodhue county. The loss will reach $5,000.

Peter Nelson, a farmer living north of Albert Lea, sustained the loss of a large barn and all its contents by a fire. Thirty-five head of cattle were burned.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

A veteran of the Illinois cavalry regiment of which Robert Ingersoll was the colonel, Captain William Currie, eighty-six years old, is dead at Minneapolis. Captain Currie was a native of Caledonia, N. Y. He came West in early life and went into business in Peoria, Ill. He enlisted in Colonel Ingersoll's regiment at the outbreak of the war, but was soon appointed quartermaster for the department of the Northwest, serving in this capacity through the war.

William H Jones, eighty-three years old, a resident of Minnesota since [illegible], and living at Excelsior since 1857, is dead. Mr. Jones came to Minnesota from Bloomington, Ill., settled at St. Anthony, staying there a year and then went to Lake Minnetonka, settling on a claim in Carsons bay. After a year on the claim he went to Excelsior and opened a general merchandise store, which he conducted until about fifteen years ago.

Paul Van Vlissinger died very suddenly while on his way from his house to the postoffice in the town of Hitterdal. He was seventy years old and a pioneer of Clay county. He served as county auditor and county commissioner several years and later was cashier of the Moorhead National bank and cashier of the Security State bank of Hitterdal.

Alonzo Herbert Linton, for half a century identified with railroad construction in the Northwest, is dead at Minneapolis. He was born in Johnstown, Pa., in 1836, came to Wisconsin in 1854 and a few years later to Minnesota.

Edwin W. Dike, three times elected treasurer of the state of Minnesota, is dead at Santa Monica, Cal., aged ninety-one. Mr. Dike removed to Santa Monica ten years ago.

UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS

Minnesota Can Secure Next National Corn Show.

Minnesota will secure the national corn show of 1912, providing the state legislature appropriates enough money to erect the $300,000 agricultural building at the state fair grounds. The guaranty of $50,000, it was announced, has already been cared for by the Twin Cities. C. H. Stevenson, manager of the exposition, and general secretary of the Corn association, told the committee that the show is already to come to the Twin Cities if a suitable building is erected to house it. Plans for the proposed agricultural building were shown at the luncheon and met with Mr. Stevenson's approval.

SAID CHARGES ARE FILED

Dismissal of Minnesota Adjutant General Asked.

A letter containing charges of procrastination and inefficiency, it is reliably reported, against Adjutant General Fred B. Wood has been received by Governor Eberhart from E. M. Van Duzee, Jr., former captain and adjutant of the Third Minnesota infantry. Neither the governor's office nor Mr. Van Duzee, however, would give out the contents of the communication. It was learned from a reliable source, however, that the letter asks the dismissal of General Wood, asserting that several officers have resigned owing to dissatisfaction with the administration of militia affairs.

FAIRLY EVENLY DIVIDED

Wet and Dry Forces Running Close in Minnesota.

Returns from 192 towns in the state which voted on the "license or no license" issue show the "no license" forces are still in the lead with 100 towns and villages voting wet and ninety-two voting "dry."

The dry forces hold their own over the state, however, according to men who were in charge of the dry campaign. Notable gains were made by the temperance forces in Otter Tail county, while Osakis, dry for two years, voted to license saloons.

TOWN HAS NARROW ESCAPE

Fire Causes Loss of $100,000 at Mapleton, Minn.

Mapleton was threatened by fire that destroyed the Mapleton mills and adjoining property, entailing a loss of $100,000.

The mills were situated in the northwestern part of town. Fire, [illegible] to be due to a defective [illegible] broke out at 3:30 a. m. A strong [illegible] blowing from the northwest [illegible] the blaze into a conflagration which for a time threatened to envelop the town.

The local fire department and [illegible] brigade fought [illegible] the fire under control and [illegible] after practically the entire [illegible] had turned out.

The mills, elevator and [illegible] smaller buildings were totally destroyed. Two freight cars, [illegible] with merchandise, on a Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul track, were destroyed.

END CAME UNEXPECTEDLY

Supreme Court Justice Jaggard Dies in Bermuda.

Justice Edwin A. Jaggard of the state supreme court died of heart failure in Bermuda, where he went shortly after the first of the year for his health. Letters lately received from him by friends in this city spoke encouragingly of his condition and the announcement of his death comes as a shock to those who knew him.

Justice Jaggard's departure for Bermuda followed a general breakdown, brought on by a severe affliction of the eyes. He had been under the care of physicians for some time and it was thought his condition was improving. An attack of ptomaine poisoning weakened him to such an extent that on the advice of his physician he determined to go to the Bermudas for a month or two.

Justice Jaggard was one of the most lovable men who ever lived in St. Paul. He was always courteous to every one who approached him, though possessing a quiet dignity which befitted one in his position. He was fifty-one years of age and was a native of Pennsylvania.

FATHER AND SON KILLED

Peter Gludt and His Boy Electrocuted at Lake City, Minn.

Peter Gludt, a business man of Lake City, and his son Elmer were electrocuted on a street in that city.

An electric wire broke near their home and fell into the street. It became entangled with telephone wires and young Gludt, who was a lineman employed by the telephone company, went out to fix it. As soon as he touched the wires he received a shock and fell back as though dead. His father saw his plight and immediately went to his rescue.

The older man, when he took hold of the body of his son, was also struck by the electric current and immediately became helpless. The wife and mother then hurried to the scene and managed to detach the bodies from the burning wires. She was not injured. Both men died.

The older Gludt was fifty-five years of age and is survived by his wife and two sons. Elmer, the dead boy, was twenty.

COUNTY OPTION LOSES AGAIN

Minnesota Senate Kills Bill by Decisive Vote.

By a vote of 37 to 24 county option was defeated in the senate following a debate which lasted less than two hours.

Former Justice T. D. O'Brien's substitute for the two employers' liability and workingmen's compensation bills now before the senate was introduced by Senators J. E. Haycraft and M. J. McGrath. A similar bill was introduced Friday in the house. It abolishes common law defenses to personal injury suits, but contains no schedule of compensations.

An agricultural school bill, providing twenty new agricultural high schools in addition to the ten provided by the Putnam act of two years ago, was agreed upon by the house committee on agricultural schools. This will make a total of thirty of those schools.

IN COURT FOR CONTEMPT

St. Paul Member of the Minnesota Legislature.

State Representative John D. O'Brien of St. Paul and his attorney, David F. Peebles, were before Judge Lewis of the Ramsey county district court to answer a charge of contempt of court against Dr. O'Brien. After hearing the proposition argued Judge Lewis took the matter under consideration.

Dr. O'Brien has brought suit for divorce, alleging his wife held him a prisoner for six hours in a locked room, Mrs. O'Brien holding the key. Judge Bunn issued an order Jan. 28 directing the lawmaker to pay his wife $50 a month for her living expenses and $100 attorney's fees during the pendency of the action. Dr. O'Brien refused to obey the order and he was cited for criminal contempt.

ALLEGES UNDUE INFLUENCE

Affidavit by Grand Juror Concerns St. Paul Pastor.

Rev. Dr. Samuel G. Smith, pastor of the People's church of St. Paul, is accused of attempting to influence a member of the grand jury on a matter pending before that body in an affidavit signed by Thomas L. Wann, a member of the grand jury.

Mr. Wann swears that Dr. Smith attempted to influence him to secure a "no bill" as to Dr. Eugene Hubbell, a member of Dr. Smith's congregation, on the charge of having performed a criminal operation on Rose Ibe, from the alleged effect of which the young woman died at the city hospital.

ATTEMPT AT MURDER FAILS

Minnesotan Wounds Wife and Then Commits Suicide.

Christian Gilbert, aged sixty-three, of Oxford, Isanti county, shot and wounded his wife in the ear and right hand and later shot himself in the right breast, dying instantly.

Gilbert approached his wife with the remark, "Now you must die," and seized her by the neck, at the same time shooting off a portion of her right ear. She stabbed him by the arm and he shot again, the bullet hitting her in the hand. Both wounds are slight.

SWEDISH EDITOR IS DEAD

Berndt G. Anderson Passes Away at St. Paul.

Berndt G. Anderson of St. Paul, former state food and dairy commissioner and for the past thirty years an associate editor of the Minnesota Stats Tidning and editor-in-chief of the Skaffaren, a state organ of the Swedish Lutheran church, died of cancer of the throat at the advanced age of seventy-one years. Mr. Anderson had been ill since Jan. 1, giving up his work as associate editor of the Stats Tidning Jan. 13.

The deceased was born in Lund, Sweden, Aug. 2, 1840. He came to this country in 1880, going direct to St. Paul, where he soon became connected with the Minnesota Stats Tidning. He was very active in politics of the state, being an ardent Republican. He was also a very active member of the Swedish Lutheran church of the state.

In 1893 he was appointed state food and dairy commissioner by Knute Nelson, who was then governor, which office he held for six years, having the distinction of being the first Swede in Minnesota who was ever appointed a chief of a state department.

Mr. Anderson is survived by a widow, three sons and two daughters.

ASKS DELAY ON RECIPROCITY

Resolution Adopted by Minnesota Senate.

After a debate during the course of which Senator McGrath hotly declared that President Taft either "lied" while making his tariff speech at Winona two years ago, or is "lying" now when he proposes to remove the tariff on Canadian products, the senate adopted the Rockne resolution requesting the Minnesota senators and representatives in congress to use all the power at their command to postpone until next December action on the Canadian reciprocity treaty.

The debate brought out the fact that a majority of the senators are not familiar with the terms of the treaty and they want the measure laid over until the farmers of the state learn its provisions. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 26 to 36.

The house passed the Congdon reapportionment bill by a vote of 85 to 31.

FAVORS BASEBALL ON SUNDAY

Minnesota Senate Defeats Bill Repealing the Law.

The state senate killed Senator Sageng's bill repealing the law of 1909 permitting Sunday baseball. On the final vote there were 20 for the bill and 28 for Sunday ball.

In committee of the whole the senators let loose some of their long pent up oratory on Moonan's bill to repeal the laws giving pensions to the defenders of the Indian outbreak of 1862. The bill was finally killed.

The senate judiciary committee, by a vote of 12 to 6, voted to recommend for passage the Moonan-Haycraft bill for a constitutional amendment limiting the membership of any county in the senate to four.

BANKER FINED FOR CONTEMPT

Minneapolis Man Must Pay $250 or Go to Workhouse.

Andrew D. Clarke, aged sixty-nine, former president of the Minnesota National bank of Minneapolis, was fined $250 for contempt of court with an alternative of thirty days in the workhouse.

Clarke pleaded guilty to contempt in disposing of stock in the State Bank of Algona, Ia., and 10,000 acres of North Dakota land, following the issuance of a restraining order by Judge H. D. Dickinson forbidding the sale or transfer of any of his holdings until the validity of a divorce obtained by him at Carson City, Nev., had been determined.

FATALLY WOUNDED IN FIGHT

Ely (Minn.) Saloon Man Stabbed by Austrian Miner.

John Pluth, a saloon keeper of Ely, and Tom Marinpell, an Austrian miner, who was in the former's place of business, engaged in a fight, the former using a revolver and the latter a knife. Pluth is reported to be dying and Marinpell is under arrest. Marinpell had some quarrel with Pluth's son and the father sent the boy away and started to subdue the miner.

The men produced weapons. Pluth fired two shots without effect. Marinpell stabbed Pluth just below the heart. No hope is held for his recovery.

Kick of Cow Is Fatal.

Kicked by a cow a month ago, Walter, the fourteen-year-old son of E. Cash, a Little Falls dairyman, is dead in that city from its effects. The bruise soon developed into blood poisoning and an operation did not eliminate the trouble.

Saves Crippled Mother.

Mrs. Victoria Pederson, twenty-two years of age, at the greatest risk to her own life saved her invalid mother, a cripple, from burning to death in a fire which completely destroyed their house at Pike lake.

Wire Worker Electrocuted.

While working on the crossbeam of an electric wire pole at Minneapolis Harry League, thirty-one years of age, was electrocuted. He expired twenty minutes after 2,300 volts had passed through his body.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

DISTANCE TARIFF BILL KILLED

Cashman Measure Defeated In Upper Branch of State Legislature by Vote of 29 to 32.

The state senate has defeated the Cashman distance tariff bill, the final vote on the measure being 29 for and 32 against it. The opinions of Attorney General Simpson, ex-Attorney General Young and former Justice T. D. O'Brien that the passage of the bill would wipe out the work done by the state in the commodity rate cases were used with telling effect, but for these opinions the result might have been different.

The debate concerned itself only with the main arguments, Senators Cashman and Putnam speaking for it and Dwinnell and Clague against it. When they were through the vote was taken.

What is known as the university deficiency bill, calling for an appropriation of $636,442, was disposed of by the senate committee on finance after many days of hearings and figurings and delays for investigation of items, but only after all the items for equipment had been subjected to a flat cut of 10 per cent, or a total reduction of $64,340.

Initiative and referendum, by a vote of 57 to 50, was made a special order for Thursday, March 9, at the session of the house.

By a vote of six to five the house committee on compensation of public officials turned down the senate bill introduced by Senator Boyle to increase the salary of the state treasurer from $3,500 to $5,000. The bill already has passed the senate.

The senate, under suspension of the rules, passed the university deficiency bill introduced by Senator J. T. Elwell, Senator Elwell adopted the reduced figures on the estimated cost of equipment of the various university buildings and embodied them in a new bill.

OPPOSES EXTREME PENALTY

Governor Eberhart Fails to Fix Date for Hanging.

The Le Sueur county grand jury has requested the legislature to inquire why Governor Eberhart "refuses and neglects" to fix a date for the execution of Martin O'Malley, sentenced to death Oc. 29, 1910, by Judge Morrison.

Under the law the governor has ninety days after sentence is passed in which he is to fix a date for the execution. Governor Eberhart is opposed to capital punishment and is said to be unwilling to act.

The O'Malley case was taken before the state board of pardons, which considered it Jan. 9 and refused a commutation.

Representative McKenzie of Gaylord has a bill before the house and Senator Peterson of Litchfield has introduced it in the senate abolishing capital punishment. The governor has postponed action in the O'Malley case to await the legislature's course on the bill, which he strongly favors.

TO PROVIDE SAVINGS BANKS

Minnesota Bankers Urge Passage of New Bill.

A bank bill to permit the establishment of savings banks in every city and village of the state was proposed by a delegation of bankers at a joint meeting of the house and senate banking committees. The bankers said the object of the scheme is to compete with the government postal savings banks and keep the money for investment at home. Under the present law there are but ten savings banks in the state, these being confined to Minneapolis, St. Paul, Winona, Mankato and Red Wing.

CHILD IS SHOT BY PLAYMATE

Accidental Discharge of Shotgun Fatal to Girl.

Bowla Lovak, seven years of age, was accidentally shot through the heart at Ely when a shotgun in the hands of a neighbor boy, Joseph Kerus, seven years old, was accidentally discharged.

The boy took his father's shotgun down from above the bed, inserted a loaded shell, aimed at the little girl who was peeking at him through the door, which was opened slightly, and touched the trigger. The girl's death was instantaneous.

Shoots Girl and Himself.

As the result of a lovers' quarrel at the village of Hopkins Laura Miller, nineteen years old, employed in a Minneapolis department store, has a bullet hole in her thumb and Jacob Frydie, twenty years old, is in the town jail with two bullets in his abdomen. His condition is serious.

Lowest Price in Four Years.

Wheat for May delivery sold in the Minneapolis market Friday at 96¼ cents, the lowest price since the spring of 1907. In August, 1909, May wheat was down to 94¼ cents momentarily. A year ago the price of Minneapolis May wheat was $1.14¼.

V.—Where Is Your Talent?

Remember the case of the man who took his talent, wrapped it in a napkin and buried it?

Not only did his master punish him for his folly, but his conduct has become a byword.

The world has progressed since his time. Modern conditions have developed a kind of man who is even more useless than the one who buried his talent. HE IS THE MAN

WHO SENDS HIS MONEY OUT OF TOWN TO BUY FROM MAIL ORDER HOUSES.

The man who buried his talent at least had the talent to show for it. If we all spent our money out of town in a short time we would have nothing to show for it except BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

The man who patronizes home industries benefits the people he deals with and benefits himself. His conduct is like that of the good and faithful servant who so used the talents intrusted to him that they greatly increased. He is a good and faithful citizen who is worthy of the success he is sure to win.

The next time you see an attractive advertisement of a mail order house go to your local merchant and try to buy the article of him. IF HE HASN'T IT ASK HIM WHY. If he has it ask him why he never told you about it in your local paper.

That will be a boost for us. But we'll stand for it. And we'll boost back; remember that.

Do your share of the boosting and you'll get your share of the prosperity.

Entered at the postoffice at Thief River Falls, Minn., as second class matter.

The Minnesota Senate was brutally frank in its opposition to reapportionment. It opposed it simply because it was a reapportionment and a majority of the Senate did not desire reapportionment. It did not wish to be fair.

There is but little basis for the modified optimism expressed by Governor Eberhart. From legislators so absolutely selfish there is nothing to hope. There is not the slightest intimation from the majority of the Senate that any revised or improved plan of reapportionment would secure its approval. It is on record as opposed to the theory of reapportionment, as opposed to any plan and every plan which contemplates a fair and just representation of the different sections of the state. When an appeal to the sense of justice, with which every man is supposed to be endowed, falls upon unhearing ears, the case seems hopeless indeed.

The action of the Senate is a slap in the face of state honesty and a stunning setback to state progress and development.—St. Paul Dispatch.

The action of the State Senate in defeating reapportionment without giving a single valid reason is surely the shame of the state. Any district that upholds its representative when he deliberately violates his oath, and disregards the law, is unworthy of representation and demonstrates that it is of a class with which we do not care to have any connection. Never in the history of representative government by political parties, have party pledges been so flagrantly ignored, and for what?. That a few poltroons temporarily in office, may retain that office or rather the salary attached to it for two years more.

The cravens are afraid to go before their people, and after this disgrace they have brought upon themselves and their constituents let us hope for the credit of fair play that they have not bettered their chances. The people of Southern Minnesota are responsible for the outrage, and some day in the near future will be held strictly to account. The upper end will very shortly hold the balance of power. Both political parties were pledged to re-apportionment, but the democratic Senators voted solidly against it, and assisted by a sufficient number of so called republicans, but whom no decent self-respecting member of that party will acknowledge as such, succeeded in defeating the clearly expressed will of the people, simply to prevent being separated from the pay roll. Why did they not inform us of their poverty, and their needs? We are prosperous here.

The Minnesota senate has forfeited public confidence and fallen beneath public contempt. It seems pretty well satisfied with this position.

The Democrats are chuckling and the Republicans are in despair, but we do not see how either can call the other black. Both parties are solemnly pledged to reapportionment. Members of both took an oath to uphold the law. The question is no more partisan than robbing a bank and keeping the plunder by some technical trick. Men hang on to political power they have no right to and tell the plundered to go hang.

Three classes make up the vote against reapportionment, men whose districts posses lawlessly disproportionate power; men who would lose two years of a good political job by doing their sworn and pledged duty, and men whose seats were bought for them by the brewers and who must jump when the saloon whip cracks. The first class is almost respectable by comparison, the last is too degraded by its origin to fall much lower and the second is the biggest and most contemptible of all.

What will happen to the senate in the future depends upon the people; what may happen to it now seemed to depend upon the governor till his brief and bright dream of party leadership was so rudely shattered. It is on the knees of the gods.

It is becoming neither for the governor's confidants to make menaces in his name, nor for a public journal to advise him. It is a critical point in his career. The contemporary biography of Woodrow Wilson is easily accessible.—Minneapolis Tribune, March 18th.

Election Results.

The following officers were elected in the town of Mylaud, Marshall Co., Minn.

Johan Graf, Supervisor
Fred Solly, Clerk of Justice
Knut Rogne, Assessor,
Arne Blockstad, Treasurer.
Jan Samporrter, Constable.
Ole Vleet, Do.

Pennington County.

Pennington County is the youngest county in Minnesota, having been separated from Red Lake county by vote of the people in the general election last November. It was named in honor of President Edmund Pennington of the Soo Line because of the prominent part this railroad has played in the development of the city of Thief River Falls and the territory surrounding it. The agricultural lands in Pennington county are extremely fertile. Grain raising and dairying are carried on with equal success. Every village has its creamery and creameries are also found in many places in the country. They are co-operative and are managed almost exclusively by the farmers who are the chief stockholders.

During 1910, the Thief River Falls creamery paid to its patrons $60,000. The St. Hilaire creamery paid during the same year $80,000, while half a dozen others nearly equaled the excellent records of these two. This money, brought in from New York and other eastern cities, aids very materially in creating prosperity for the community. Wild and tame hay is plentiful. Timothy and clover grow luxuriantly. Fodder corn made into silage is used to supplement hay as feed for the dairy herd.

Twenty odd years ago Charles Gustafson began farming five miles from Thief River Falls with nothing but grit and good health to start. He soon realized the advantages of dairying, and by applying scientific methods in this business he has laid by a snug fortune and has also been the moving spirit in the promotion of dairying in this section of the state.

Peter Engelstad is another believer in the dairying industry who has done much to advance this branch of farming in Pennington county. By keeping a debit and credit account with each cow, Mr. Engelstad knows exactly the performance of every animal on his farm, and it is needless to add, that if they are weighed and found wanting they do not stay long on the Engelstad farm.

Wheat, oats and flax are excellent crops. Wheat is the choicest quality of No. 1 hard, and despite the long drouth last summer, many yields of twenty bushels to the acre were reported.

M. J. Berg, living four miles from Thief River Falls, seeded seventy acres to flax last spring. From this he threshed 880 bushels which brought $2 47 a bushel.

The price of land is cheap, considering the quality of the soil and its varied productiveness. Wild land can be bought as low as $10 per acre. Improved farms range from $20 to $60, depending upon improvements and distance from town.—Minneapolis Journal.

"Bill" Smiley Makes Good.

Friends of Wm. C. Smiley in this city and they are numerous, will be glad altho not a bit surprised to learn, that "Bill" has made for him a record, since his removal to the Capital City that is becoming and only deserving to a man of his intellect and capabilites. Mr. Smiley moved from this city some six years ago to enter the employment of the Great Northern in their offices at St. Paul, and has held down a position of great responsibility, and trust. While pursuing his usual labors with the Great Northern he enterd the night class of St. Paul Law School from which institution he graduated a couple of years ago. He is now at the head of an important department for a law publishing firm in that city.

Mr. Smiley was one of the old timers of this city and was at one time editor of the Thief River Press, and later, and up to the time of his removal from this city practiced his profession; that of civil engineer.

He was an ardent booster for the city and community and was a man whose services were always in demand in the business and social life of the town and thus has he taken up his work and made a record for himself in the social and industrial whirl of the Saintly City.

The Minneapolis Journal of recent date has the following to say in regard to a banquet at which Mr. Smiley was toastmaster, and his election to post of honor:

William C. Smiley was toastmaster at a banquet given by the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, at the Radisson hotel Wednesday evening. The following toasts were given: "Our Fraternity" George Wood; "The Potter Clay," Rev. George Lawton; "The Chapter," Carl T. Kiplinger; "The Congress," Professor Julius T. Frelin; "The duty of the Freshman," Ewart Heidel; and "Art for Art's Sake," Lac Stafford. Several impromptu toasts were given by other members. William C. Smiely of St. Paul is the newly elected chief for Province "3" of the fraternity, which includes the middle western states. The menu cards were of pale blue moire with gold letters, included the program of toasts.

Disposal of Red Lake Lands.

The following communication sent out by the department of the interior at Washington gives the requirements for entry on the lands to be opened on May 15th:

The act of Congress approved February 16, 1911 (public, No. 392), a copy of which is herewith inclosed, provides that the undisposed of lands in that part of the diminished Red Lake Reservation which was opened under the provisions of the act of February 20, 1904 (33 State 40), shall be subject to homestead entry.

The price of the lands is fixed at $4 per acre for all lands not heretofore entered, and for all lands embraced in canceled entries entered. The money is payable, one fifth at the time the entry is made, and the balance in five equal annual installments, due in one, two, three, four, and five years from the date of the entry, as provided in section 3 of said act of February 20, 1904. In addition to the foregoing and the usual homestead fees and commissions, entrymen will be required to pay the drainage charge of 3 cents per acre, as fixed in the act of May 20, 1908 (35 Stat. 169).

It is further provided that where entries for these lands have been or shall hereafter be canceled pursuant to contests, the contestant shall have a preference right to enter the land embraced in such canceled entry, as provided in the act of July 26, 1892 (27 Stat. 270). Pursuant thereto, you will give notice to persons who have procured the cancellation of an entry for the lands under consideration of his preference right of an enery within 30 days from notice, and upon his paying the fee required by law for giving such notice, you will permit him to enter the land. In the meantime, you will suspend all other applications for the land, as provided in rule 2 of the rules adopted September 15, 1910. (39 L. D., 17.

Entrymen for these lands will be required to comply with the terms and conditions of the homestead laws of the United States as modified by said act of February 20, 1904, and an entry is subject to cancellation for failure to do so, or for failure to make the annual payments promptly.

In view of the provisions of the act of February 16, 1911, office letter of October 18, 1909, instructing you to discontinue the allowance of homestead entries for these lands, and departmental letter of October 12, 1910, postponing the public sale of the undisposed of lands pending legislation, are hereby recalled, to take effect, as to settlement on the lands, on April 15, 1911, and as to the allowance of entries, on May 15, 1911. No rights will be gained by settling on the lands prior to April 15, 1911.

Commissioner.

30 Days Trial In Your Home

This Offer Is Evidence of the Confidence We Have in The FREE Sewing Machine

TERMS AS LOW AS $1 A WEEK

We want all our customers and ladies of this city to know that we are the exclusive agents of that phenomenal master piece of sewing machines. The FREE recently invented by Wm. C. Free of Chicago. We know it is the best machine, bar none, and it is your fortune to buy it on terms, as low as $1.00 a week. After a thorough investigation of all makes, we are willing to back The FREE with our unqualified endorsement. We believe that when you know what we know about sewing machines,

The FREE
Sewing Machine

will be your choice as it is ours.

And after talking it over we decided that the best way to enable you to find out its wonderful superiority would be not to advertise its low price; (if we did, you would be unable to believe that it is absolutely the best sewing machine in the market.) Instead we will offer you The FREE on 30 days Trial—we want you to put it in your home side by side with any other machine. We want you to test it out, try it on all sorts of material. Then, if you are not absolutely satisfied after 30 days that it is the best sewing machine you ever sewed on, and the biggest bargain you ever heard of at its very low price—we want you to return it and we will refund every cent you have deposited. You will not be out a penny

We want you to give The FREE this trial because we know that is the best way for you to learn——that while other machines with their square top heavy furniture are too ugly for the kitchen The FREE is beautiful enough for the parlor with its attractive French leg design and dust-less japanning.

—that while other machines run hard with no ball bearings or only 2 sets—The FREE runs as lightly as the wheel of a suspended bicycle with its 8 sets of Ball Bearings.

—that while other machines run slowly with noise and shaking on account of their long shuttles, or else are always getting out of order on account of their rotary shuttle. The FREE has a "Rotoscillo" movement which makes it faster than a round bobbin and simpler than a shuttle.

—that while other machines when broken by accident are ready for the scrap-heap—The FREE is insured for 5 years against any kind of accident.

—In short, that while other machines are full of annoyances, imperfections and worries—The FREE is perfect, absolutely perfect.

Come and see The FREE demonstrated tomorrow and let us send it home with you for a month's trial.

Walt. McAndress and wife came down from Highlanding last Sunday evening.

Dr. C. S. Weisner, of Grand Forks, N. D., was in the city over Sunday to look after some business interests. Dr. Weisner was a resident in this city years ago and this is his first visit since he left here. He was engaged in the real estate business in this city from '88 to '91, and at that time there was no railroad, and this city was nothing but a little frontier hamlet. He left here in '91 going to Chicago where he entered a medical college and later graduated as an eye specialist. He later located at Grand Forks to practice his profession, and, altho he has not practiced for a number of years he has been engaged in business in that city.

An Exchange says: You have heard the man who says "it doesn't pay to advertise" that nobody reads the newspaper", and so on. But let him be caught—hugging another man's wife, chasing a piece of calico up the street after dark, and if the printing office is in the garret of a twenty story building he will climb to the top to get the editor "not to put it in the newspaper where everybody will read it".

Crookston Times—Miss Cecilia Doherty, of the University of North Dakota, and Miss Elsie Robbecke, of Thief River Falls, came to the city Saturday and remained over Sunday as charming guests of Miss Millie Doherty. Last evening Miss Doherty entertained at dinner at the Grill, her guests including Misses Cecila Doherty and Elsie Robbecke, and Messrs. John Wallace and Richard Mills. Miss Robbecke returned to her home at Thief River Falls this morning, but Miss Doherty extended her visit until this afternoon, returning to Grand Forks on the five o'clock train.

Word was received from Winnipeg yesterday that Mrs. W. B. Bliven, of Pitt, who is in the hospital there, was in a very grave condition, and that fears were entertained for her recovery. Mrs. Bliven has been ill since shortly after the fire and about three weeks ago it was decided that an operation was the only hope of saving her life. Her weakened condition, however, made this exceedingly dangerous, and in a heroic effort to save her Mr. Blivens consented to give a quantity of his own blood, so that she could be made strong enough to stand the surgeon's knife. Consequently the arteries were opened on the arms of husband and wife, and two quarts of the life fluid were transferred from one to the other. Mrs. Bliven gained in strength immediately and the operation was commenced shortly afterward, but it had not gone very far when the doctors discerned that to proceed would mean instant death, and it was abandoned. The many friends of the family all express the hope that Mrs. Bliven will yet recover. Her husband was pretty weak for a time from the loss of blood, but is now recovering. —Rainy River Region (published at Baudette).

Uncle Sam has 2,000,000 Irish

Washington, March 18.—Two million in round numbers, is the approximate Irish-born population at present living in the United States. While these are not the official figures of the thirteenth census, it is a close estimate based upon the 1900 census and the immigration of Irish born immigrants during the ten years following. The tabulation of the figures of the 1910 census had not progressed far enough to permit the census to give the number of Irish in the country, and it may be three months before the statistics are ready.

There were exactly 1,619,449 Irish-born in the United States in 1900. They were located in every state of the Union. New York had the most, there being 425,553 in the Empire state

Immigration from Ireland for the past ten years has been uniformly steady averaging about 37,000 yearly.

At the national corn show held the latter part of January at Columbus O., the first prize of $1,000 for the best ten ears of corn exhibited was awarded to Roy Clore, a lad nineteen years old, of Franklin, Ind. It will be remembered that his father, L. B. Clore, won the championship prize in 1907 and 1908 and was barred from competing, but it is a fair assumption that the boy had some of the old gentleman's seed corn as well as the benefit of his many years of experience.

In serving as a judge of an exhibit of grains at a farmers' institute a short time since the writer weighed a sample of Swedish select oats that tested forty-two pounds to the bushel and two other samples of white oats that weighed forty pounds to the bushel each. Several samples of wheat examined showed a like plumpness and soundness of berry, which furnished proof that the heat moisture conditions for the maturing of the grain were as nearly ideal as could be.

In the mining of gold and silver at Leadville, Colo., for years past little attention has been paid to the thousands of tons of oxides or other metals which have been cast aside as worthless. Lately, however, it has been found that this waste contains a very large per cent of zinc oxide of a very high grade, while there are literally millions of tons of it untouched in the neighborhood. It is estimated that this newly realized source of wealth will bring to Leadville more revenue than was ever received for all her silver and gold.

To one who has made the rail trip across the Utah deserts it seems impossible that men from the more humid eastern states would have the hardihood to locate there and undertake dry farming, and yet this is exactly what is being done. As a result the big sheepmen who have herded their flocks on the mountains in the summer months and in the winter on the deserts, where they subsist on sagebrush and cactus, contend that this movement of settlers to the desert means the ultimate extinction of the grazing business as it has been known in years past.

Among the diseases which are known to be caused by microbes are tuberculosis, pneumonia, diphtheria, typhoid fever, lockjaw, blood poisoning, malaria, sleeping sickness, bubonic plague, cholera, dysentery and cerebro spinal meningitis. Other diseases not yet proved to be caused by germs, but believed by scientific men to be, are scarlet fever, measles, yellow fever, rabies and infantile paralysis. Of all these maladies several have been deprived of their former terror by the serum treatment, chief among them being diphtheria, for which the antitoxin treatment is now given with most gratifying results.

The suggestion by Secretary Ballinger in a recent public report that the nation's natural resources, including coal, mineral and oil lands and water power sites, ought to be placed under the control of the several states in which they happen to be located is interpreted by many thinking people to mean favoring a plan whereby corporations of one description and another can the more easily gobble on to the public domain and its resources. Past history in state management shows not only monumental carelessness and indifference in regulation, but under it such resources have been thrown into the hands of men who have been wantonly designing and corrupt. If the people of the country and their representatives at Washington are wise they will keep this wealth in the hands of the federal government and see that it is administered for the benefit of all.

The practice of covering strawberries and tender raspberries in latitudes where the winters are severe is common in many of the northern states. More rarely is the same plan followed in the case of fruit trees, such as the peach. One Colorado grower has followed this practice for years, and the results following such covering have been uniformly successful. From the time the trees are transplanted he root prunes so as to do away with a taproot as well as the roots extending in two opposite directions. When ready to cover, a trench running at right angles to the remaining roots is started about four feet from the trunk and dug toward it, being gradually deepened. The soil about the roots is then moistened by thorough irrigation, and a little later the trunk is carefully pushed over into the trench, the limbs bent down, covered with straw and a three inch layer of earth. The grower in question harvested last fall over $1,000 worth of peaches from 438 trees thus covered, while from a whole row not covered he picked just one peach.

Legs Cut Off by Street Car.

Losing his footing as he crossed the street railway tracks at Minneapolis, George H. Lauderdale, a prominent Mill City real estate man, was struck by a Como-Harriet car. Both legs were amputated below the knee and he received an injury to his head.

The Wicked Majority.

A new gardener had been employed on a Long Island estate. This man was raking leaves off the lawn one fall day when a neighbor, passing by, inquired of him, "Where's the gardener who used to work here?"

"Dead, sir," was the reply.

"Dead!" said the astonished neighbor. Then, musing, he added, "Joined the great majority, eh?"

"Oh, sir," the gardener interrupted in a shocked voice, "I wouldn't like to say that. He was a good enough man as far as I know."

Interesting News From Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

HIGHLY CULTURED GENTLEMAN

Prince Eugen, Brother of King of Sweden, Foremost Among That Country's Artists—Women of Norway Given Important Citizenship Rights—Seventy-five Thousand Persons Receiving Aid in Denmark.

SWEDEN.

His royal highness Prince Eugen of Sweden, the youngest brother of King Gustav V., is not only a highly cultured gentleman, passionately fond of art, but he is himself an artist whose talent has earned for him one of the foremost places among the Swedish painters of the present day. Those who are familiar with his country's art will realize that this is no mean praise. Prince Eugen, who has inherited the artistic instinct of the Bernadotte family—his father and his three uncles were all highly gifted in art, music or literature—studied painting in Paris. He has a charm of manner which at once sets people at their ease in his presence, though he is all the time a prince. After his sojourn in Paris Prince Eugen undertook several lengthy tours, always visiting places rich in art treasures where he could find subjects suitable for reproduction on his canvas. He is a fine landscapist, rendering with subtle appreciation the familiar beauty of Swedish scenery, as he finds it at his own door, so to speak. His royal highness does not sell his paintings as other royalists have done, but some of the finest examples of his work grace the walls of the Swedish art museums in Stockholm and Gothenburg and others he gives to members of the royal family or artist friends. At all exhibitions of Swedish art at home or abroad Prince Eugen is invariably invited to act as president and often consents to do so, his knowledge and taste are always to be relied on in all art matters and he is himself a frequent exhibitor. The prince has also done some excellent mural decoration work, including the royal foyers of the opera house and the Dramatic theater in Stockholm, as well as in several schools, it having become almost a custom in Sweden to entrust some leading painter with the artistic decorations of the principal school hall. It goes without saying that Prince Eugen does all this gratuitously. He works with earnestness and zeal which few could equal. His house at Waldemarsudde contains a wealth of art treasures and within its hospitable walls he often assembles the most famous of Swedish artists, several of whom are his close friends.

Queen Victoria left Stockholm Feb. 20 for Karlsruhe, via Berlin. She will remain at Karlsruhe for a couple of weeks and will then continue her journey to Southern Italy, where she will remain at least two months or more for the benefit of her health. The damp spring months in Stockholm always played havoc with her majesty's health and in order to avoid this she goes to Sunny Italy every spring.

The Bellman chorus, the famous old Stockholm singing organization, will celebrate its anniversary at Easter. The director of the chorus is Erik Akerberg, who has succeeded in bringing many triumphs for the organization. The chorus will give its fourteenth annual spring concert at Skansen May 1.

Harald Bildt, Sweden's charge de affaires in Buenos Ayres, Argentine, who has served as successor to the late Minister Gylden, is expected to arrive in Stockholm during the latter part of this week. He will remain in Stockholm for a month or more and will then return to his post.

Carl Lejdstrom, the popular Stockholm opera singer, has just completed a very successful concert tour in Germany. His signing was very artistic and he has made a name for himself in the Fatherland that any Swedish opera singer would be glad to emulate.

Erik Swensson, a cigar dealer, was the other ady arrested and sentenced to five months' imprisonment for selling licentious appearing view cards. They ought to arrest a few in some of our American cities.

Among the sovereigns of Europe who have accepted invitations to attend the fiftieth anniversary of a United Italy, which is to be celebrated in Rome this coming summer, is King Gustaf V. of Sweden.

The pastor of the English Episcopal church in Stockholm, Rev. B. Selwyn Smith, will arrive next September to assume charge of the so called English congregation at the Swedish capital.

The christening of the little Duke of Ostergotland took place March 3 in the Prince Carl's palace on Djurgarden. The officiating clergyman was Bishop Billing of Stockholm.

Miss Stina Quist and Madame Lilly Hellstrom have each donated 500 crowns to the Women's Journalist club of Stockholm.

NORWAY.

In addition to securing the municipal vote, the woman of Norway was also given other important citizenship rights. For instance, she could sit on juries; and even act as "foreman" of a jury. She could be appointed head of a taxation committee. As a municipal voter, city councilman, juryman and member of taxation committees, the Norwegian woman has acquitted herself creditably. Her municipal vote has done a great deal to minimize the drink curse in the country, for she has taken full advantage of the local option law and has driven the divekeepers out of business so far as it lay in her power to do so. The influence of the feminine municipal councilors has been exerted in the same direction, and also has proved instrumental in improving the sanitation of the cities and the hygienic conditions of the home. As jurymen the Norwegian women have been particularly severe in cases where a member of their sex has been maltreated or assaulted, in some case actually recommending such drastic punishment that no one ever can point to excessive emotionalism in the "weaker sex" as being a bar sinister to her giving an impartial hearing to a case in which she may be acting as a member of a jury. On taxation committees, too, the women of Norway have proved themselves to be capable and conscientious, performing their duties without fear or favor. Not long ago a case came up before the Norwegian courts in which a husband sought to upset his wife's official dictum. The man in question complained that he had been exorbitantly taxed by the taxation committee of which his own "better half" was the chairman. The presiding judge, after inquiring into the case, agreed with the husband and reduced the amount of the taxes which his wife's committee had inflicted upon him.

A recent number of Scandenaven gives the following brief report of the death of Missionary Skrefsurd, which comes by way of Christiana. The information was sent to Norway by Missionary Bodding, a co-laborer in the same field. Bodding had visited his home country during the past summer and returned to the mission field on the 16th of last November. One of the first ones to welcome him back was Brother Skrefsrud, who seemed to be in unusual good health and spirits. It was not until Dec. 9 that Skrefsrud showed any signs of indisposition. This was on Friday. On Saturday he was still around and attending to his usual work. On Sunday he was taken with a fever and soon became unconscious. At 7:45 p. m. of the same day, Dec. 11, he fell asleep. On the following day the remains were taken to the mission church where services were held and where Missionary Bodding preached the funeral sermon. He was buried by the side of his co-laborer Borresen, who assisted in the organization of the Santal mission. At the grave was sung one of the hymns which Skrefsrud had translated into the Santal language. It will be remembered that Missionary Skrefsrud made a visit to this country some years ago and the stirring addresses he made in those days in the interest of foreign missions will no doubt be recalled by many who heard him. He will always be remembered not only as a most faithful and devoted missionary, but also for his work in translating the Bible into the Santal language and in making a collection of the literature of that people.

The stockholders of the Norwegian-American Steamship company held their annual business meeting Feb. 15, in Christiania. Many changes have taken place in the organization during the few months in which it has been in existence. But those who attended the meeting were convinced that the venture will eventually be a paying one. Consul Hobe of St. Paul, the only American member of the board of directors, resigned because the laws of Norway prevent a foreign citizen from holding such a position.

Recent investigations have shown that there are 3,000,000 acres of bogs in Norway that can be drained and made tillable. This is about 250,000 acres more than the land under cultivation in the whole country. In the western part of the country some of the bogs are close to the sea. In Romsdal is a settlement that could support twice the present population by draining a marsh of 700 acres.

DENMARK.

The fire department of Copenhagen was called to a curious fire a few nights ago. From an electric light in a fashionable show window a particle of burning carbon had dropped down upon a fine cloak below. The garment burned briskly and the firemen were discussing the question of breaking the door or the expensive window while the cloak was consumed and before they came to any conclusion the fire died out without reaching any other inflammable goods.

There are about 75,000 persons in Denmark who are at present receiving aid from various charitable institutions. Most of these people are old people and a large number of them are the wives and children of workingmen, who have been without employment for a considerable time.

A Danish squadron will be sent to England on the occasion of the coronation of the king and queen of England.

CRIMINAL NEWS.

Two policemen were probably fatally injured, property valued at $150,000 was ruined and the entire city of Milwaukee was shaken when men supposed to be union ironworkers dynamited the steel coal hoist, just completed, at the yards of the Milwaukee Western Fuel company. There were two separate explosions, of such violence that windows in many parts of the West Side were broken. Policemen rushed to investigate and while they were near the wrecked crane a second explosion brought the iron work down about their heads.

Nine men were indicted by the federal grand jury at Washington charged with having defrauded the government out of 10,000 acres of Alaska coal lands valued at $10,000,000. The lands are in the Cook Inlet precinct.

V.—Where Is Your Talent?

Remember the case of the man who took his talent, wrapped it in a napkin and buried it?

Not only did his master punish him for his folly, but his conduct has become a byword.

The world has progressed since his time. Modern conditions have developed a kind of man who is even more useless than the one who buried his talent. HE IS THE MAN

WHO SENDS HIS MONEY OUT OF TOWN TO BUY FROM MAIL ORDER HOUSES.

The man who buried his talent at least had the talent to show for it. If he'd sent our money out of town to a mail order house he would have nothing [illegible] except [illegible].

[illegible] home in [illegible] faithful [illegible] that they [illegible]. He is a good and faithful citizen who is worthy of the success he is sure to win.

The next time you see an attractive advertisement of a mail order house go to your local merchant and try to buy the article of him. IF HE HASN'T IT ASK HIM WHY. If he has it ask him why he never told you about it in your local paper.

That will be a boost for us. But we'll stand for it. And we'll boost back [illegible] that.

Do your share of the boosting and you'll get your share of the prosperity.

LEGALLY HANGED

By CHARLES LEWIS PHIPPS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Which one of all your cases," I asked Wilcox, the celebrated criminal lawyer, "has most excited your interest?"

"That of Mathews, who was accused of murder."

"Was he innocent or guilty?"

"Innocent."

"Did you secure his acquittal?"

"No."

"Hanged?"

"Yes; legally hanged."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I'll tell you. Mathews was in the employ of Henderson, the man who was murdered. I don't care to go into the details of the case; I will only say that there was so much circumstantial evidence against him that from the first I despaired of saving his neck. I knew he was innocent, though he could no more explain the circumstances that pointed to his guilt than I could."

"How did you know he was innocent?"

"By both experience and intuition. I defy any of my clients to deceive me in this regard. I simply look them in the eye, and that tells me the story.

"There was everything about Mathews' case to interest me. He was a younger son of a British country gentleman and in love with the daughter of another British gentleman. His mother had no knowledge of his having been accused of crime, much less having been convicted; for I could do nothing to prove him innocent. He showed me his mother's letters, and it was distressing to read them. His betrothed was also writing him without any knowledge that he was under sentence of death. A week before he was to be hanged a letter from solicitors in England was handed him, informing him that a bachelor uncle had died and left him a large fortune."

"Upon my word! It was an interesting case, wasn't it?"

"I should say so. If ever there was a man who had everything to live for Mathews had. And to be judicially executed without ever having wronged any one in his life was simply awful. You have no idea how having a life on your hands wears on a man, and this case nearly drove me insane.

"But I braced myself for a gigantic effort. After conferring with Mathews I decided to cable the solicitors in England, giving them the situation and asking how much funds they could cable me within a few days. They placed £20,000 to my credit, and with this sum I went to work. There was no use in trying to secure delay or a new trial. What I must do was to interest the sheriff. I had a long secret conference with him, but could not move him to act for money, though I so far secured his judgment that he must do an official wrong in hanging Mathews that he consented to wink at any game I might practice, provided it could be kept secret.

"I got a friend of mine who was a professor in a medical college to apply for the body of Mathews as soon as he was dead. This enabled me to gain possession of the condemned man the moment the hanging was over. Then I 'fixed' every official who was to be present at the hanging. Mathews put in a request that there should be no spectators present. I could not even be present myself. But there was not one of the officials to whom I paid less than $10,000, and the hangman got $25,000. My friend the doctor was the only one present who got nothing. He had a coffin ready for the corpse as soon as it was taken from the gallows and a hearse to carry it to the hospital.

"Well, that night I went to the hospital and found Mathews locked in the doctor's room."

"But how was the hanging managed?"

"I don't know; I never asked. There were half a dozen men paid by the state to see that Mathews was hanged, and I paid every one of them—in all $100,000—to go through the process without hanging him. All I know is that I paid the money and found Mathews alive in the doctor's room. Some burnt cork, a woolly wig and a suit of clothes procured from a Jew tailor fixed him so that no one would know him. I had a steerage ticket for him in an outgoing steamer, and early the next morning he was on his way to England."

"He must have been very grateful to you."

"Grateful! I should say so. Before parting with me he made me promise that I would come over as soon as possible and see him. I couldn't go for a year, and then I found him in possession of £50,000 a year income and married to the woman he loved. He met me on the steamer, and the first thing he did was to impress it upon me that neither his mother nor his wife nor any one living except his [illegible] knows that he was judicially [illegible] in America. He had often tried to bring himself to unburden his secret to his wife, but had always failed.

"Mathews entertained me royally and begged me to suggest some way for him to pay the debt he owed me, even if it absorbed every cent of his fortune. I assured him that I took [illegible] comfort in his case than in all [illegible] I had ever won, though I had [illegible].

[illegible] with him [illegible]. He could hardly [illegible] and regretted [illegible] safe for him to [illegible] would cross the [illegible]. He shed tears when I came away."

A Great Battle Painter

How He Got His Start

By GERALD L. PERKINS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The battle of Gravelotte had been fought; a smoke mist still hung over the field, though in the gathering darkness it was gradually becoming imperceptible. A man carrying a portfolio and paraphernalia necessary to sketching left the field and, making his way to a hut on a hill overlooking the scene of the engagement that had occurred that day between the French and the Prussians, entered the hut and asked if he might have some supper.

"Certainly, monsieur," said a woman who was there, "but we can give you very little. The soldiers of both armies have taken all we have except a few bits that we hid in the cellar. Come, Fanchette, bestir yourself and set the table!"

The table was set and the supper put upon it. The stranger sat down, and Fanchette poured into his glass some of the cheap wine of the country. She was between seventeen and eighteen years old, a simple French maid who had no secrets from any one in the world.

"You wear a sad look, Fanchette," said the stranger. "Is it from seeing the slaughter today?"

"No, monsieur. I did not look that way."

"Well, then, tell me what troubles you."

"It is this, monsieur. Antoine Brisson went out among the fighting and received a wound. He is lying now in the next room."

"He is your brother?"

"No, monsieur."

"Well, then, he is your lover?"

To this the only reply was eyes cast upon the floor.

"What was he doing out there—fighting?"

"No, monsieur; he has not yet become a conscript. He will not be the age for a month."

"Well, then, what business had he on a battlefield?"

"Sketching!"

"Sketching? That's what I was doing there. When I have finished my supper I will go in and see him."

The stranger chatted on with the girl and easily gleaned from her that she and Antoine could not marry because she had no dot. After having supped and smoked a pipe the artist went into the room where Antoine was lying. The boy had received a flesh wound, but not of sufficient importance to endanger his life.

"So you were making sketches of the fight?" said the artist. "That is my business. I have been drawing for one of the Paris illustrated papers. Let me see what you have done."

Fanchette took an improvised portfolio that she had made for her lover of two pieces of pasteboard laced together with a string and brought it to the artist. There were blood stains on it, but he did not mind that. He had seen plenty of blood that day. He opened the portfolio, took out what there was in it—five or six sketches—and began to look them over.

"Where did you learn to sketch?" he asked the boy.

"I have never learned, monsieur," he replied.

"Never studied in an art school; never had any instruction?"

"No, monsieur."

The artist went on looking at the sketches one after the other and when he had seen them all looked at them again. Then he turned his eyes to the boy on the bed.

"Do you know, my boy, that my paper sent me here to make sketches of this battle? I have graduated at the art school with honors, and yet you who have never taken a lesson have done what I cannot do."

"What do you mean, monsieur?" asked the boy, his eyes opening very wide, while Fanchette was all attention.

"You are a born battle painter. You have put into these crude sketches an action that I have not been able to put in mine. And you have known what scenes to select. Your soldiers move; they fight; they are impelled by the demon of war; they die—really die, while mine—well, mine beside yours are like toy soldiers."

"Oh, monsieur," exclaimed Fanchette, clasping her hands, "how good you are to say that!"

"Good to say that! I'm not talking to please you. I'm telling you the truth. And, to prove what I say, if Antoine when he has recovered will come to Paris I am sure I can interest art lovers in him who will see that he receives instruction."

"Oh, monsieur," replied Fanchette, "how can he do that? He has no money. He would have to walk to Paris."

"Not at all! I will take these sketches with me. They will be used in one of the illustrated papers and will be well paid for. The money received for them I will send to Antoine."

The same night, having hired a conveyance, the artist set out posthaste for Paris. Antoine's sketches were produced and created a sensation. The money paid for them was sent him. He went to Paris, where owing to the interest created by his pictures he was taken up and educated by the paper that published them.

All this occurred fifty years ago, and the great battle painter has flourished and passed away. His widow loves to tell how he got his start.

CALLS FOR ANOTHER PROBE

Resolution to Investigate Former Insurance Commissioner.

John A. Hartigan of St. Paul, former insurance commissioner, may come under the fire of the state legislature. W. A. Campbell, house member from Minneapolis, introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the department of insurance since 1905. Mr. Campbell declares expenses of the department were greater than under the old fee system.

There will be no reorganization of the state department of public instruction by the present legislature. The house committee on education, after giving the Kunze bill for a state board of education several sharp kicks, sent it to a subcommittee "to devise decent means of burial," as one of the members expressed it.

Prohibition won a temporary triumph in the house. The question arose when the committee on temperance reported postponing indefinitely the A. V. Anderson bill calling for an amendment making possible statewide prohibition. Mr. Anderson objected and moved that the bill be printed and placed on general orders. The motion carried.

ADMITS WHIPPING THE BOYS

Red Wing Training School Superintendent Testifies.

Taking the witness stand in his own behalf F. A. Whittier, superintendent of the state training school for boys at Red Wing, against whom charges of cruelty have been preferred, told the legislative investigating committee that he believed baring boys' backs and flogging them with a leather strap—"spanking" he called it—was humane treatment, preferable to solitary confinement and preferable to shackling.

Mr. Whittier admitted the existence of a spanking device, or place, but said he had made no calculation of the percentage of boys in the school who had been whipped. He also admitted that a barrel recently had been used.

MISSING WOMEN REPORTED SAFE

No Lives Lost In Big Fire at Minneapolis.

There were no lives lost in the Syndicate block fire at Minneapolis, according to Fire Chief Ringer. Although Mrs. Mary Buck, proprietor of the Arion restaurant, and her maid, Miss Bertha Radons, were reported missing, Chief Ringer states positively that they were rescued.

"I took Mrs. Buck out myself," said the fire chief.

S. W. Thomas, watchman, was on the first floor when he heard an explosion. He ran to the second floor and, looking out, saw flames breaking through the walls over the Five and Ten-Cent store.

When the firemen arrived the basement and ground floor of the building was a mass of flames. About fifty persons were rescued within the first twenty minutes. There were many narrow escapes.

Fire Chief Ringer arrived soon after the first alarm and immediately turned in a general alarm. With practically the entire Mill City fire force fighting the flames the fire threatened to spread beyond control. As the flames gained headway and the entire retail district became in danger Chief Ringer called on the St. Paul department for aid.

The total loss is estimated at $915,000.

IS DRAWN ON NEW LINES

Insurance Fund for Employes Proposed by Minnesota Legislator.

An appropriation by the state of Minnesota of $300,000 as the nucleus for a gigantic indemnity fund and subsequent contributions from wages of employes and employers engaged in hazardous industries is proposed in a bill introduced in the senate by Swanson of Anoka county. The measure is intended as a substitute for the various workmen's compensation codes pending in the senate and house.

The Swanson bill incorporates many of the features of the original liability code drafted by the commission appointed at the last session of the legislature. Instead of designating every industry in which an accident occurs as "hazardous" it defines specific occupations and tells who shall be termed an "employer."

SAID TO BE ADULTERATED

Thousands of Pounds of Butter Seized at St. Paul.

W. H. Grimshaw, United States marshal, seized 11,500 pounds of butter, property of the Milton Dairy company of St. Paul, on the complaint of A. C. Houpt, United States district attorney.

It is claimed that the butter bore no mark as to its alleged adulteration. The butter was claimed to be made under such a process that it contains over 16 per cent water. In doing this the butter becomes subject of a special tax and a further tax of 10 cents per pound, besides being clearly marked to show that it has been adulterated.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred Twenty-one and 80-100 Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Martine Stordalen, single, Mortgagor, to Citizens State Bank of Thief River Falls (a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota) Mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of May 1906, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, on the 10th day of May 1906, at 11:30 o'clock A. THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS

A GRAND CONCERT

Concert Given by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra Was Grand Musical Treat.

Greeted by the Largest Audience Ever Assembled at the Auditorium.

The concert given by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra at the Auditorium Sunday night was the grandest musical event that has ever presented itself to the music loving public of this city and the northern part of the state, and the appreciation of this event was shown by the enormous attendance that greeted these artists at their concert.

The orchestra played at Winnipeg previously, where it likewise scored a decided triumph, playing to six capacity houses, and arrived on a special by way of Crookston Sunday evening at 6 o'clock and was accompanied by a large crowd from Crookston, Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire.

The orchestra on this tour is composed of about 57 members, the pick of 75 artists, which represents the orchestra in their home city, and has gained the reputation as one of the very best in America. It is a matter of much pride that this city was one of the fortunates to entertain this large organization, and it is gratifying that the receipts at this concert were within a few dollars of $1,000, the largest audience that has ever thronged this spacious opera house.

A special train was also run over the G. N. from Beaudette, arriving in this city at 4:10 in the afternoon, and this furnished an excellent opportunity for outsiders to attend this concert, who otherwise could not have availed themselves of this opportunity, and brought a big crowd to this city.

The following program, which speaks for its own excellence, was rendered:

PROGRAM.

1 Overture—William Tell.....Rossini
2 Bass Solo: Prologue to "Pagliacci" .....Leoncavallo

Services in the local church next Sunday morning at 10.30 and immediately following the services the quarterly meeting of the congregation will be held. And since among other things the call, which the pastor has received from Frazee, is to be discussed a fine attendance is desired.

Lenten services next Thursday evening April 6th at 8:45.

Services in Excel Sunday afternoon at 3.30.

Band Rehearsal Tonight.

There will be practice by the Concert Band at the old city clerk's office in the City Hall building tonight. Prof. Houle urgently requests that every member be present promptly at 8:00 o'clock.

Made Big Land Deal.

G. A. Benson, a prosperous and enterprising farmer of Marion, S. D., was in the city last week and made some extensive land deals while here. He purchased three fine farms northeast of this city from Oscar A Trytten, of Reynolds, N. D., and expects to move up here with his family in the near future and go into farming on a large scale. Mr. Benson is enthusiastic over his investments here and states that a lot of people are ignorant of the chances they are passing up when they can secure as valuable land for farming and dairying purposes at such a little expense as they can in this vicinity, and says that if the opportunities here were more extensively advertised, this country would see a great influx of eager land seekers.

The Telephone Bill.

Last week's issue of the "Press" contained an article to the effect that there was a bill before the legislature that would cure all our telephone troubles, and that representative O'Neil was in favor of it, while the Mayor and certain members of the City Council were in St. Paul lobbying against it, and therefore working against the interest of the city.

This paper holds no brief for the mayor or city council, and being public officials, their official actions are a proper subject of criticism, but we hold that criticism should be based on facts, and not on unsupported statements of interested parties. To say that the Tri State Telephone company, or any other company for that matter, is pushing a bill to the advantage of this city is rather fishy, and may be taken with a large measure of salt. On the other hand to say that the mayor, and city council are giving time and energy, to defeat a bill beneficial to the city is untruthful and ridiculous. The present mayor is completing his fourth year in that position, and while we may differ from him as men do differ on public matters, no one can say but he has worked hard and faithfully, at the sacrifice of time and money, to advance the best interests of the city as he saw it.

The same is equally true of the members of the council, and personal matters should not be permitted to interfere with a just and fair view of their public acts.

No city in the state owes more to the business ability and patriotism of the gentlemen who have sat on its council than does this. The statement that Mr. O'Neil favors this bill is untrue. He does not, and it will be defeated as not being in the interest of the public.

The insinuation that the visit of the manager of the Northwestern Telephone Co. had anything to do with the action of the city authorities is unfair, as there is not a single fact given in support of it. An insinuation is a dirty thing at the best.

To Give a Concert.

The popular Swedish actress and singer, Hilda Hellstrom Gagnoe, of Stockholm, Sweden, the great interpreter of Swedish folk songs and ditties, will give an entertainment assisted by Miss Eva Ashworth, pianist and Mr. Angar Myhre, baritone, at the Presbyterian church Monday, April 3, at 8.15 p. m. She will also, assisted by Mr. Myhre, give a scene from the great Swedish musical folk play, "Vermlandingarne." The entertainment will be given under the auspices of the Brage Chorus for the benefit of the Sangerfest fund. Tickets at Bjerkhoel's Drug Store. 50 and 35 cents; children, 25.

TO START SAWING SOON

Thief River Falls Lumber Co's Mill To Start Operations Soon.

Mill Undergoing the Usual Repairs for An Early Start.

As soon as the ice goes out of the river, which, judging from the present weather indications, will be earlier than usual, the local saw mill of the Thief River Falls Lumber company will soon begin the sawing season. The company has purchased a supply of white pine logs near Bemidji and these will be run in over the Soo to this city and will probably be the first logs to be cut this spring. They will be dumped into the mill pond above the mill and the spring drives from the Red Lakes will arrive later in the season. Vast quantities of timber belonging to the Indians stand about these lakes and most of the forests where this timber is found are matured. The trees will gain little more in size and the danger of fire is ever present during the summer season.

Germantown.

(Too late for last week.)

To the News:—

In apology for your correspondents journalistic inactivity during the winter we venture the explanation, that just for a change instead of remaining idle for the sake of observing and telling what others did, we could not resist the temptation, at least for a while to try our hand at doing and await results.

Meanwhile it appears that no one has taken pains to tell about our decdevs misdeeds perhaps not even noticed and now with the advent of spring, bringing with it to every tiller of the soil-real or imaginary the probability of even greater physical exertion or more strenuous work we are glad to turn the leaf over, leaving others to do the deeds while we tell how they were done and how they could have been done better.

As a summary of events since our last correspondence from Germantown, it may be said that all who were inhabitants of our shores are here now and have lived through the interim seemingly, at peace with each other and the rest of mankind, and have during the time grown just that much older. Prospects for the future are as good as they were for the past and there is peace, plenty and contentment on every fist—or hand rather.

The snow is practically all thawed off the ground, leaving but very little water. Plowed fields are about as dry as they need to be for seeding operations and all things indicate a spring season as early as any on record in these parts.

The annual stockholders meeting of the Germantown Co-operative Co. was held in their place of business March 8th and officers for the ensuing year were elected in this wise:—

President, John Philipp; Secretary, N. Bundhund; Treasurer, Jay Payne, who together with Oscar Rambeck and George Wold constitute the board of directors. This meeting marks the close of one year's successful business and we trust the beginning of another still more so.

Quite a bit of talk has been going on lately about the erection of a farmers telephone for Germantown which it is to be hoped will result in the building of a line next fall, which will be as early as poles can be procured.

The two floating dredges that have been anchored in the Germantown ditch over winter have been equipped with new boilers of larger capacity than the old ones and there will perhaps be necessity for another years extension of time for the completion of the job. At any rate we do not know but what it is a better guarantee for its speedy completion than the original contract with the county board combined.

Carl Elseth, proprietor of the town's leading blacksmithing and repairing establishment, in anticipation of an unusually busy summer, and with his usual alertness and ever ready eye for business, has designed and built a contraption by which he can run a sledge hammer with one foot while he is busying the rest of himself with other hammers and tools. Just another step toward the concentration and application of all one's energies to his trade.

The old Jensen farm, five miles northeast of here was sold last month; Consideration $1,500.

Jay Payne recently bought the Dommer farm 2 miles north west of here, the purchase price, we are told, being $2,800. Mr. Payne intends to move onto the place the coming summer and we are pleased to welcome the new neighbors.

Town election came off on schedule time March 14 and about the customary number of votes were polled. The following were the successful candidates: Supervisor, T. C. Hovelson; Clerk, O. A. Rambec; Treasurer, Martin Hovelson; Assessor, John Ristau; Justices, O. A. Rambec, Nick Bunchund; Constable, Chas. Cook; Road overseers, Theo. Evenby, Dist. 1; Emil Ristau, Dist. 3; J. H. Roller, Dist. 4. There was a more or less determined opposition for about every office and with the exception of Supervisor and Overseer in Dist. 14, the old officers were re-elected.

The doors of the creamery will swing open again Apr. 15, after which date cream in large or small amounts will be welcomed. Mr. Warner of the town of [illegible] has been secured as buttermaker for the season's run.

John C. Johnson, the well known Clover Leaf thresher left some time ago for Crookston, where he is employed by a firm of machinery dealers on the road selling machinery. Polk county farmers, we are sure, will not be handicapped by any lack of machinery in the future.

Rev. K. Bjorgo of Redwing, foreman of the Minnesota district of the Norwegian Lutheran Synod conducted services in the Local Lutheran church last Wednesday, after which he proceeded to Grygla for a visit to the various congregations in that country.

Arne Overby returned last week from the Grygla country where he has been employed by the N. W. Drainage Co. hauling coal, wood etc.

On account of a few cases of measles school was closed for a couple of days last week.

Will Jones and Henry Paulson commenced well-drilling Monday at T. Hegtvedt's where they left off before Christmas on account of cold weather.

Reno Boe of Terrace, Minn., arrived last week and has settled on a homestead in what has been known as the swamp north of here. We mention this only as a sample, for as a new settler in that region he, like the American dollar, is only "e pluribus unum". Claim shanties out that way are springing up like the toadstools in a night and it is a question of only a short time when there will not be an acre left available as homestead land.

Deals in real estate are also becoming every day occurences, but we are not informed as to details of them all, and even if we were they would be too numerous to mention.

School will be closed Fri. and Mon. next during a brief absence of the faculty.

Martin Olson returned last Wednesday from the Leech Lake region, where he had been employed in the woods since New Year's.

Contract for carrying the mail between Thief River Falls and Germantown for the next four years was secured by J. Deshamp, Peter Maney will remain in charge of the Germantown Grygla route another term.

The Town fathers met Tuesday for the purpose of levying the road taxes for the year and to decide on other matters.

Will Come Back.

Anthony Darnaker, who recently disposed of his personal property on his farm near Highlanding left last Friday evening with his family for Dermott, Traverse County, this state, where they will make their home for some time to come. Mr. Darnaker is loath to leave his homestead in this county but considers it necessary to move to a place where there is an easier access to school facilities for his children, but assures his many friends that after a stated period he will return to this country and settle on his homestead again.

"RED ACRE FARM"

Is the Class Play to be Presented by the High School Seniors.

The Play Will Be Given at the Auditorium Tomorrow Night.

"Red Acre Farm" is the name of the play to be presented by the High School Seniors at the Auditorium tomorrow night. This play portrays the life in the New England states and, with its amusing situations and quaint characters, will prove a most interesting entertainment.

This play is given for the purpose of raising funds with which to meet the graduation expenses and to purchase a class memorial for the Lincoln High School and will undoubtedly, and should, be greeted by a packed house.

The following is a synopsis of the play and the cast of characters:

SYNOPSIS OF PLAY.

Act I. Living room of Armstrong's home. Red Acre Farm heavily mortgaged. Owners decide to pay off mortgage with heirloom, pearl necklace Laura steals it and sells it to Tom Busby, a traveling merchant. Father accuses Nellie, who has ambition to become an actress, and drives her from home.

Act II. Laura, Nellie's sister, about to elope with Harry Harcourt, when Nellie with husband returns to play an engagement in the town. They persuade Laura to remain home. Josiah Armstrong still relentless and again drives Nellie away. Jonah and Junior, two country bumpkins in love with each other cause Col. Strutt to fall in a well. Because they help him out he must agree to their marriage. Laura elopes with Harry.

Act III. Armstrongs alone and worrying about mortgage. Party come to surprise them. Colonel as Santa Claus. He distinguishes himself as the biggest living liar. Squire forecloses mortgage and drives Armstrongs out. Children return and Laura confesses to former theft. Necklace returned and becomes wedding present. Steenerson's Letter.

March, 18, 1911

Thief River Falls News,
Thief River Falls,
Minnesota.

Gentlemen.

For the information of the settlers on lands in the Eleven Towns, I have the honor to advise you that the time in which to make payments and final proof on All Leach land expires on March [illegible] 1912.

Hoping you will give the publicity of this matter special attention, I remain,

Yours very truly,
H. Steenerson.

Notaries Should Be Careful.

Moorhead News, That notaries public cannot be too careful in taking the acknowledgement of persons they do not know, is evidenced by the E. D. Bell case at Fergus Falls. Bell came to Fergus Falls last winter and represented himself to be a real estate dealer. He announced that he had purchased a certain piece of land and later succeeded in making a sale of it.

He then produced a deed from the owner to himself, collected the money deeded the property to the owner and disappeared. Later the deed to Bell was discovered to be a forgery. The forged instruments were duly acknowledged before W. G. Mahon, a notary public at Fargo. Bell had impersonated the owner and had persuaded Mahon to take the acknowledgement.

The attorneys for the innocent purchaser are now preparing to bring suit against Mr. Mahon for $925, the amount paid to Bell. They have investigated the case carefully and believe that the notary public is liable for the entire amount paid to Bell. This experience should warn all notaries not to take acknowledgements of strangers to important papers, unless they are vouched for by some reliable person.

Likes The West.

In a letter from Lawrence Smith, received last Tuesday, he states that the Smith family had arrived safely at Sunnyside, Wash., their future home and that they were comfortably situated in their new quarters. He states that enroute they stopped about a week or ten days in Spokane, Wash., and comments on the extreme beauty of that city and its surroundings, and had the pleasure of meeting quite a number of Thief Riverites at that place.

Sunnyside is a place of about 1,500 inhabitants and is situated in the beautiful North Yakima Valley and is called the Rose City of the state of Washington.

Co-operative Stores To Have Distributing Point.

The officers and managers of the many co-operative stores in the northwestern section of the state held a meeting here last Wednesday to discuss matters pertaining to the establishment of a distributing station in this city for all the stores in this section. This business would be in the nature of a wholesale house and would job the goods required for the local stores. The co-operative sentiment is strong in this territory and the farmers are establishing co-operative creameries and stores all over the upper part of the state.

County Dads Meet.

The county commissioners held a lengthy session Friday and Saturday of last week, and considerable routine business was disposed of. A number of applications for free grass seed, furnished by the state, were acted on, and it was decided to advertise for bids for the remodeling of the court house. The board will next meet at Red Lake Falls, April 20th in joint session with the commissioners of Red Lake County, and make a division of the property and funds of the old county.

Thief River Elevator.

At a meeting held here last week a farmers' co-operative elevator company was organized and about $10,000 stock subscribed. An elevator will be erected immediately. The following officers were elected: President, Theodore Rycstad; vice president, P. L. Dahl; treasurer, P. Estvad; secretary, A. Nordby. This is but one of many co-operative organizations which the farmers of this section have completed and officered themselves with their own material.

Goes To Mahnomen.

John Theis, who has been foreman of the Soo round house here for a year past has been transferred to Bismark, N. D., where he has a similar position. He left Monday for Bismark. Mr. Theis has been popular with the railroad boys and townspeople and his going away will be generally regretted. He will be succeeded here by Mr. Emmerson, who comes from Thief River Falls.—Mahnomen Pioneer.

ABOUT THE STATE

News of Especial Interest to Minnesota Readers.

HOUSE CENSURES MEMBER

Representative Klemer Reprimanded for His Recent Attack on Speaker Dunn.

The members of the state house of representatives spent another day in a spectacular row over the Klemer incident. Mr. Klemer, during a speech some days ago, stated that the committees of the house are "packed in the interest of the special interests."

During the course of the proceedings Mr. Klemer apologized for his unparliamentary remarks; the house voted to censure him; he asked that his resolution calling for the appointment of a committee to investigate his charges be reported to the house; the members voted to require him to appear before the bar of the house and state his charges then and there; he appeared and stated that he was not prepared to make a definite statement; the house then voted to excuse him.

His request for the appointment of an investigating committee went over under notice of debate. The net result of the day's work was that, aside from fireworks, not much was accomplished except to demonstrate that sentiment among the members is strongly with the speaker and against the notion that there is any foundation for the allegation that the committees are packed.

The resolution of censure was adopted by a vote of 66 to 42.

One employers' liability bill has been disposed of. The house indefinitely postponed the Gillette measure on that subject. The judiciary committee returned the bill with an unfavorable recommendation and the report was adopted without comment.

DECISION IN ABOUT A WEEK

Evidence in Minnesota Training School Inquiry All In.

Declaring that he had proved the charges he brought against the boys' training school at Red Wing, A. D. Stephens of Crookston told the joint legislative committee that he had finished his case.

After Mr. Stephens had finished Superintendent Whittier made an address of thirty minutes, reading most of the time from a manuscript.

When the testimony was all in the committee adjourned to meet again at the call of the chairman. It probably will be a week before a decision will be rendered.

KILLS JOHNSON MEMORIAL

Senate Committee Defeats Bill for Statue for Late Governor.

The senate finance committee killed Senator Benson's bill providing $20,000 for a statue of the late Governor Johnson over his grave at St. Peter.

Thomas Kneeland's bill calling for a constitutional convention was favorably acted upon by the house in committee of the whole.

SHERIFF IS EXONERATED

Coroner's Jury Justifies Official Who Killed Fugitive.

The coroner's jury empanelled at Fairmont to inquire into the death of William Edson, who was shot by Sheriff E. E. Ward while attempting to escape from arrest, brought in a verdict exonerating the sheriff and commending him for his action.

Charge of Larceny Falls.

Adolph E. Gerndt, former night watchman at the Shubert theater at St. Paul, walked out of the Ramsey county court a free man. The state failed to prove he had anything to do with the $3,392 robbery of the Shubert safe on the night of Jan. 2 last and Judge Orr directed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty. Larceny in the first degree was the charge in the indictment.

Former Adjutant General Dead.

Captain H. Muehlberg, seventy-eight years of age, is dead at Carver after a long illness following a stroke of paralysis. He was captain of Company D of the Fifth Minnesota and was adjutant general during the governorships of Senators Clapp and Nelson. Three daughters and two sons survive him. He was one of the pioneers of the state.

Kills Self When Wife Dies.

J. H. Meyers, a boilermaker employed at the Rock Island roundhouse at Albert Lea, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor near his residence when he was told his wife, who was ill, could not live. His wife died about the same time in the house.

Dies on Way to Fire.

Frank Pearson, a Minneapolis fireman, the hero of the Peck wall disaster in December, 1905, when at the risk of his own life he saved several others, died at his post of heart failure, succumbing on the hose wagon while the horses were dashing to a fire.

CASH ROAD TAX IS KILLED

Minnesota Senate Votes Down Bill Abolishing Labor Option.

The senate killed the Peterson house bill requiring payment of road taxes in cash and abolishing the highway labor taxes in towns and the office of overseer of highways and providing for the appointment of an inspector of highways.

The senate spent another afternoon discussing the statewide primary bill, amended it so that its friends hardly recognized it and then ordered it reprinted as amended and placed it on the calendar to be voted on.

Apology, inclusive and complete, was made to the speaker of the house of representatives by F. L. Klemer. Mr. Klemer is the member from Rice county who electrified the house and started things by casually remarking that the house committees had been packed in favor of the special interests.

ST. PAUL ITALIANS IN DUEL

Two Taken to Hospital in Serious Condition.

A pistol and knife duel took place at St. Paul between a number of Italians. Gito Guancostoro and another man were wounded. One was shot in the neck and the other was stabbed close to the heart and cut about the shoulders. The injured men are at the city hospital.

Nic Nitti and another Italian, who declines to give his name, are under arrest. Nitti had a revolver with five empty cartridges in it when the police got him. It is said at the hospital that neither of the wounded men will die.

FORM MINNESOTA SOCIETY FOR PEACE

Prominent Men Address Gathering at St. Paul.

The Minnesota State Peace society was organized at the old capitol at St. Paul for the purpose of a popular campaign of education to develop a strong public sentiment in favor of world peace, the settlement of disputes by arbitration or judicial process and the establishment of a simple, effective agency through which the people of Minnesota at any time can voice their sentiments in favor of peace.

Governor Eberhart presided at the mass meeting. Those who addressed the gathering were the governor, Louis Betz, Edward L. Hunt of New York, who is promoting the peace movement; Dr. Cyrus Northrop, Professor George W. Davis, J. A. O. Preuss, F. C. Hoffman, J. W. Olsen and Rabbi Rypins. All expressed in eloquent terms their ideas of amenity and concord among nations. A constitution was drafted, which eliminates the scheme of annual dues. Several hundred persons became charter members of the organization.

The following officers were elected: Honorary president, Governor Eberhart; active president, Cyrus Northrop; vice presidents, Archbishop Ireland and Mrs. C. G. Higbee; secretaries, J. S. McLain and Miss Ella Patterson.
